THE OLD GOSPEL AND THE NEW THEOLOGY.

By Rev. Naphtali Luccock, D.D.

The last victory for the Christian faith has not yet been won. Some royal battles are just ahead and some are now on. We are to contend, in our generation, for "the faith once for all delivered unto the saints" as earnestly as ever the battle was pushed in all the past. A century ago our fathers were in hot debate over the question, "Whether Christ died for all or only for the elect." Now the question is pressed—whether Christ died for any, or ever lived or died at all. A French philosopher has written a book on "The Non-religion of the Future." He depicts a world from which the idea of God, of worship, and of a future life has quite disappeared. In certain influential circles in Germany there is little more than an official belief in religion. Haeckel's denial of God, of the soul, and of immortality is widely accepted by cultured classes at the top of society, and by rabid socialists at the bottom. President Eliot, of Harvard University, speaking of the "Religion of the Future," declares that in it "there will be no identification of any human being, however festive in character, with the eternal Deity; the new religion will not be bound to any dogma, old, book, or institution." Christ and the Bible are peacefully carved out from authoritative position in the leadership of human thought and life.

The story of civilization hardly supplies a parallel to the immense influx of new ideas and expulsions, characteristic of the present era. A number of men live and work with little thought of the hereafter. Professor William James divides mankind into the "tender" and the "tough," the idealist and the materialist. If one is radical enough, the hurly-burly of the sensible facts of nature, the whirl of business, the excitements of political and social life will seem to be quite enough for him. A writer in the Fortnightly Review, for instance, declares that the questions of religion, the being of God and the immortality of the soul have not the faintest interest for him. This materialistic and militant temper rises in revolt against religion and theology. Theology, we are told, is rapidly disappearing from the modern world, its place being taken by sociology. It would be more accurate to say that theology is hearing legitimate fruit in sociology. If sociology be divorced from theology, it will soon wither like a cut flower.

A Brief for Theology.

This is to be said for theology: It is the foundation for the true social order. One of the first statements of the Declaration of Independence is a theological one. The inalienable rights of humanity, "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," are recognized as gifts of God, to whose maintenance he is committed. The support of civil government is not any material or visible thing, but a firm grip upon spiritual realities. Theology is the background of life. The stakes in a vineyard do not produce grapes; but they hold up the vine to the sunlight, rain, and atmosphere of heaven, and sustain the purple clusters. A well articulated skeleton is essential to the strength, beauty, and very life of the body.

It is the fashion of these days to rail at creeds. But what is a creed? A creed is simply clear mental processes carried through to a conclusion properly formulated to anchor faith and regulate action. The physician makes his diagnosis—creed—of the disease before he gives a dose of medicine; upon the accuracy of his creed the life or death of his patient may depend. The lawyer analyzes and organizes the facts—formulates his creed—of the case before he goes into court; upon his creed, his interpretation of the facts and the law, the case is won or lost.

Clear thinking must always precede wise and successful action. In fact, the theologians have been among the most helpful leaders of the race; they have been true pilots, holding the vessel to the right course through the night; or, to change the figure, they have been alert switchmen, keeping the train of thought and belief, at critical times, on the main lines of truth and progress. The world owes quite as much to Athanasius as to Columbus, to Luther as to Watts, to Wesley as to Franklin.

Progress in Theology.

Progress in theology means a clearer perception of truth and a more discriminating application of it to living issues. It implies the drawing out of the potentialities of truth and their timely emphasis. No science in modern times has made greater progress than that of chemistry. Yet there has been no change whatever in the character and relation of its atoms and fundamental forces. False theories are discovered as the truth is more accurately and more distinctly apprehended. When Dalton discovered the "law of multiple proportions" and formulated the atomic hypothesis, he reorganized the science of chemistry. Progress in other sciences has moved along a similar pathway, and theology has been no exception. Newton's discovery of the law of gravitation reorganized the science of astronomy. The discovery of America by Columbus reorganized the science of geography. Luther's apprehension of the truth of justification by faith reorganized theology in the sixteenth century. Wesley's apprehension and emphasis of the witness of the Spirit reorganized theology in the eighteenth century. Methodism was, for a time, in popular apprehension, a new theology, not from any vagaries of doctrine, but by reason of a clear apprehension of truth potentially present in the gospel all the time.

The New Theology.

The new theology is an attempt to apprehend more distinctly and to state more logically the truths of our religion; to make them more intelligible and attractive to the modern mind; to rescue a distressed faith by interpreting theological conceptions in the terms of a present-day philosophy. Whether this will prove to be a fresh impulse along the main line of progress or an open switch that threatens to wreck the train remains to be seen. Its chief apostle, Mr. R. J. Campbell, like Harnack, inherited rare spiritual susceptibility, and is exceptionally gifted with speculative power. Principal Fairhair is reported as saying that no one at Oxford in his day surpassed Mr. Campbell in dialectic skill. There lies his danger. Mere intellectual analysis can never give the entire content of spiritual truth. Its appeal is to the whole man. As one of the early fathers remarked, "the intellect is often Satan's seat," for in the cloister we frequently get but a partial and distorted view of the truth. Certain minds, observed Bacon, have the poetic sensibility that observes resemblances, but lack the philosophic power that observes differences. It is more than possible that Mr. Campbell belongs in this class. Carlyle's remark concerning Dean Stanley is also pertinent: "There is a lovely character who is holding holes in the bottom of the old ship of Zion and does not know it." At all events the New Theology, as Mr. Campbell expounds it, seems but a broken cistern which he would vainly substitute for the fountain of life. This will doubtless be fully apparent after certain crucial tests.

God.

The apostles of the New Theology attempt to conceive of God in terms of the intellect. They claim to bring him back into his own world. "How," asks Mr. Campbell, "can there be anything in the universe outside of God? Remember that the real God is the God expressed in the universe and in yourself. To all eternity God is what he is and never can be other; but it will take him all eternity to live out all that he is. In order to manifest even to himself the possibilities of his being, God must limit that being. Thus we get two modes of God—the infinite, perfect, unconditional, primordial being, and the finite, imperfect, unconditioned, and limited being, of which we are ourselves expressions."

In this language Mr. Campbell clearly teaches that the activities of the human soul are the activities of the limited self of God. To use his own figure: "The selfhood of the individual is to the selfhood of God as the bay is to the all-comprehending ocean. This pathetic little pool of personality thinks of itself as separate from the far-spreading ocean of divine personality. But this is a simple delusion."

Now this gives us some queer results. John Smith is not a separate and independent personality as we have supposed, but is an integral part of God, as the atom is an integral part of the mountain. John Smith is simply God limited, and, even in his sinning, is the manifestation of the activity of God. Great as the shock may be to our moral sense, there is no escape from the implication of the avowed principles.

Sin.

The fundamental principle in the New Theology is that there is but one thing in the universe—that is mind, or spirit, or God. Clearly that monistic principle tends to obliterate all distinctions, even vital ones. If there be but one thing in the universe and that is God, then everything in the last analysis, is of God. If there be but one cause in the universe, there can be no radical distinction between God and evil. Sin disappears. "Sin," Mr. Campbell tells us, "is the attempt to minister to self at the expense of that which is outside of self. It lives by death to others, or seeks to do so." In a word sin is selfishness.

There is a measure of truth in this, but not the whole truth. Unselfishness is the fruit and manifestation of a righteous character; but not the full measure of moral obligation. Professor Clifford endeavored to derive conscience from a perception of one's tribal relations. From a recognition of the things which made for the welfare of the tribe or otherwise, he contended, arose conscience in the individual and a sense of duty. The New Theology, from a perception of what makes for the good of the whole, would derive the sense of sin. But the range is far too narrow and misses the vital thing in sin. Kant tells us, in an immortal sentence, that there is nothing strictly bad but a bad will. Mr. Campbell reluctantly confesses, "In strict logic I find no place for the freedom of the will." This means, of course, that he finds no logical place for sin. Mistakes, errors, blunders there may be without the freedom of the will; sin, however, only emerges when the will goes against whatever of law or light or love is known. Hear the witnesses: Paul declares, "I had not known sin except by the law;" James affirms, "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, it is sin;" John says, "Sin is the transgression of the law."

The truth is, man is everlastingly akin to God, yet everlastingly other than God, and our otherness from God is an immediate fact of our experience. The consciousness of sin comes to us from a far more immediate source than the story in Genesis or the logic of Paul. It asserts itself in consciousness and does not have to be proved at all. Among the primal facts of consciousness, fixed as deep and firmly as that of personality, are the facts of freedom, of responsibility, of sin; no logic can overthrow them, no dialectic acids can dissolve them, no speculative mists can long obscure them.

Attainment.

The New Theology teaches, according to Mr. Campbell, that every man is a potential Christ; that he may come to the very level upon which Christ himself stood. "Everything," he tells us, "that is said about the love of Christ can be said about the love of any one whom Jesus came to call to God. Every man who is doing anything that is worth doing at all for humanity is manifesting the truth, whether he knows it or not. His work is the expression of the redemptive force which is gathering men together. He is a part of the atonement."

But, surely, Christianity as a religion absolutely depends upon the unique character of its Founder. If Christ is merely man, and is only divine in the sense, in which each one of us is divine, then he stands upon the same level as Plato, Confucius, or Mohammed, or any other religious teacher. The doctrine of divine immanence can be so construed as to utterly destroy the foundations of faith and hope. The subtle element we call ether is immanent in every particle of matter, including those which constitute our own bodies; but it does not follow that we are ether. So the presence of God is immanent through the whole creation; but it does not follow that the whole creation, or we, as part of it, are God.

The New Theology is Buddhism with a Western accent. To surrender faith in the reality and worth of individual consciousness, in the divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and his unique relation to the Father and to the human race, is to make the whole life a dissolving view. The soul has no place to stand and nothing to hope for. Such a faith is little better, if any, than bald, cheerless agnosticism.

George Elliot once said of the great realities that brace one in the way of high endeavor—God, immortality, duty—"the first is inconceivable, the second is unbelievable, the third is peremptory." But duty without relation to God and immortality is like a cable detached at both ends; it has no regulating or staying power. Only a firm and unshaken grip of spiritual certainties can give buoyancy and strength to life. These certainties shine out on the face of Scripture as distinctly as the unfading stars in the sky. The plain teaching of the New Testament, "the faith once delivered unto the saints," is that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, who is the propitiation for our sins and who is alive forever more." The supreme fact of time and history is the sacrifice of Christ upon Calvary, "the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God." "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." "If any man preach any other gospel than this with the cross at the center—let him be anathema." "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit; after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ."—Western Christian Advocate.

MR. CARNEGIE'S TRUST DEED.

(The following is the full text of the informal trust deed which Mr. Carnegie read to the trustees of his $10,000,000 peace donation in Washington, D. C., on December 14, 1910):

"Gentlemen—I have transferred to you as trustees of the Carnegie Peace Fund ten million of five per cent. first mortgage bonds, value $11,500,000, the revenue of which is to be administered by you to hasten the abolition of international war, the foulest blot upon our civilization.

"Although we no longer eat our fellow men, nor torture prisoners, nor sack cities, killing their inhabitants, we still kill each other in war like barbarians. Only wild beasts are excusable for doing that in this twentieth century of the Christian era, for the crime of war is inherent, since it decides not in favor of the right, but always of the strong.

"The nation is criminal which refuses arbitration and drives its adversary to a tribunal which knows nothing of righteous judgment.

"I believe the shortest and easiest path of peace lies in adopting President Taft's platform, who said in his address before the Peace and Arbitration Society, New York, March 22, 1910:

Favors Taft Platform.

"I have noticed exceptions—in our arbitration treaties as to reference of questions of national honor to courts of arbitration. Personally I do not see any more reason why matters of national honor should not be referred to a court of arbitration than matters of property or of national proprietorship. I know that is going farther than most men are willing to go, but I do not see why questions of honor may not be submitted to a tribunal composed of men of honor who understand questions of national honor to abide by their decisions, as well as any other questions of difference arising between nations."

"I venture to quote from my address as president of the Peace Congress in New York, 1907:

"Honor is the most dishonored word in our language. No man ever touched another man's honor; no nation ever dishonored another nation; all honor wounds are self-inflicted."

"At the opening of the International Bureau of American Republics, at Washington, April 26, 1910, President Taft said:

"We twenty-one republics cannot afford to have any two or any three of us quarrel. We must stop this, and Mr. Carnegie and I will not be satisfied until nineteen of us can intervene by proper measures to suppress a quarrel between any other two."

Follow President's Ideas.

"I hope the trustees will begin by pressing forward upon this line, testing it thoroughly and doubting not.

"The judge who presides over a cause, in which he is interested dies in infamy if discovered. The citizen who constitutes himself a judge in his own cause as against his fellow-citizen and presumes to attack him, is a law-breaker, and as such disgraced. So should a nation be held disgraced which insists upon sitting in judgment in its own cause in case of an international dispute.

"I call your attention to the following resolution introduced by the Committee on Foreign Relations in the first session, Fiftyeth Congress, June 14, 1888:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the President be, and is hereby, requested to invite, from time to time, as fit occasions may arise, negotiations with any government with which the United States has or may have diplomatic relations, to the end that any differences or disputes arising between the two governments, which cannot be adjusted by diplomatic agency, may be referred to arbitration and be peaceably adjusted by such means. (Resolution not reached on calendar during session, but reintroduced and passed Senate on February 14, 1890. Passed House April 3, 1890.)"

"This resolution was presented to the British Parliament, which adopted a resolution approving the action of the Congress of the United States, and expressing the hope that her majesty's government would lend their ready co-operation to the government of the United States for the accomplishment of the object in view. (Resolution of the House of Commons, July 16, 1893 for rel. 1893, 346,352.)"

Use Arbitration Methods.

"Here we find an expression of spirit which resulted in the first international Hague conference of 1899, the second Hague conference of 1907 and eighty treaties of obligatory arbitration between the great nations of the world, our own country being a party to twenty-three of them.

"It was my privilege to introduce to President Cleveland in 1897 a committee of members of Parliament of Britain, headed by Sir William Randall Cromer, in response to the action of Congress proposing a treaty agreeing to settle all disputes that might arise between America and Great Britain by arbitration. Such a treaty was concluded by Lord Pauncefoot and Secretary Olney in 1897. It failed on passage by the necessary two-thirds majority of the Senate by only three votes.

"There is reason to believe the British government has not been desirous of having that treaty ratified by our government or ready to agree to another of similar character, so that President Taft's policy seems within easy reach of success. If the English-speaking race adopts such a treaty we shall not have to wait long for other nations to join, and as it will be noticed that the resolution of Congress in 1890 embraces any government with which the United States has or may have diplomatic relations, all nations seem still open to the invitation he is requested to give, there being no limitations as to time.

"If the independence and rights of nations to their respective international policies were first formally recognized in such treaties, no dispute concerning these elements of sovereignty could arise.

Corporation With Powers.

"The trustees have power to sell, invest or reinvest all funds, either in the United States or in other countries, subject as respects investments in the United States to no more restriction than is imposed upon savings banks or insurance companies in the State of New York.

"In order to give effect to this it will be suitable that the trustees herein named shall form a corporation with lawful powers appropriate to the accomplishment of the purposes herein expressed and authorize the conveyance of the fund to such a corporation.

"No personal liability will attach to trustees for their action nor non-action as trustees. They have power to fill vacancies or to add to their number, and to employ all officials and to fix their compensation. Trustees shall be reimbursed for all expenses incurred in connection with their duties as trustees, including traveling expenses, attending meetings, including expenses of wife or daughter to each annual meeting. The president shall be granted such honoraries as the trustees think proper and as he can be prevailed upon to accept.

"Lines of future action cannot be wisely laid down. Many may have to be tried, and having full confidence in my trustees, I leave to them the widest discretion as to the measures and policy they shall from time to time adopt, only promising that the one end they shall keep unceasingly in view until it is attained is the speedy abolition of international war between so-called civilized nations.

No Definite Outline.

"When civilized nations enter into such treaties as named, or war is discarded as disgraceful to civilized men, as personal war (duelling), and man selling and buying (slavery) have been discarded within the wide boundaries of our English-speaking race, the trustees will please then consider what is the next most degrading remaining evil or evils whose banishment, or what new elevating element or elements if introduced or fostered, or both combined, what most will advance the progress, elevation and happiness of man, and from century to century without end, my trustees of each age shall determine how they can best aid man in the upward march to higher and higher stages of development unceasingly; for now we know that as a law of his being man was created with the desire and capacity for improvement, to which, perchance, there may be no limit short of perfection even here in this life upon earth."

"Let my trustees, therefore, ask themselves from time to time, from age to age, how they can best help man in his glorious ascent onward and upward, and to this end devote the fund.

"Thanking you for your cordial acceptance of the trust, and your hearty approval of its object, I am very gratefully yours,

"ANDREW CARNEGIE."

TO ALL PASTORS

In the Patronizing Conferences of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Board of Directors of the "Sunday League of America" desire you to read carefully the statements below:

This League has been in our Discipline for a number of years by the side of the "American Bible Society"—the two interdenominational organizations we jointly own with the other leading Protestant faiths. Our General Conference has repeatedly commended the work of the Sunday League of America. The last General Conference by unanimous vote took the following action:

"From the Report No. 4 of the Committee on Temperance and other Moral and Social Questions:

"First—That never before has humanity so much needed to devote one day in seven to rest and communion with God in these days of absorption in material affairs, preoccupation with the multiplied sources of worldly enjoyment and social unrest; and, at the same time, never has the temptation to obliterate the Lord's Day been so great.

"Second—That we therefore appreciate and commend the faithful effort of the Sunday League of America to secure in sentiment, in law, and in customs the proper observance of this day throughout our great nation.

"Third—That we render our endorsement of the League, and commend its purpose, plan and representatives to the cordial co-operation of all our people.

"Fourth—That we note the proposition to erect an administrative building in the city of Fort Worth, Texas, partly in the memory of the lamented Bishop Duncan's service in behalf of the Sabbath, and the request that our Church raise the sum of $5,000 for the same; and we respectfully ask all our pastors and people to give it such support as their liberal consideration may suggest."

The directors of this organization appreciate this action. We are seeking to make this a permanent incorporation. To do so we must have property. Therefore we are raising this year a fund of $50,000 for an international headquarters. Twenty years and more we have paid house rent for our General Manager and office rent, and sometimes storage for our literature and belongings. In this building will be set apart a suite of rooms for our General Manager and his family, for an office, and rooms for storage. The rest of the building will be rented for good purposes.

With the opening of next year our work will extend from Alaska to Patagonia, from the West Indies to the Philippines; hence we are planting this headquarters at the logical center of this territory, and from it our work is to radiate in all directions. This money is being raised from all the co-operating denominations. The General Conference seemed to feel that one-tenth of this amount would be more than the share of the M. E. Church, South. After the action of the General Conference above quoted, the question arose: "How shall we get the money?" The committee appointed to look after it felt at first that it could be raised quietly by appeals to the wealthy men of the Church. We had had some success already in this way with other denominations: for instance, in reply to our appeal $300 came in from a member of the M. E. Church in Chicago, and $300 from another of the same Church in the same city. Five hundred came from another M. E. man in St. Louis, and $100 each from members of the same Church in various States as far East as New Hampshire. Two Presbyterians contributed $500 each. One Christian Scientist, $500. The largest thus far from a Baptist brother is $300; the largest from a Congregationalist, $200, and from an Episcopalian, $150. But not one dollar came from one of the rich men of the M. E. Church, South, in response to the same appeal. We have found, however, that these brethren will contribute when appealed to at the close of the sermon. Two have given $25 each, several $12, $10 and $5. But it would take too long for an agent to go around and hunt them all up; so, we have given up the idea of raising this money from the rich alone.

Next we appealed to the pastors in the better appointments, asking them to raise it. From nearly a thousand letters, we received ten kindly replies, enclosing $10 each. If this would keep up steady, we could get in the $5,000 in about fifty years. So our Committee wants to stir all pastors to the situation. Surely you want the M. E. Church, South, to do her share in this work.

Since this headquarters is to be put in our territory, the people of the North feel that they ought not to do it all. Now, we have a plan which, if you pastors will take hold of, will bring results, and at once. Please consider.

First, make January 8th, Sunday League Day; on that morning, let every pastor preach on this subject. No matter what the situation, it will not hurt to give a genuine deliverance on the Sabbath question.

Second, tell of the work of the Sunday League of America these many years.

Third, read the action of the General Conference cited above.

Fourth, state that the Sunday League of America belongs to our Church as much as does the American Bible Society.

Fifth, that the Sunday League of America has never before in all the years asked our Church for a general collection or assessment.

Sixth, now it does solicit our help to establish itself on a property basis, so it may live into the centuries, and do work from Alaska to Patagonia and from the West Indies to the Philippines.

Seventh, it wants the money now, and expects Southern Methodism to take its interests at once into her heart.

Eighth, explain that every person who gives $10 or more will have his name put on the list that will hang in Memorial Hall.

Ninth, that every church which contributes $10 or more will have its name and that of its pastor placed on the same list.

Tenth, that all smaller amounts will be credited to the respective Conferences so that every penny contributed by our Church will appear in permanent form on this Memorial.

Eleventh, don't be afraid to take a good collection, for if more than $5,000 should be raised, we will return the surplus. All we want is the sum suggested by the General Conference.

Twelfth, don't apologize to your people for doing this, but tell them that they ought to esteem it a great privilege to take part in this work.

Thirteenth, send in results of your effort, with check, to Sunday League of America, Fort Worth, Texas, by January 10th, if possible. There are many reasons for this request.

First, whatever the M. E. Church, South, pays in by January 15th will be duplicated from another source. Don't you want to help to "provoke others unto good works?"

Second, our General Manager begins a Northern tour on January 20th, and we want him to be able to say that the M. E. Church, South, has redeemed the promise of the General Conference. It will have a fine effect.

Brothers, it is within your power to do this, and to do it in one grand effort, and to say to all the country that our Church is not to be considered slow or indifferent in this great work and at this important time.

THE COMMITTEE.

MEETING OF THE BISHOPS.

On Wednesday, December 21, the College of Bishops met in Nashville to consider whether the Chancery Court should be asked to modify the injunction granted in the Vanderbilt University suit, permitting the Board of Trust to sell a portion of the campus to Peabody College for Teachers. There were present Bishops A. W. Wilson, E. E. Hoss, W. A. Candler, James Atkins, Collins Denny, R. G. Waterhouse, W. R. Lambuth, W. B. Murrain, E. D. Mouzon, and J. H. McCoy. Their decision in this matter is announced in the following statement, which is signed by Bishop Collins Denny, Secretary:

"The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held in 1906, the supreme legislative body of the Church, appointed a commission of eminent lawyers to consider some questions touching the Vanderbilt University, and to define the charter rights of the College of Bishops. The Bishops were instructed to act according to the rights thus ascertained and defined.

"The Commission unanimously decided that the Bishops were common law visitors of the university. In addition, the General Conference of 1910 charged the Bishops with the responsibility of protecting the rights of the Church in the Vanderbilt University, even should it be necessary to invoke the aid of the court to accomplish this end. To secure on some mooted points a decision that could be enforced, an appeal to the courts unfortunately became necessary.

"In turning to the courts for this authoritative answer to important questions, the College of Bishops was but meeting a plain obligation imposed by the Church.

"Acting on what purported to be authentic information, the only information then accessible, that the rights of the Church were imperiled, the College of Bishops, on Oct. 25, 1910, asked and secured from the Chancery Court an injunction against the sale, transfer, or exchange of a portion of the Vanderbilt campus, and for certain other things.

"After filing the bill and applying for the injunction, the College of Bishops was informed that in order to carry out some plans which involved and depended upon a sale of a part of the Vanderbilt campus and a purchase of the Peabody campus in South Nashville, two donations, each of $150,000, one from Mr. William K. Vanderbilt, the other from the General Education Board, had been promised, and that these gifts might be imperiled by the continuance of that part of the injunction preventing this sale.

"In order to give the fullest consideration to the situation, the College of Bishops met in Nashville on December 21, 1910, and requested that all papers in the case be presented. The original letters containing the terms of the gift, and also the original deeds of sale and purchase, were then for the first time laid before the Bishops.

"A consideration of these letters and deeds showed that no conditions detrimental to the rights of the Church in the Vanderbilt University were attached to these gifts, and being advised by counsel that, without detriment to these rights, the College of Bishops could consent to the contemplated sale of a portion of the campus, it was resolved to ask the court to so modify the injunction as to allow the sale and purchase of land to be consummated; but this is not in any way to prejudice the rights of the Church in any other matter.

"The Bishops present were unanimously of the opinion that in this transaction the University was not receiving the value of the portion of the campus disposed of, and was paying for the Peabody campus an excessive price.

"By direction of the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

COLLINS DENNY, Secretary.

With this agreement on the part of the Bishops the sale or exchange of properties between the two institutions can be consummated, and the University will receive in the near future three hundred thousand dollars. The General Education Board had offered one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, provided the amount should be duplicated by the friends of Vanderbilt University. Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt had agreed to give this amount, provided the transfer of properties of the two institutions could be effected. The way is open, therefore, for Vanderbilt University to receive this donation of three hundred thousand dollars.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

WHAT IS BEST FOR THE BOYS?

By Rev. W. D. Wendel.

The boy problem is hard to solve. Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down. It is always a burning question at home. Sometimes, like a skyrocket, it explodes within the august presence of an Annual Conference.

Many things are said right then and there, pro and con. In debates it is very easy for the younger men of the Conference to consider the older men too conservative and to try and run roughshod over them. This, of course, is not right, and rarely ever occurs. The younger men should hold their "fathers in Israel" in utmost veneration, and never call in question their motives. No sincere man does this. On the other hand, it is very easy for the older men of a Conference to make the mistake of considering the younger men who may disagree with them sometimes too rash. "You will cut your eye teeth after awhile." "I have been all along the road, and you haven't." I make these quotations in the kindest spirit. Such objections have been hurled in the face of a weak but aggressive minority in all of the walks of life during all the centuries. Many times that weak minority has become a strong majority, and a better state of affairs has prevailed because of the use of wiser methods. Your humble scribe is inclined to love the old paths that our fathers trod, but there are some new macadamized roads with automobiles on them now.

It is not begging the question to say, "We will make the best of the situation before us—take the world as we find it, and not as we wish it was." "The Gospel for an Age of Doubt," and its sequel, "The Gospel for a World of Sin," by Dr. Van Dyke, have been widely circulated, and have done much good in this new world where we are all workers together with Christ who came to save the three-fold man. Regulation is the order of the day now. It is the method by which statesmen propose to solve and are solving the great problems of government in all of its departments. Nor is God being ignored—left out of account.

Neither is sin condoned. An iniquitous institution should be given no quarter. It should be destroyed as soon as possible. That which is not an evil itself, but has in it potentialities for good if properly regulated, should not be forbidden though there might be some "giants of Anak" around about. The "giants of Anak" have been dead, however, for a good while. Their ghosts are with us. The productions of brain and heart of the people who routed those monsters of old and possessed their land, are with us still. They are our richest inheritance to-day.

Our heavenly Father has given us a great deal of latitude and the world is not wholly bad. It is getting better every day. There may come periods of spiritual lethargy, as in the past, but each succeeding wave of spiritual revival and moral reformation lifts humanity to a higher plane than ever before in all of its history.

Let not the people about us, old or young, get the idea that we are seeking to coerce them into our way of thinking. If we will lay upon their consciences the solemn duty, and call to their attention the gracious privilege of living the best possible life for God and humanity, in the majority of cases the minor details of life will take care of themselves. If not, we are not to blame. The "don't" of the old dispensation is being supplanted by the "do" of the new dispensation. This always results in the "he" character. Let us exercise the greatest caution and patience in our dealings with our fellow-men, commending their good qualities and kindly seeking to inspire them to obey the calls of duty from any quarter. We can always hold up before them in our own lives and actions the loftiest standard. A still hunt for boys by means of a kind and gentle personal evangelism is the need of the day. You can't break brush or rustle leaves when hunting deer. The boys about us are boys just as we were in the "long ago." We forget sometimes that we ran and jumped, climbed the highest trees (fell out, once, twice—and are alive), swam the creeks and rivers for miles around. Some of us were drowned, but we came to our senses again. With all of our trials and temptations, misfortunes, possible, probable and actual, we are still alive and see each other's faces for a few days each succeeding year.

It is a well-known fact that the elder brethren of the two Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, situated within the good State of Mississippi, under the leadership of as gallant and chivalrous a leader as ever led an army to battle, drove from our midst the most diabolical institution that ever blighted our fair land. May the good work go on all over the world. But in regard to things not evil in themselves, let us adopt the methods of the wise men in the various walks of life. Jesus said on one occasion, "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

Let us instill into our youth around our fireside a consuming love for Christ and an intense hatred for sin. Let us call mourners at home—teaching our children to study the Bible and to pray out loud before us in the family altar. Let us teach them the Bible and pray before them daily ourselves, and all will be well with our boys and girls at home and abroad. There is no class of men who have a warmer place in the heart of this writer than the Methodist preachers of the North Mississippi Conference. Oh, that the way were open for the sons and daughters—all of them—of these noble servants of God to take the full course of instruction in our most worthy educational institutions—Millsaps and Grenada Colleges.

With such men as we by our own authority, with the co-operation of wide-awake and consecrated trustees, have put in charge of these institutions, we can trust the issues of the future.

I hope to live to see a thousand students at Millsaps—and perhaps as many at Grenada. If God wills my only child—a noble son—shall be one among that thousand within a decade.

Church News

The Methodists of Chicago are seeking to capture the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church for that city. It will convene in May, 1912.

The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, is authority for the statement that "eighty-five per cent. of all religious organizations in the United States use English only in their services."

Dr. Robert Stuart MacArthur, of New York, and Dr. Mullins, of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., have been suggested for the presidency of the Baptist World Alliance, which is to meet in Philadelphia this year.

The progress of Christianity in Korea within the past two and a half decades has been phenomenal. Twenty-five years ago there were within its boundaries only seven professing Christians; to-day the number is estimated at 200,000.

The membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church is rapidly increasing in foreign lands. During the last ten years it has grown from 176,743 to 324,583, a gain of 147,840. The largest growth was in India, where the increase was 62,743.

Bishop and Mrs. J. C. Kilgo have lately been visiting in Florida, where the former has been looking after the interests of the Church. The Bishop dedicated the Hyde Park Church in Tampa, which is said to be a handsome structure, a short time since.

The Young Men's Christian Association of India held its Triennial Convention at Bombay from December 28, 1910, to January 1, 1911. Bishop W. F. McDowell, who is one of the really strong men of American Methodism, had an important place on the program.

The Alabama Christian Advocate is seeking to carry forward a campaign for 1,000 new subscribers in the great county of Jefferson (in which Birmingham is situated), and for 5,000 in the State. We trust that the movement will eventuate in success, and that the incoming year will bring large prosperity to our worthy contemporary.

Mr. George Edgar Vincent, Professor of Sociology in the University of Chicago, and a son of Bishop John H. Vincent of the M. E. Church, has been elected President of the University of Minnesota, and will enter upon the duties of his new office on April 1. He is said to be both a scholar and administrator of distinguished ability.

From a recent issue of the Central Methodist Advocate, of Louisville, Ky., we take the following: "The Louisiana Conference has invited the next General Conference of our Church to meet in New Orleans, and a strong committee has been appointed to present the matter to the proper authorities. There seems to be good reason to accept the invitation of the Crescent City." Thank you, Doctor Mann.

The First Baptist Church of Baltimore has recently celebrated with appropriate ceremonies its one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary. The exercises were participated in by distinguished speakers from both the North and South. During its long history this Church has had only seven pastors, and when any one of these had to retire on account of age, a support has been provided for him.

Dr. H. A. Brown, of North Carolina, a Baptist, in a recent letter to the Christian Index, the organ of the Baptists of Georgia, comments as follows upon the manner in which a Conference of Methodist preachers receive their assignments to their various fields of labor at the hands of a Bishop: "It is hard to imagine the intense anxiety that dwells in the bosoms of Methodist preachers just before the appointments are 'read out.' But it is wonderful how gladly they accept their appointments as having come from God, and go their way notwithstanding some of the changes involve considerable financial loss and increased labor and sacrifice." This is a generous, but not undeserved, tribute.

The Methodists of the Old Dominion are quite anxious to have Bishop Collins Denny reside among them. The city mentioned as the most suitable dwelling-place for him by the Virginians is Richmond. The Times-Dispatch of that city thus comments upon the possibility of having the Bishop become one of their citizens: "If it shall be the decision of Bishop Collins Denny, of the Methodist Church, to remain in Richmond, Va., as a resident, he is assured in advance of a hearty welcome. A Virginian by birth, an alumnus of the University of Virginia, it would be most fitting if he should remain here. A true scholar, a real ecclesiastical statesman, a man of varied and valuable experience, he would be an acquisition to this city whose worth could not easily be measured."

A consent decree was handed down in chancery court yesterday allowing the exchange of campus land between the George Peabody College for Teachers of Vanderbilt University, in the case of State of Tennessee ex rel. A. W. Wilson et al. against the Board of Trust of the University. For a consideration of $125,000, Vanderbilt University is "permitted to consummate with the George Peabody College for Teachers the exchange or sale to George Peabody College for Teachers of 13.93 acres of land on both sides of Garland avenue in Nashville. The decree also allows Vanderbilt University "to purchase from the George Peabody College for Teachers for the consideration of $158,820, certain property in South Nashville" "containing 15.40 acres." The latter property is bounded on the north by Middleton avenue, on the east by University street, on the south by Lindsley avenue and on the west by Second avenue, North. It is agreed that the modification of the order of Oct. 25, 1910, shall in nowise prejudice the complainants in this cause as to any other matters or things embraced in this bill. From the Nashville Tennessean, of December 30th.

At the close of the year a printed report was issued by the congregation of Rayne Memorial Church, of this city, showing the progress of its work during the past quadrennium under the pastorate of Dr. John A. Rice, lately transferred to Fort Worth, Texas. From this leaflet we quote the following: "There were three hundred and sixty-five members that could be located at the beginning of the quadrennium, two hundred and seventy-nine have been received, and there are now four hundred and seventy-eight, a net solid gain of 32.3 per cent. This, however, does not at all, even remotely, suggest the real substantial gain in the life and power of the church along all lines and at every point of its activity. This church has taken a deep interest in all the work of our denomination in the city. The coming forward of the laymen this year promises great things for the work of the future. The growth in missionary spirit is shown by our undertaking the support of our own missionary in Japan, Mr. James S. Oxford. The Church House conducted near the Lane Mills has touched probably a thousand people, giving unobtrusively the message of Methodism to the Great Outside."

Andrew Carnegie has given $1,250,000 for a "Carnegie foundation for life savers" in Germany. The fund is in the hands of the Emperor, who, as its patron, has appointed a commission of twelve to administer it. The president of the Commission is Rudolph Von Valentini, chief of his Majesty's Civil Cabinet, and his associates include the American Ambassador. This is the fourth "Hero Fund" set apart by Mr. Carnegie, the others being that of the United States, which includes Canada and Newfoundland, that of Great Britain which was established in 1908, and that of France in 1909. In all, Mr. Carnegie has now set apart for this purpose $8,500,000.

Two of the world's foremost aviators were killed on Saturday, December 31: Archie Hoxsey, who was flying in a Wright biplane, at Los Angeles, and John B. Moisant, who was operating a Bleriot Monoplane, at Harahan, ten miles north of New Orleans. The former held the record of having ascended higher into the air than any other aerial navigator, and the latter was the first man to cross the English Channel in an airship carrying a passenger, and won a $10,000 trophy by a spectacular flight around the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor last fall. According to the figures contained in some of the secular papers, there have been 35 deaths in the development of aviation. Of this number 30 are said to have occurred during the present year; 4 during 1909, and 1 in 1908.

Andrew Carnegie's gift of $10,000,000 for the furtherance of international peace brings the total of his benefactions to something like $180,000,000. The following is a list of his largest known benefactions: Libraries, $53,000,000; educational foundation, $15,000,000; Pittsburgh Institute, $16,000,000; Washington Institute, $12,000,000; Peace foundation, $10,000,000; Scotch universities, $10,000,000; Hero fund, $5,000,000; Carnegie Steel Company employees, $5,000,000; Dunfermline endowment, $5,000,000; Polytechnic School, Pittsburgh, $2,000,000; Peace Temple at The Hague, $1,750,000; Allied Engineers' Societies, $1,500,000; Bureau American Republics, $750,000; small colleges in United States, $20,000,000; miscellaneous in United States (estimated), $20,000,000; miscellaneous in Europe (estimated), $2,500,000; total, $179,500,000. Mr. Carnegie's latest endowment widens the gap between him and John D. Rockefeller, who alone rivals the retired steel master in his public benefactions. A conservative estimate places Mr. Rockefeller's gifts to institutions at $120,000,000. All but a small part of this was for educational purposes.

The Home Circle

SARAH COOPER'S NEW YEAR CALL.

Little Sarah Coopcar finished her morning's work as speedily as possible, and exchanged her clean, white apron for one of clean white lawn. She took pains to select her very best one, with the knitted trimming four inches deep. Four-inch knitted trimming on one's white apron was luxury enough for the big house across the street.

"I wonder if Cynthia Broadstreet will put on hers to 'receive' in," she thought, whimsically. Sarah Cooper was a humor-loving little person, and enjoyed her own little witticisms when there was no one else to enjoy them. The notion of stately Mrs. J. Henry Broadstreet receiving New Year's calls in a white apron, no matter how "deep" its knitted edging, was worth smiling over.

"Still, Cynthia used to be simple-minded enough, even after she married J. Henry Broadstreet—John Henry he was then, plain John Henry. But I guess it turned both o' their heads getting so well off. I guess it's liable to. Probably it would turn mine and Pliny's. I guess it would Pliny: it would not be safe for us to get rich!"

She looked around the bare little room, involuntarily noting all the patched places in the carpet and the crafty make-shifts of poverty. Perhaps, after all, it would not be necessary to mention it to Pliny.

Then she drew up the corners of her pleasant mouth again, and went back to her appointed task of watching for Cynthia Broadstreet's callers. They would be coming along any time now; by and by there would be a little stream of them—inflowing and outflowing. And some would come in carriages—old Dr. Truro, and young Horace Dalrymple, and the man that hired Pliny.

"He might call here," laughed the little woman, gently. "It would only be showing proper respect to Pliny's wife!—and I have my best apron all on! Hi, hum! I wonder how it would feel to 'receive' a New Year's call? I'm going to shut my eyes and make believe."

Sarah Cooper—when she had been little Sally Munn, and from "there on"—had been addicted to making believe. Pliny said it was her besetting sin, but he didn't mean it. In Pliny Cooper's eyes, Sally had no sins.

She had made believe her dolls were alive, and her bits of broken china were gold-rimmed plates and cups. She had made believe she had been to college, and could read and speak eleven languages. She had made believe Pliny handsome, and learned, and rich. She had always made believe, like a little child, and enjoyed herself doing it. The sweetest, the most sacred thing she had ever made believe was a little white-spread cradle, and a little head denting the pillow.

"I'm just putting on my best bombazine," she smiled, dreamily. "Cynthia's been over—Mrs. J. Henry Broadstreet, I mean, and asked me to come across and receive with her. 'I need you,' she says, 'you're just the one I want.' Now I'm receiving! Now I'm shaking hands with the man that hires Pliny. 'A happy New Year, madam!' he says, and 'The same to you!' I says. There's a lot more coming in the door."

"The room is getting pretty crowded. Why, here comes Pliny, in a swallow-tail coat, to call on me!" That woke the dreamer up. Her eyes flew open, and she began to laugh softly to herself.

"I can't make believe that!" she cried. "I guess that's a good place to stop at." And she went back to her watching at the window. Several men were going into the great front door of the big house; probably she had missed some while she day-dreamed; and served her right! But she settled down now to the watching, determined to miss no more.

Pliny Cooper was poor. There was no making believe that could alter that fact. He hadn't "faculty," people said—poor Pliny! But he wasn't in debt. Sometimes his little wife counted up the "pros" in favor of Pliny on her fingers, and that always came first. He wasn't in debt; he had a little whitewashed, cool-in-summer, warm-in-winter home; there was a spare room in it—there were roses in the front yard of it, and always a row of pies on the pantry shelf. And the little wife was contented. It was only on New Year's day that she had her little wistful longings to be rich, and that was because she lived across the street from Cynthia Broadstreet's big house, and was so far-sighted! She might have pulled down her shades, of course, but she didn't do it; she pulled them up.

"Well, they're having a beautiful time over there," she sighed, gently, "and you're having a beautiful time over here, Sarah Cooper. You know Pliny's going to be home all the afternoon, and there's roast chicken for dinner. Go and baste it, my dear, this minute, and be thankful for all your mercies!"

It was while she was gone away from the window that her New Year's caller came. It was a shrunken, cowering little figure, and it came hurrying up the walk with anxious back glances over its shoulders. It did not stop to knock.

Sarah Cooper looked up from her basting, and started at the sight that met her eyes. A drop of melted butter spilled over her hand and burned her.

"Maria Thacher!" she ejaculated, sharply.

"Yes, it's me, Sally. Hide me, hide me, quick!"

"For—the-goodness—sake! I guess you're crazy, Maria!"

"No, but I'm on the verge—I'm on the totterin' verge!" groaned the New Year's caller. "If you don't let me have a place to hide in before they come, I shall topple clear over the edge, Sally."

"They? Who come?"

"The selectmen. They're coming to carry me to the poorhouse. They've been a-threatenin', and a-threatenin'. Then they came; I saw them through the front window. I had just time to run out o' the back door over here. Sally Cooper, you get up off'n your knees and look at me! When we was little together you uster be makin' believe you was me, and they were comin' to take you to the poorhouse. Make believe your heart was broke. Make believe you'd rather lay down an' fold your hands an' die, an' you would 've, only there wasn't any money left to bury you with—"

The shrill, excited voice came to a sudden stop, but the low-celled little kitchen seemed to ring with it still. It rang in Sarah Cooper's ears. She had not closed her eyes, or swayed dreamily in a rocking chair, but she had made believe it all. There had been time, standing there facing the little weird, wild figure of her New Year's caller.

"Maria Thacher," she caught the shrunken shoulders with her strong, gentle hands, and pushed the little figure before her into the other room—"you lay down there on that sofa and rest you! Don't think about selectmen and poorhouses again, and don't you worry, I'll see to everything."

"But they'll find me here! I wisht you'd hide me, Sally," shrilled the broken voice.

"I'm not going to hide you, Maria," calmly; "you're going to lay right there in plain sight. I guess you've got as good a right to stay in the open as anybody. Now you drop off—a little mite of sleep will do you a sight o' good. I tell you I'll see to everything." She was gone instantly, before the excited voice could wail again. And she had closed the door behind her.

Half-way across the kitchen floor she encountered two men. They stood awkwardly, hat in hand, and smiled apologetically at her.

"Good morning, Mrs. Cooper."

"Good-mornin', Sally." The older man had trotted her on his knees. "We come right in after we'd knocked a couple o' times. We calculated you didn't hear."

"Why, Mr. Vose! Why, Uncle Silas! Walk right in!" The little fun wrinkles were in Sarah Cooper's gray eyes. "I wish both o' you a happy New Year! It was real neighborly in you to call on me, but you made a mistake in the door. I don't receive New Year's calls in the kitchen—"

"Er—er—wait, Mrs. Cooper," interposed the younger man, nervously. "An er—explanation is needful. We are out this morning in our official capacity—er, capacities—to perform a painful duty."

"Oh, does it hurt?" smiled the little hostess, wickedly. "I never made a New Year's call myself, but I didn't suppose it hurt—"

"Sally," laughed Uncle Silas, "you jest quit your foolin'! We're in solemn earnest. It ain't alays a pleasin' duty to take a poor innocent soul to the town house!"

"Then don't take me," promptly. "Besides, Uncle Silas, no knowin' but Pliny would object!"

"You piece o' mischief! You ain't growed up much since I trotted ye on my knees an' tied yer blue hair ribbon into my whiskers an' let me go to meetin' with it! But serious, Sally, we're looking for poor Maria Thacher. She's got to the last end of her rope, an' has been starvin' herself on nothin' this nobody knows how long."

"Poor Maria!" Sally was serious enough now.

"Yes, poor soul! It'll come hard to a Thacher to go thar, but she'll be took care of an' have a warm room an' victuals—somethin' she ain't had lately. The town's got to interfere. Pleasant or not pleasant, it's a matter of duty."

"Yes, duty, Mrs. Cooper," echoed the younger selectman, with important stress on the little word. "We failed to find—er—Miss Thacher at her place, and so came over hereto inquire for her."

"Yes, she's here. She's laying on my sofa, and I here to goodness she's dropped off and can't hear us talking. Her heart is broken, Uncle Silas, Mr. Vose."

"Poor little soul!"

"And she'd have taken time for dying out o' the Lord's hands if there'd been any money left to be buried with. Wicked? Yes, but we don't any of us know what it's like to be a Thacher and come on the town. Maybe we'd all be wicked. Now, what I want to say is, Maria Thacher ain't coming on the town while I've a spare room and pies on my pantry shelf! She's coming on me. I haven't seen Pliny yet, but I know Pliny. Now I have to haste my chicken again."

When Pliny Cooper came home at noon the whole little house he stepped into was savory with good, warm smells, and a smiling wife in a white apron with edging four inches deep, met him at the door.

"Happy New Year, Pliny! You came home just on the minute; the chicken's done to a turn. But wait, Pliny. Pliny, we've had a New Year's caller.

"Sho!—no?"

"Yes, and I've given her the spare room and the seat nearest the stove at the table to set in as long as she lives. I've got her knife and fork on. It's going to be a happy New Year to Maria Thacher, Pliny."

"Maria Thacher!" He sat down on one of the wooden chairs, a little bewildered by the suddenness of it all. Sarah Cooper sat down, too—on the same chair.

"Pliny, you're a good man," she said, softly, touching his rough cheek with her small loving fingers. "Set right here as long as you're mind to, and get used to it. I want you to go into the sitting-room and look at Maria Thacher's face. I've told her, Pliny. This morning I made believe I received New Year's calls. Cynthia Broadstreet received with me. I didn't know I was going to have one!"

It did not take Pliny Cooper long to become used to anything. Sally proposed. He rose presently and tipped clumsily into the outer room. He was gone some time. When he came back he kissed Sally first.

"She's smilin' in her sleep," he whispered. "She looks all wore out, but as if she'd got to a restin' place at last. I never saw a peacefuller smile than that."

Then Pliny Cooper, rough, plain, and lacking "faculty," made as beautiful a speech as was ever made.

"Sally," he said, "the Lord 'received' with you."—Woman's Journal.

A GREAT DAY AT GREENWOOD.

Dear Brother Meek: We raised nearly $1,000 last Sunday at Greenwood for the Orphans' Home. Dr. W. T. Johnson gave $200, R. T. Jones, $100, and several other splendid contributions were received. Great is Greenwood and great is its pastor, Rev. H. S. Spragins. Dr. Johnson and his committee will push the canvass till I am sure they will make it $1,200 or more. We must raise that $5,000. If any of the preachers have failed to take a collection for the building, they ought to do it at once.

SOME REFLECTIONS OF THE RECENT SESSION OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

The year 1910 is gone. The ninety-seventh session of the Mississippi Conference is numbered with the past. The class of 1857, which then numbered seventeen, is reduced to two—namely, Rev. George Jackson, of the Louisiana Conference, and myself. One by one we pass away. I know of only two now living who were members of our Conference prior to 1857. They are Robt. A. Sibley, of our Conference, and Joseph Newsom, now of the North Mississippi Conference.

To me the recent session of our Conference was in some respects a sad one. My brother, William Bryant Lewis, and myself, had for fifty-two years been greeting each other and spending pleasant moments together on Conference occasions. His name was called by the Secretary, but he did not answer. He had answered to another call to "Come up higher." He was the last one of five brothers to pass away. Then our dear brother, J. A. B. Jones, whom I loved like a brother, has gone home. And besides these, seven others of our brethren were called to answer to the final roll call.

Never before, within the time of one year have our ranks been so reduced. If I mistake not, we have lost by death, transfer and location, more than we gained by admission, readmission and otherwise.

Our Conference session was a very harmonious one. So far as I have heard, but few, if any, of our preachers were dissatisfied with their appointments.

Our list of superannuates has grown very large. One mistake we make is in admitting men on trial who are somewhat advanced in life. Another is in receiving men who are not sound in body. Another is in receiving men from other churches who have made failures there. Rev. Barnabas Pipkin was right when he said in a message to his brethren when on his death bed more than thirty-two years ago: "Preach Christ and Him crucified, and guard the door." We have men in our Conference now on the superannuate list who have been of but little real service to us. And yet they get from the Joint Board as much (and in some instances, more) as others who served the Church fifty years or more before superannuation. Then, again, if the applicant is a man of family, we have a right to know something about his family. We have some preachers among us—good men and splendid preachers—who, on account of their home folks, are a great drawback to us. The question is sometimes asked: "Why is Brother A. B. moved every year?" The answer is: "His family."

A preacher has no business marrying till he finds the right woman. "How may one know?" you ask. "Talk to the Lord about it." Every preacher, old and young, ought to keep in close touch with the Lord. "If you ask anything in my name, I will do it." Why not trust him to help you to find a suitable companion? You ask me if I did so. I answer: "I certainly did." At a dinner table in Columbia, Miss., I was asked to give an account of my courtship and marriage. When I finished the recital, a Christian young woman, sitting in front of me, said: "Brother Lewis, that match was made up yonder," at the same time pointing upward. Yes, some matches are made "up yonder"; but oftener there is a misfit down here, partly because we are not careful to follow out the example of Abraham in securing a wife for his son. (See Gen. 24.)

A POINT OF COURTESY.

There is one little piece of kindness which almost all people, old and young, have opportunities to perform, and by whose practice they can very materially add to the comfort and happiness of less fortunate persons. It is to avoid looking at deformities or marks of disease, when they are met in the street or the home. If a person has a misshapen foot, or lacks an arm or a leg, or bears upon the face some disfigurement, or is evidently suffering from disease, we may be sure that the fact is sufficiently impressed upon his mind, by his own thoughts and by the marked attention of the unkind or the thoughtless, without any stares or remarks of our own. The keen suffering given to a sensitive person—and all persons with a noticeable deformity may well be supposed to be sensitive, on that subject—is such as one who has felt it can alone understand to the full. Of course, it is the most natural thing for the eye to fall upon that which is marked or unusual; but, that is a poor excuse for unkindness. We ought deliberately to school ourselves not to add, by look or word, to the unhappiness of those who have already enough to bear. Sunday School Times.

If you could once make up your mind never to undertake more work of any sort than you can carry on calmly, quietly, without hurry or flurry, and the instant you feel yourself growing nervous and like one out of breath, would stop and take breath, you would find this single common sense rule doing for you what no prayers or tears could ever accomplish. To the Honorable John Allison, Chancellor presiding in the Chancery Court of Davidson County, Tennessee:

Your complainant respectfully represents and shows unto your honor:

I.

1. The relators, A. W. Wilson, W. A. Candler, H. C. Morrison, E. E. Hoss, James Atkins, Collins Denny, J. C. Kilgo, W. B. Murrah, W. R. Lambuth, R. G. Waterhouse, E. D. Mouzon, and J. H. McCoy, are members of the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and constitute all of the members of said College now in active service except the defendant, E. R. Hendrix. As such Bishops they constitute the Visitors of Vanderbilt University and Board of Supervisors of said University, to whom is confided visitatorial power over Vanderbilt University. Bishops O. P. Fitzgerald and J. S. Key are superannuated members of the College of Bishops, but have been, by the General Conference, relieved of active duties as such.

2. The relators, V. A. Godbey, N. E. Harris, and A. W. Biggs, are citizens and residents as stated in the caption, and join as relators on account of their election by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at its regular session, held in Asheville, North Carolina, in May, 1910, as members of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, their election to said Board of Trust and acceptance being set out more fully hereinafter.

3. The defendants are members of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, except the defendants, Claude Waller, James A. Robins, and R. F. Jackson, who are now claiming to be members of said Board of Trust; the basis of their said claim will be made more fully to appear hereafter in this bill. The citizenship of the parties is stated in the caption.

4. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a voluntary religious society, of episcopal form of government. By its Book of Discipline, which is the accepted authoritative declaration of the distribution of its powers, it is provided, and is, in fact, that the General Conference of the Church is the highest governmental agency of the society, from which and through which all subordinate bodies and officials derive their authority and power. The General Conference, an elective representative body, meets quadrennially and is the sole legislative body of the Church. The Bishops, elected by the General Conference, are the chief executives of the Church. There are thirteen Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in active service, all of whom, except Bishop E. R. Hendrix, join as complainants herein.

The Annual Conferences govern in their respective territories set out by the General Conference. Among the enterprises of the said Church, and as an incident of its main purpose, is that of providing and maintaining institutions of learning. These are maintained by endowments secured through the influence of Conference representatives, either General or Annual, and by assessments upon the membership of the Church, which are collected and apportioned under the authority of the respective Conferences. Of the institutions of learning so projected, endowed, and maintained by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is Vanderbilt University, established, governed, and maintained as herein stated. While the several Annual Conferences herein named began that particular enterprise, it was determined among them and the other Annual Conferences as represented in the General Conference that the latter should assume toward Vanderbilt University the sole authority as the patronizing body, and it was done at the General Conference at Baltimore, Maryland, in 1898, by the assent of the original patronizing Conferences and of the Vanderbilt University.

This was not intended by the parties to be, and, in fact, was not, a change of the relation of the University to the Church, but was a change in the internal regulation of the Church with respect to the subject of the Church's university.

II.

1. The Vanderbilt University is a corporation organized under Chapter 54 of the Acts of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee of 1871. It was organized under the corporate name of "The Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," and the charter of incorporation was granted by the Chancery Court of Davidson County, Tennessee, at the April term, 1872. The name of the corporation was subsequently changed by the said Court at the April term, 1873, to "The Vanderbilt University," by which name it has since been known.

III.

1. The Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was established as a university of and by certain Annual Conferences of said Church, in order to provide for the youth of the Church and the country an institution of learning of the highest order, founded upon the surest basis, where they could prosecute theological, literary, scientific, and professional studies to an extent as great and in a manner as thorough as their wants might demand and their means admit.

2. The Church had long felt the need of a great central college or university, but the first authoritative step taken in that direction was a resolution offered by Rev. Wellborn Mooney at the Tennessee Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held at Lebanon, Tennessee, October 4 to 9, 1871, reading as follows:

"Resolved, That we request the presiding Bishop to appoint a committee of three to confer with the Memphis, North Alabama, North Mississippi, and any other Conferences likely to co-operate with us in reference to the establishment and endowment of a Methodist university of high grade and large endowment."

This resolution was adopted, and a committee consisting of Drs. D. C. Kelley, A. L. P. Green, and R. A. Young was appointed.

3. At the Memphis Conference of said Church, held at Trenton, November 17, 1871, after a brief address by Dr. A. L. P. Green, that Conference by a resolution authorized the appointment of a committee of three to confer with the committee appointed by the Tennessee and other Conferences with reference to said proposed university. Revs. W. C. Johnson, S. W. Moore, and T. L. Boswell were appointed as such committee. The subsequent day of the Memphis Conference the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved: 1. That three laymen be added to the committee on the proposed university.

"2. That Conferences acting hereafter in favor of this enterprise be requested each to appoint a committee of six, three preachers and three laymen.

"3. That the committees already appointed be requested to nominate to the Bishops who preside at their sessions proper persons to be appointed by them on the committees, so as to conform to this action."

The Bishop appointed the following laymen on the committee of the proposed university—to wit: Hons. Milton Brown, R. J. Morgan, and M. J. Wicks. Similar action was taken and committees appointed by the North Alabama Conference of said Church at its annual meeting held at Florence, November 16, 1871; by the Mississippi Conference at its meeting at Meridian, Mississippi, on December 3-19, 1871; by the North Mississippi Conference of said Church at its annual meeting held at Columbus December 1, 1871; by the Alabama Conference at its annual meeting held at Mobile December 2, 1871; by the Arkansas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at its session held at Bentonville, Arkansas, in 1871; also by the White River and the Louisiana Conferences of said Church, in the same year.

4. These committees, together with Bishops McTyeire and Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met in a convention in the city of Memphis, Tennessee, on the 24th of January, 1872, which convention lasted until and including the 27th day of January of said year. At said convention, called solely for the purpose of taking steps to establish a university under the patronage and control of those Conferences of the Church which would participate, the following resolutions (hereinafter referred to as the Memphis Resolutions), were adopted:

"1. Resolved by the Convention, That measures be adopted looking to the establishment as speedily as practicable of an institution of learning of the highest order and upon the surest basis, where the youth of the Church and country may prosecute theological, literary, scientific and professional studies to an extent as great and in a manner as thorough as their wants demand.

"2. That this institution shall be called the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"3. That it shall consist at present of five schools or departments—viz.: (1) a theological school for the training of our young preachers, who, on application for admission, shall present a recommendation from a Quarterly or an Annual Conference, and shall have attained a standard of education equal to that required for admission on trial into an Annual Conference; and instruction to them shall be free both in the theological and the literary and scientific departments; (2) a literary and scientific school; (3) a normal school; (4) a law school; (5) a medical school.

"4. That the sum of one million dollars is necessary in order to realize fully the object desired, and not less than five hundred thousand dollars must be secured as a condition precedent to the opening of any department of the university.

"5. That the location of the university shall be left to the decision of the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"6. That the carrying out of this whole scheme is hereby committed to the following persons—viz.: William C. Johnson, Robert J. Morgan, Smith W. Warren, Milton Brown, Alexander L. P. Green, Jordan Stokes, David C. Kelley, Edward H. East, Robert A. Young, Landon C. Garland, Philip Tuggle, John M. Steel, James H. McFerrin, Christopher D. Oliver, William M. Bryce, William L. C. Hunnicutt, Thomas Christian, James S. Borden, William H. Foster, Andrew Hunter, James L. DeYampert, and David T. Reynolds, who shall take immediate steps for securing a suitable charter and incorporation, and shall be a Board of Trust, with power to solicit and invest funds, appoint an agent or agents, and do whatever else is necessary for the extension of this scheme.

"7. That seven of the Board of Trust at any meeting regularly called shall constitute a quorum.

"8. That provisions be made in the charter for giving a fair representation in the management of the University to any Annual Conference hereafter co-operating with us.

"9. That the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, be and hereby are requested to act as a Board of Supervision of the University, or any of its departments, and jointly with the Board of Trust to elect officers and professors, and prescribe the course of study and the plan of government."

5. In accordance with said resolutions, the parties named in Paragraph 6 of the Memphis resolutions proceeded at once to employ counsel—to-wit, Hon. Thomas H. Malone, a prominent lawyer of Nashville—and a petition was presented to the Chancery Court of Davidson County, Tennessee, in behalf of the said parties, acting as representatives of the several Conferences therein named of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South (the petition so stating), reciting the Memphis convention and the resolutions adopted there, and praying for a charter of incorporation under the laws of the State of Tennessee. In accordance with the prayer of the petition, the Chancery Court of Davidson County, Tennessee, did, at its April term, 1872, grant a charter of incorporation to "The Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." The said decree, which by law constituted the charter, is in the following words and figures, to-wit:

THE CENTRAL UNIVERSITY OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH. Ex Parte.

"This matter came up on this day to be heard before the Hon. Nathaniel Baxter, Judge, etc., of the Circuit Court of Davidson County, sitting by interchange with the Hon. Edward H. East, the Chancellor presiding, but who was incompetent to preside and hear this cause for the reason that he was interested herein; and the same was heard upon the petition of W. C. Johnson, Robert J. Morgan, Smith W. Moore, and Milton Brown, citizens and residents of the State of Tennessee and representatives of the Memphis Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and Alexander L. P. Green, Jordan Stokes, David C. Kelley, Edward H. East, David T. Reynolds, and Robert A. Young, citizens and residents of Tennessee and representatives of the Tennessee Conference; and Landon C. Garland, a citizen and resident of Mississippi, and Philip Tuggle, a citizen and resident of Tennessee, the two latter representing the North Mississippi Conference; and James H. McFerrin and John M. Steel, citizens of the State of Arkansas and representatives of the White River Conference; and Christopher D. Oliver and William M. Bryce, citizens of the State of Alabama and representatives of the North Alabama Conference; and Edward Wadsworth and W. W. Byrd, citizens of the State of Alabama and representatives of the Alabama Conference; and W. L. C. Hunnicutt and Thomas Christian, citizens of the State of Mississippi and representatives of the Mississippi Conference; and James L. Borden and William H. Foster, citizens of the State of Louisiana and representatives of the Louisiana Conference; and Andrew Hunter and J. L. DeYampert, citizens of the State of Arkansas and representatives of the Little Rock Conference; and it appearing to the court that said persons, in their said petition, prayed to be incorporated under the name and style of the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the object and plan of said university having been fully set forth in resolutions passed by the delegates of said Conferences at a convention of the same held in the city of Memphis on January 24, 25, 26, and 27, 1872, and which resolutions are in words and figures as follows:

"1. Resolved by the Convention, That measures be adopted looking to the establishment as speedily as practicable of an institution of learning of the highest order and upon the surest basis, where the youth of the Church and country may prosecute theological, literary, scientific, and professional studies to an extent as great and in manner as thorough as their wants demand.

"2. That this institution shall be called the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"3. That it shall consist at present of five schools or departments—viz.: (1) a theological school for the training of our young preachers, who, on application for admission, shall present a recommendation from a Quarterly or Annual Conference, and shall have attained a standard of education equal to that required for admission on trial into an Annual Conference; and instruction to them shall be free both in the theological and the literary and scientific departments; (2) a literary and scientific school; (3) a normal school; (4) a law school; (5) a medical school.

"4. That the sum of one million dollars is necessary in order to realize fully the object desired, and not less than five hundred thousand dollars must be secured as a condition precedent to the opening of any department of the university.

"5. That the location of the university shall be left to the decision of the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"6. That the carrying out of this whole scheme is hereby committed to the following persons—viz.: William C. Johnson, Robert J. Morgan, Smith W. Warren, Milton Brown, Alexander L. P. Green, Jordan Stokes, David C. Kelley, Edward H. East, Robert A. Young, Landon C. Garland, Philip Tuggle, John M. Steel, James H. McFerrin, Christopher D. Oliver, William M. Bryce, William L. C. Hunnicutt, Thomas Christian, James S. Borden, William H. Foster, Andrew Hunter, James L. DeYampert, and David T. Reynolds, who shall take immediate steps for securing a suitable charter and incorporation, and shall be a Board of Trust, with power to solicit and invest funds, appoint an agent or agents, and do whatever else is necessary for the extension of this scheme.

"7. That seven of the Board of Trust at any meeting regularly called shall constitute a quorum.

"8. That provisions be made in the charter for giving a fair representation in the management of the university to any Annual Conference hereafter co-operating with us.

"9. That the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, be and hereby are requested to act as a Board of Supervision of the university or any of its departments, and jointly with the Board of Trust to elect officers and professors, and prescribe the course of study and the plan of government."

"And it further appearing to the Court that, upon the filing of said petition, the Clerk and Master of this Court caused, by an order at rules, the same to be advertised, in pursuance of the statute in such cases made and prescribed; and it further appearing to the Court that no one has appeared and made known any objection to the granting of the prayer of the petition, and the Court, upon inspection of the designs and objects of said corporation, finds nothing therein contained to be against public policy or good morals or in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the State or of the United States, is pleased to grant the prayer of the same, and doth hereby order and adjudge and decree that the petitioners be declared a body politic and corporate under the name and style of 'The Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South,' and in that name may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded in the courts of this State or of the other States of the Union, or of the United States of America; may have a common seal, which may be altered at pleasure; shall have perpetual succession; may solicit and receive subscriptions, donations, legacies, and devises; may hold real estate and personal property in such amounts as the business of the corporation requires, and may receive the same by contract, gift, will, or devise; and shall hold the same for the purpose of said incorporation with all the lawful conditions imposed by the donor; may appoint such subordinate officers and agents as the business of the corporation requires, prescribe their duties and fix their compensation; may make by-laws not inconsistent with the laws of the land or this charter or the resolutions of the convention at Memphis, as set out herein, which resolutions are hereby adopted as a part of this charter, but shall make all by-laws necessary and proper to carry out the objects of said resolutions, as well as for the management of its property and the regulation of its affairs; and may also have power to pass all by-laws necessary to the use of the powers therein given, or which by law may hereafter be conferred; and all said powers, rights and privileges, together with such others as are not herein specially given and referred to, are hereby conferred upon said corporation in as full, complete and ample manner as by the laws of the State the same can or might be; and said corporation shall have the power to confer all the degrees of merit and honor usually conferred by universities. It is further decreed that petitioners pay the costs of this proceeding, and that the Clerk and Master issue to them a certified copy of this decree.

"Nathaniel Baxter, Judge.

"I, Nathaniel Baxter, Jr., Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at Nashville, Tenn., do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and perfect copy of a decree entered in Minute Book W, page 267, rendered at April term, in the cause set out in the caption, and which is now on file in my office.

"In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the official seal of said court, at Nashville, on this the nineteenth day of August, 1872, and ninety-seventh year of American independence.

"Nathaniel Baxter, Jr., Clerk and Master.
"By Alex B. Hodge, Deputy Clerk and Master." (Seal.)

On August 22, 1872, the incorporators accepted the charter as above granted.

ANENT THE ADVOCATE.

The Advocate wishes every Methodist in Louisiana and Mississippi and its friends and readers in other States a happy New Year. Let us make 1911 memorable by our united work for the Master and Methodism.

Many of the clubs sent in last year are now expiring. We urgently request our pastors to endeavor to renew them at once. We do not desire to lose a single subscriber. The extent of the Advocate's influence is measured by its circulation.

"Tidings from the Field" is one of the most popular departments of our paper. The people like to hear what is going on from the pastors themselves. We are pleased to have the brethren tell of their work, but these reports need to be brief and pointed, with uninteresting details left out. In giving an account of services held, it is seldom well to give the numbers of the hymns used, etc. Results are what we want. In this, as well as in other things, it should be remembered that there are others.

We are pleased to have communications from those who have something to say to the public, but, of course, we cannot print everything that comes to hand. Our friends must accord us the right of selecting our matter. In sending in copy we urge all contributors to write plainly with ink and avoid abbreviations. It is easier for us to abbreviate, if necessary, than to supply omissions on a closely printed page. When you speak through the columns of the New Orleans Advocate, you are addressing 20,000 or more readers; hence it is well to prepare your message with care.

The pastor who succeeds in introducing a really good religious newspaper into a family where none has been taken here before does a work the beneficial effects of which will multiply beyond computation. Some pastors are doing this work. Some seem to be asleep.—Bishop Fitzgerald.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate has one hundred and fifty chapters in which every official member takes his Conference organ. Our "Honor Roll" is just beginning. No. 1 is Mansfield, La., where Rev. A. W. Turner is pastor; No. 2, is Bogalusa, La., where Rev. J. M. Alford is in charge. Who will report No. 3? What is the matter with Mississippi?

HIS REPRESENTATIVES.

"As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." These words are from the lips of the God-man, of him who spoke as never man spoke. They were uttered in his remarkable intercessory prayer which was offered on Thursday night, shortly before his betrayal. The cross was in sight and his public ministry of three years was about to end in the bloody tragedy on Calvary. The tremendous issues at stake evoked from the Master this lengthiest and loftiest of all his extraordinary supplications. No small part of his extended petition related to his followers into whose hands he was about to commit the work which had brought him in humiliation to earth, and which lay so near his heart. He prayed that they might be kept from the evil one; that they might be sanctified through the truth; that their unity might be maintained; and that they might finally dwell with him in the heavenly home and behold his glory. It was in this connection that the statement quoted above was made. What is the meaning of this utterance of our Lord that he had sent his disciples into the world, as the Father had sent him among the millions of mankind? Does it not mean that he has commissioned his followers to be his representatives on earth, as he was the representative of him who sits upon the eternal throne in stooping to wear the human form and execute the scheme of race redemption? Such apparently is the weighty significance of these wondrous words.

1. The Christian should represent Christ by revealing him to men, as he revealed the infinite Father to them. Only God incarnate could give to the finite mind an adequate conception of invisible Deity; and the ascended Christ can now be truly known only by being re-incarnated in human beings. Having him "formed within them, the hope of glory," his disciples should show him to the world. Jesus "as he is, has been the mightiest lifting power upon our planet ever since he trod its soil.

When disclosed in the beauty, charm, and glory of his unique personality, the Master's ability to break the fascination of sin and draw men to him has been the miracle and marvel of the ages. The passionate, hurried cry of the human soul, often not analyzed or understood, has ever been to find one like him to lean upon—he is truly "the desire of all nations." The knowledge that our unsaved fellow-creatures must learn of Jesus chiefly through us, should incite us to seek earnestly and persistently the highest degree of holiness attainable in our present sphere of existence. Only a pure heart can mirror and faithfully reflect the mind and spirit of the Man of Galilee. The marred image of our Lord has been the weakness and greatest hindrance of Christianity. The distorted conceptions of him that we by our inconsistencies have given out have repelled and driven away the sin-stricken ones who need the touch of his healing hand. When those who profess his name are in character and disposition like Christ, nothing can long stay the conquering march of the Church as she moves forward to tell the story of redeeming love.

2. Christians should represent Christ in their unwavering loyalty to revealed truth. Jesus came bringing God's complete and final revelation to man. He said, "I have given them the words which thou gavest me, and they have received them." These "words" are the priceless heritage of the Church. They disclose what the feeble human intellect could never have discovered. They proclaim that behind the stupendous power that created and which maintains and governs the universe there is a Father's loving heart. They show mankind fallen, but with glorious redemption within reach. They admit the reign of death all around the globe, but tell of a time when it shall forever end. They show beyond the sweep of telescopic vision "a city that hath foundations" into which at last shall be gathered all the pure and good, to dwell evermore with their triumphant and reigning Lord. The disciples of Christ should bear uncompromising testimony to the authenticity of the Scriptures in this age of doubt. Having verified their teachings in the depths of their own consciousness, the cavillings of skeptics, whether in or out of the Church, should not disturb them. In the message of salvation which they carry to the lost there should be no note of uncertainty. To represent the Master properly one must have and exhibit perfect confidence in the transforming power of the gospel.

3. Christians are Christ's representatives in the service which they render. Our victorious Lord has "all power in heaven and on earth," but that power operates chiefly through human instrumentalities. Jesus principally speaks and ministers and achieves through his followers. He expects their voices to speak for him, their hands to convey his blessings, and their feet to speed upon his gracious errands. The work which he inaugurated and appointed us to carry forward, we should faithfully perform. And what is that work? Incidentally it includes many things, but primarily, as he expressed it, it is "to seek and save the lost." Fred Robertson, the great Brighton preacher says: "That which was melancholy marred, and miserable in the world was more congenial to the heart of Christ than that which was proudly happy. It was in the midst of a triumph and the pomp of a procession that he paused to weep over Jerusalem. And if we ask why the character of Christ was marked by this melancholy condescension, the answer is that he was in the midst of a world of ruins where there was but little to gladden his heart, but much to touch it with grief. He was here to restore that which was broken down and crumbling into decay. An enthusiastic antiquarian, standing amidst the fragments of an ancient temple, surrounded by dust and moss, by broken pillars and defaced architrave, with magnificent projects in his mind of restoring all of this to its former majesty, of drawing out into light from mere rubbish the ruined glories, and therefore stooping down amongst the dank ivy and the rank nettles—such was Christ amid the wreck of human nature. He was striving to lift it out of its degradation; he was searching out in revolting places that which had fallen down, that he might build up again in fair proportions—a holy temple to the Lord. Therefore, he labored among the guilty; therefore he was the companion of outcasts; therefore he spoke kindly to those whom society had undone; therefore his breath fanned the spark that seemed to be dying in the wick of the expiring taper, when men thought it was too late and that the hour of hopeless profligacy was come." In this eloquent description of the mission and work of the Master we catch some conception of what should be our tasks as his accredited representatives in the world. Following in the footsteps of our great Exemplar, it behooves us to do the utmost in our power to uplift our fallen fellowmen and make their lives brighter and better. The disciple who has no aspiration to aid in the recovery of the lost is either mistaken in his profession, or following his Lord afar off. In proportion as they become imbued with the spirit of Christ, do men address themselves with flaming zeal to the noble work of rescuing the perishing.

4. But the serving disciples are not the only representatives of Christ in the world—those who are served also represent him. So near and dear is needy humanity to him that he identifies himself with it and accepts as his own any assistance given it. "Inasmuch as ye have done unto one of the least of these, ye have done it to me," was his doctrine in his graphic sermon on the judgment. This assurance has been the mainspring of the world's philanthropy for the past nineteen centuries. Strange as it may seem the poet's teaching is Scriptural and true:

I bend to help a little straying child

And soothe away its fears,

When lo! the Wondrous Babe, all undefiled,
Looks at me through its tears.

Beside a cot I kneel with pitying eyes,

A dying brow I fan—

The pallet seems a cross and on it lies
One like the Son of Man!

The way is long, and when I pause to share

My cup, my crust of bread,

With some poor wanderer—O vision rare—
A halo crowns his head!

O'er sin's dark stream there comes a drowning cry,

Its woful tide I stem

And grasp for one who sinks—the Christ is there,
I touch his garment's hem.

O Presence, ever new and ever dear,

My Master, can it be

In thy great day of coming I shall hear,
"Thou did'st it unto me?"

THE KAISER A READER OF THE BIBLE.

The utterances of great men concerning Christianity have attracted much attention. What Napoleon is reported to have said concerning Christ and his kingdom when he was upon the isle of St. Helena has been the subject of comment in all civilized lands. Daniel Webster's declaration of his faith in the divinity of the gospel has been chiseled upon his tombstone at Marshfield, Massachusetts, and will doubtless be quoted as long as the English language is spoken. Ordinary people have a desire to know how the Man of Galilee has appeared to the master spirits of the race. It is interesting to note that he has seemed as lofty and superhuman to them as he has to those gifted with no extraordinary endowment of mind.

And he commands the reverence and homage of the distinguished personalities of our day not less than those of former times. It is thought by not a few that the two most remarkable men now upon the stage of action in the world are Theodore Roosevelt and Emperor William of Germany. And both of them are strong believers in the religion of Christ. Mr. Roosevelt has so often expressed publicly his religious convictions that his views are well known, but the German Emperor has not been so free and open in the proclamation of his faith. However, he is known to be thoroughly loyal to the cause of Christianity. It is said that he is writing a life of Frederick the Great, and that despite his admiration for his illustrious ancestor, he has scant patience with the fondness that he showed for Voltaire, and has recorded his disapproval of Frederick's course toward the famous French infidel in his forthcoming volume. And recently in conversation with his pastor the Kaiser spoke as follows concerning the Book of Holy Writ:

"I read often and with pleasure in the Bible, which lies on my night table and in which I have understood the most precious thoughts. I cannot understand how so many men neglect the Word of God. In all my thinking and action I always put before myself, What would the Bible say to that? In hours of trouble and anxiety I turn to it for comfort. . . . I cannot think of a life innerly alienated from God. We must all pass through Gethsemane hours, hours in which our pride is humbled. This is hard for us, as we would willingly be our own masters."

THE VANDERBILT BILL OF INJUNCTION.

We begin in this issue the publication of the bill of injunction filed by the lawyers of the Church in the Vanderbilt University case, as we promised to do some three or four weeks ago. This able document contains a vast deal of valuable information of a historical character, and we desire to give the Methodists in our patronizing territory an opportunity to familiarize themselves with it. It is but fair and just to all concerned in the controversy that the facts involved should be publicly set forth, so that the contentions of both sides may be weighed and passed upon by the great masses of Methodism. It is the claim of those who stand for the control of the institution by the Church that justice and equity are on their side, no matter what may be the decision of the courts. The only way to establish this claim is to submit the evidence which we think sustains it. And this is what we are now proceeding to do, and we hope that no reader of the Advocate will fail to peruse carefully the statement of the case made by our able counsel. If there be those who think that they have not properly set forth the facts in the Bill which they have filed, we stand ready to give them a hearing. We have no disposition to do any one the slightest wrong or injustice. The Advocate has been, and is, open to those who champion the cause of the University Trustees, as well as to those who are in accord with the General Conference and the Church. We want the truth brought to light, whatever it may be, that all who have participated in the unfortunate controversy may either be held responsible or acquitted before the great bar of public opinion. It is better to be morally right than to triumph in a law court by appealing to legal technicalities.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. R. E. Witt and family have reached their new work at Long Beach, Miss., and are happy and hopeful for the new year.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan, financial agent for our Orphanage at Ruston, was in the city one day last week, and made a pleasant call at the Advocate office.

Rev. O. P. Armour is happy in the cordial reception given him by the people of his new charge, the Kosciusko Circuit. He speaks most kindly of the work of his predecessor.

Rev. G. W. Gordon, of Valden, Miss., has met a hearty reception on his new charge, evidenced by many substantial tokens. He enters upon his work full of hope for a prosperous year.

Rev. W. W. Hatfield expresses himself as delighted with his charge, Mooreville, Miss., and as sanguine of a fine year's work. We thank him for encouraging words concerning the Advocate.

Rev. J. H. Bell has been transferred from the Cedar Bluff Circuit to Black Hawk to take the place of Rev. B. B. Sullivan, deceased. Who will now have charge at Cedar Bluff we are not informed.

Rev. T. J. O'Neill, presiding elder of the Newton District, writes that most of his preachers are in their places and are planning for a successful year. Under his wise leadership, we have no doubt splendid results will follow their labors.

Rev. M. H. Moore, of Poplarville, was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office last Saturday. He has been returned to his present charge for the third year, and speaks in terms highly commendatory of his people.

Rev. S. D. Howard, who was appointed to the Bienville charge at Conference, has since been changed to Baker. He requests that notice be made of his new assignment. His postoffice address is Baker, La.

Rev. Jno. F. Foster, the diligent pastor and cultured gentleman who so faithfully served our Algiers Church for three years is entering hopefully upon his new work at DeRidder, La. The outlook for the new year is encouraging.

The Wesley House at Biloxi continues to have success in the great work it has undertaken. The sewing class now numbers 52, and the night school has a large enrollment. The Christmas entertainment was largely attended.

Mr. J. A. Jones, Vice-President of the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, whose death was reported last week, was a great friend to the churches and pastors along the road and on the Gulf Coast, as was shown by many substantial favors.

We thank Rev. B. P. Fulllove, of Booneville, Miss., for a list of subscribers secured at the first Quarterly Conference on his new charge. There is no better way of beginning the new year than by putting the Advocate into the homes of the people.

Brother M. H. Turner, a loyal layman of Vossburg, Miss., shows his interest in the work of the church by renewing his subscription to the Advocate for four years in advance. The Church has a tremendous asset in the zeal and interest of such men.

The Advocate office enjoyed a call last Wednesday from Mrs. C. C. Miller and son, of Hammond, La. Mrs. Miller is the wife of the presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, and the author of the book, "A-le-the-la," which is having a large circulation.

Rev. Hilary S. Westbrook received a most cordial reception to his new work, DeSoto, Miss. He moved into a new parsonage, and his people showed their love and loyalty by generously filling the pantry. Methodist people know how to take care of their preachers.

We acknowledge a friendly call from Rev. J. Cude Rousseau and wife while passing through the city en route to their new charge, Texas Avenue, Shreveport, and from Rev. Rev. P. H. Fontaine, who spent some days in the city. We are always glad to have our friends come in to see us when in New Orleans.

Rev. T. M. Bradley, in obedience to the Bishop's orders, is in pace at Rosedale, Miss., where he hopes to accomplish something for the upbuilding of the kingdom. He has been given the oversight of a choice flock, and we are not surprised to be informed that they have received him in a kindly and gracious manner.

Rev. W. L. Linfield, who was appointed to Biloxi at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, was kept from his post for some time by the illness of his wife, but is now on the ground ready to push the work in his usual energetic fashion. Biloxi Methodism is to be congratulated on having such an efficient pastor.

Sailors' Rest, at Gufport, under the efficient superintendency of Rev. W. T. Griffin, entertained a large number of seamen with a concert and refreshments on the evening of Dec. 26. A Christmas tree was an enjoyable feature of the occasion. No one can doubt that this institution is accomplishing great good among those far from home.

On Monday evening, Feb. 13, Hon. W. J. Bryan will deliver an address on "Civic Righteousness" at the Athenaeum in this city, under the auspices of the Law Enforcement League of Louisiana. This organization, of which Mr. E. W. Vacher is president, and Rev. J. Benjamin Lawrence, Secretary, is doing much to arouse the civic conscience of this city and State.

We are indebted to Judge W. K. McLaurin, of Vicksburg, for the renewal of Mrs. McLaurin's subscription to the Advocate and also enclosing $1.50 additional to send the paper to some person not able to take it. Judge McLaurin, who is a distinguished lawyer and an agreeable gentleman, is a brother of the late United States Senator A. J. McLaurin, of Mississippi, who also was a staunch Methodist.

Mrs. Bessie W. Lipscomb, of Whitworth College, in a note to the editor states that Miss Janie Watkins left Jackson, Miss., for China on the afternoon of December 31. She is expected to sail from San Francisco on the steamship Mongolia on January 7th. Sister Lipscomb requests the prayers of all Christians, and of the members of the Foreign Missionary Society especially, that Miss Watkins may have journeying mercies and a safe voyage.

"I am well pleased with my new work. Nice home; good people. Come to see us." So writes Rev. W. L. Stormont, of Shelby, Miss. And he will be even more delighted with his flock when he has known those who constitute it longer. If he isn't, and the matter can be arranged, we will exchange tasks with him and let him edit the Advocate, while we serve Shelby, which in point of pleasantness is second to no pastorate in North Mississippi.

Rev. J. J. Brooks, of Gunnison, Miss., has been the recipient of many kindnesses at the hands of his parishioners during the Christmas and New Year season. It is his habit to win his way into the hearts of those whom he serves as pastor. Brother Brooks celebrated his sixtieth birthday on December 27th. If he were a little older, we would not be so venturesome as to proclaim the number of summers and winters through which he has passed.

The editor acknowledges the reception of an attractive card bringing the greeting of the season from the Alpha Wesley Class of the Tupelo Sunday school, of which Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle is the capable and beloved teacher. This is one of the most active and wide-awake adult classes in the connection, and antedated the General Conference in appropriating the name of Wesley. We wish these friends a year of large success both in the study of the Word and in the service of the Master.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, who again has been made a missionary evangelist in the North Alabama Conference, is spending some days with relatives at Leesburg in that State, where he is resting, reading, studying and making ready for the campaign that lies out before him, and which he hopes to make a memorable one. He will return to Birmingham about the middle of January, where he may be addressed in care of the Alabama Christian Advocate. Brother Bowen says he is "well pleased with his appointment, and that his work has opened with the promise of large results."

The following clipping from the Yazoo Herald, is a deserved tribute to the faithfulness and efficiency of a man whose habit it is to do good work: "Rev. J. E. Gray, who for two years has been pastor of the Methodist Churches at Benton, Midway and Tranquill, passed through Yazoo City Wednesday on his way to Fayette, where he was assigned for the next year as pastor of that church. The Herald commends Mr. Gray to the good people of that section as a man and minister with whom they will be delighted. He is one of the best young preachers of the Conference."

From our good friends of the University Training School at Oxford, the Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, came friendly words of greeting and good wishes a few days since. Mrs. Wyatt is a sister of Senator Gore, of Oklahoma, and one of the most brilliant women in Mississippi. Brother Wyatt is a worthy Christian gentleman, whom everybody loves, and who has accomplished a vast amount of good in the work of the ministry. It is pleasing to know that this noble couple yet hold us in remembrance, and we pray that heaven's choicest blessings may be showered upon them through all the days to come.

Rev. W. G. Harbin, of Haynesville, La., who is widely and favorably known as an evangelist throughout Louisiana and the States adjacent, is at present taking a needed and well-earned rest. He will resume his labors about March 1, and will have with him during the months of June, July, and August, Rev. D. B. Boddie, now at Centenary College, who will direct the personal work. Brother Harbin has already made a number of dates for 1911, but yet has some time unengaged. Those desiring his services would do well to write him at once. He is a brilliant preacher, and a revivalist whom the Lord honors and uses.

While passing through Lexington, Miss., en route home last Friday, it was our very great pleasure to spend a few minutes in the parsonage which is now occupied by the Rev. and Mrs. T. H. Lipscomb and their two interesting little sons. We counted ourselves fortunate in being privileged to greet again these friends, who so often sheltered us when we were a weary itinerant burdened with the cares of the great Delta District of the North Mississippi Conference. It is scarcely needful to say that Brother Lipscomb has made a fine impression in his new field. He is one of the truest and manliest, as well as one of the most capable, young ministers of our acquaintance, and the people of Holmes County's capital city are highly favored in having him to serve them.

From the Jackson Daily News of December 29th we take the following: "In the presence of a large and fashionable assembly that filled the Methodist Church at Hazlehurst, Miss., to overflowing, the marriage of Miss Kathleen Sexton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Sexton, to First Lieutenant Robert Kent Spiller, of the United States Army, took place at 6 o'clock last evening. The prominence and popularity of the contracting parties attracted scores of guests from other cities and States, and the occasion was one of State-wide interest. The ceremony was marked by impressive simplicity and stateliness as befitting the high social standing of the gallant young officer and his beautiful bride, and the eminence of two of the foremost families of Mississippi and Virginia, who were thus so happily united."

Mr. James David Tillman, Jr., of Carrollton, Miss., and Miss Anne Sigismunda Hamilton were married at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Moore Taylor Hamilton, in Meridian, Miss., at high noon on January 3d. Mrs. Tillman is a young lady of many attractions and accomplishments, and has a wide circle of friends and admirers in east Mississippi. The groom belongs to one of the oldest and most substantial families in Carroll County (of the same State), and is a most superior young man in every respect. He is a graduate of Millsaps College, possesses a high order of business capacity, and is thoroughly exemplary in his life and character. The editor acknowledges the reception of an invitation to the wedding, and wishes the young couple great happiness and success.

At the residence of the bride's parents, at Adair, Miss., on the afternoon of Christmas day, Dr. N. D. Kittrell and Miss Emmie Lee, were united in marriage, Rev. R. A. Meek officiating. Mrs. Kittrell is a daughter of Mr. Jesse Lee, one of the leading citizens of Carroll County, and is a young lady of intellectuality and many noble traits of character. The groom is a nephew of Dr. B. F. Kittrell, who stood in the forefront of the medical profession in Mississippi for many years, and a son of Dr. R. N. Kittrell, who was an honor man at the University of Mississippi in the class of 1882, and who won the Founder's Medal in the Medical Department of Vanderbilt University. The happy couple will reside at Black Hawk, Miss., where Dr. Kittrell is engaged in the practice of medicine.

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over two hundred words in length will be published free of charge. All over two hundred words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around.

JOSEPHUS McEAVEN died Nov. 10, 1910, in Johnston Station, Miss. He leaves a father, mother, two brothers, four sisters, a wife, five daughters, one son and a large circle of friends to mourn his sad death. "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

"A precious one from us is gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled."

JOSEPHINE.

Mrs. KATE KELLEY left her home near Harrisville, Miss., Nov. 5, 1910, aged 54 years, for that home prepared for the people of God. She was converted at the age of 15, and joined the Methodist Church. I was her pastor two years, and found her true to God, and loyal to the Church. She leaves a husband, one son, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. She was ready to go, and we know where to find her, at the right hand of the Father.

R. T. NOLEN.

Saturday, Dec. 9, 1910, little DOROTHY, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. C. B. Powell, was called to the better land. She was a beautiful and happy child, 11 months old—dear not only to the members of her family, but to all in the community. She was only ill a few days, but all that loving hands and medical skill could do, was done to keep her with us, but the Lord had need of the little flower. Rev. R. W. Harper, of Natchitoches, conducted the funeral services at the Methodist Church. He spoke touchingly and lovingly, using as a text the words of David, "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." That the sympathy and love of the entire community were with Brother Powell and his family, was shown by a church full of reverent, tearful faces. We know she will always be missed from the family circle. There is comfort in the thought that dear little Dorothy never will know or hear what is wrong and the loving angels will teach her their song.

A FRIEND.

Mrs. NANCIE CORNELIA McKENZIE, wife of W. A. McKenzie, and daughter of Allen and Sarah Travis, was born Oct. 15, 1865, and died Oct. 16, 1910, aged 45 years and 1 day. She was the youngest of a large family of children. Her mother died when she was very young. She became the pet of all the family, but her nature was one that could not be spoiled. She was so kind and gentle, ever ready to do something for every one. The care of her home and five children prevented her from visiting her neighbors often, socially, but she was always ready to visit them in time of sickness and trouble. I have known her from childhood and I never knew a nobler and purer-hearted Christian woman. She spent her life in caring for other people. She was sick nine weeks with typhoid fever, but was patient and uncomplaining. Her loved ones and friends prayed that she might be spared to them, but her mission was filled. God knew best. He wanted her in heaven. She leaves a husband, five children, four brothers and four sisters and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Weep not dear ones, but let us live so we will meet where there is no parting.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

THE ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE.

Preparations for the Fourth Ecumenical Methodist Conference, which will be the great event in the Methodist world in 1911, are well under way. It is to meet in Toronto, Canada, Oct. 4-17, 1911. The program has been completed, and the essays and addresses divided between the Eastern and Western sections.

The Fourth Conference will differ from its predecessors in several particulars.

First, it will embrace the two Sundays as well as the week days. Second, it will provide for platform meetings Sunday afternoons. Third, it will present four sermons besides the opening sermon, which will be preached by the Rev. Henry Haigh, President-elect of the British Wesleyan Conference, the honor of the selection falling according to precedent to the section which does not entertain the Conference.

The Sunday afternoon addresses will deal with popular subjects in a popular way. The sermons may be expected to illustrate the character of good Methodist preaching in the Old World and the New.

The topics are all of vital character, such as concern the Methodism of to-day and not that of the dead past. Both the British and the Western Committee agree that the academic and merely historical shall have no place in the Conference, which is to represent the Methodism of 1911 as it faces its world tasks. The practical concerns of the Church are to have wider attention than in any previous Conference.

The Executive and Program Committees of the Western section each gave, during Christmas week, a full day to business carefully prepared for it. The Program Committee selected persons to prepare the sermons, essays, and invited addresses falling to the Western section, and also appointed those who are to preside over half of the sessions of the Conference.

It is now definitely known that these American Methodist Churches will be represented in the Conference: The Methodist Episcopal, 130 delegates; the Methodist Episcopal, South, 68 delegates; the Methodist of Canada, 24 delegates; the African Methodist Episcopal, 21 delegates; the African Methodist Episcopal Zion, 20 delegates; the Methodist Protestant, 9 delegates; the Colored Methodist Episcopal, 9 delegates; and the United Evangelical, 3 delegates; also several bodies entitled to one delegate each.

The 300 delegates of the Western section will include upwards of forty Bishops and general superintendents, and will represent not only the United States and its possessions and the broad provinces of Canada, but many foreign fields, practically all the continents.

The Conference as an official body will consist of 500 delegates, of whom 200 will come from England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, France, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa.

Of the Executive Committee, consisting of twenty-one members, the following attended the recent meetings: Bishops Hamilton and Cranston, Drs. W. E. Conner, N. Luccock, T. E. Fleming, C. B. Spencer and H. K. Carroll, Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Drs. H. M. DuBose, T. N. Ivey, and B. F. Lipscomb, and Mr. John R. Pepper, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; Dr. A. Carman, General Superintendent, and the Hon. Justice MacLaren, of the Methodist Church, of Canada; Dr. F. T. Little, of the Methodist Protestant Church; Bishop C. S. Smith, Bishop A. Walters, and Bishop C. H. Phillips, of the African, African Zion and Colored Methodist Episcopal Churches, respectively, and Bishop U. F. Swengel, of the United Evangelical Church. Mr. T. T. Fishburne, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was kept at home by a painful accident, a dislocated wrist. Prior engagements accounted for the absence of other members, including ex-Vice-President Fairbanks.

It is expected that the next meeting of the Committees will be held early in March. H. K. CARROLL, Sec.

WOMAN'S BEAUTY

A woman's beauty is dependent on her health. To keep her beauty, she must keep her health. Sickness and suffering leave their trace, pain leaves its marring-imprint. Ladies have come to realize that to be beautiful and attractive they must give attention to physical fitness and health.

Countless women suffer from ailments designated generally as "female complaint," thinking it is the natural lot of their sex to suffer.

This is a mistaken belief. Nature invariably has a cure for her children's ills. Thousands of women have found permanent relief for their sufferings by using that natural, herbal medicine,—Wine of Cardui. Cardui is a pure, non-intoxicating remedy, specifically for women, which has grown steadily in favor during the past fifty years. Letters pour in every day, expressing the gratitude of the writers, who have been relieved of their misery and restored to health.

When you are nervous or sick, get Cardui from your druggist, and try it.

N. B. Upon request, we will send you, free of charge, our valuable, illustrated 64 page book "Home Treatment for Women." In it you will find valuable information regarding the treatment of female troubles.

COMMENDATORY RESOLUTIONS.

(Adopted by the Presbyterians and other residents of the town of De Kalb, Miss.)

Whereas, Rev. R. H. Barr has been the very efficient pastor of the Methodist Church in our town for the past three years; and whereas, he has been a strong factor in helping to promote every worthy cause in the town and surrounding country, and exerting a powerful influence against all evils; and whereas, we regard him as able a preacher and as good a citizen as we have ever had in our town; and whereas, under the government of the M. E. Church, South, he will not be permitted to return for the ensuing year; therefore, be it resolved: First, That we take this opportunity of expressing to him our appreciation of his most valuable services as a preacher and pastor, and of thanking him for his influence as an earnest, consecrated, Christian gentleman.

Second, That we regret to have him leave our town, and that we assure him and his estimable family that our best wishes and prayers for their usefulness and success will go with them.

Third, That we commend him to the people of his new charge as being worthy and able to fill with honor the place assigned to him.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent him, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and The Kemper-Herald Star.

Dec. 25, 1910.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING.

Dear Brother Meek: Please publish the following: The District Stewards and Sunday school superintendents and lay leaders of the Aberdeen and Corinth Districts will meet in Tupelo, Feb. 1-2. Bishop McCoy will preach the opening sermon the night of Feb. 1. A Sunday School Round Table will be under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of the Young Men's Bible Class, Corinth. As you know, Miss Kilpatrick has been employed by the Sunday School Board of the North Mississippi Conference as secretary. A happy selection, indeed. While most of her work will be done from her office, she will go not a little into the open field. We are also expecting our own J. R. Bingham there to lead the laymen. Again, I must say, a happy selection. Brother Jacob and myself agreed to this union meeting, and Tupelo unanimously agreed to care for us—and we all ask that the editor of our Conference organ be present, and promise him a place and a hearing.

I hereby take the liberty of inviting all the presiding elders of the Conference to meet with us. Come, brethren, and let us join in planning for a campaign such as North Mississippi has never known, looking to revivals, Sunday school work, and meeting our larger obligations as laymen.

Cordially, JAMES H. FELTS.
Aberdeen, Miss.

NOTICE.

The District Stewards will meet at the Methodist Church, in Gibsland, Jan. 20, at 1:30 p. m. Let all be present. The pastors are invited to come.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

Tidings from the Field

Second Church, New Orleans:

Since I will not have the pleasure of saying "au revoir" face to face, I send this note: We leave New Orleans Tuesday, Dec. 27, for our new home in Arcadia, La. We have had so many tokens of appreciation from the Arcadians that we are already delighted with our new charge, even before we reach it. But it is not easy to tear oneself away from such kind people as these Second Church folk. They surprised us with a nice fat purse on last Thursday night. You may depend on my securing subscribers for the Advocate. A happy New Year to you! Your brother—A. Inman Townsley.

Nettleton Circuit:

We were returned to this charge for another year. We have been heartily received. We have some as true and loyal people here as can be found anywhere else. Our congregations at every point (Shilo excepted) have been good, and a fine spirit is prevailing. The good ladies of the Carolina community remembered us most kindly Christmas, a large box arriving in ample time to supply the parsonage with a variety of good things to eat, so that we did not have to leave home to have a good Christmas dinner. They have our sincere thanks. This charge has some possibilities before it. The lands are fertile and the people know how to manage and are abreast with the times. The young people compare favorably with those of any other community. Three of our young men are in school at Millsaps. Two of our girls at Grenada, and there are others who ought to go. Upon the whole, Mr. Editor, we are pleased with our charge, and we pray that this may be a good year for us all here, and that many who are not saved may be brought to our Lord and his Christ.—Thos. E. Yancey.

Second Church, Memphis:

Will you please say in the Advocate that I would be glad to receive the names of any Methodists who may move to Memphis, so that I may look after them, or may tell other Methodist preachers in the city, and we will try to take care of all who come? I have met a very cordial reception here; on the night of the 15 my congregation gave a reception in the church parlors in our honor, and it was attended by a large number of the members and friends of the church. On this occasion, there were welcome addresses from the Board of Stewards, Ladies' Aid, Foreign and Home Mission Societies, Sunday school and Epworth League. This is a great field here. I miss the association of the North Mississippi boys and will not soon get used to being separated from them. I love the preachers of North Mississippi very devotedly, and only gave my consent to leave in answer to what seemed to be a call to a larger field. I ask the earnest prayers of all the brethren that while I labor in this city I may make myself felt as a power for righteousness. I lead no paper, of course, with so much pleasure as the New Orleans Advocate. The work begins well here, and my people seem to be enthusiastic for a great year. Pray for us.—Robt. A. Clark.

Fort Barrancas, Florida:

Under another cover I am sending you programs of our Christmas tree and Christmas services, and I take advantage of the opportunity to wish for you and all your readers a happy and prosperous New Year. Since my return from Conference at Sardis, I have held a meeting among the men of this post, which resulted in about twenty conversions. The interest in our work here is growing and we hope to be able to do much good. I really had a great time at Conference this year. Last year I was such a stranger and seemed to be so out of touch with things in the Conference that I felt very much like an orphan, but this year I was better acquainted and got more into the heart of things and felt more at home. In all my wanderings I have found no body of men that appeared to measure up to the best standards more fully than the men composing the dear old North Mississippi Conference. I hope to be with them at Macon next year and to meet a number of them at the Seashore next summer. We are having deal weather here. All this morning we have been enjoying the fresh air and sunshine on our front porch. Our son, Dr. V. P. Randolph, is spending the holidays with us. This is the first time that he and I have both been at home at Christmas in thirteen years. Again wishing for you and the Advocate and the Advocate readers a great year in 1911, I am, fraternally yours.—John A. Randolph.

Ruleville, Miss.:

We are moving on smoothly. I wish you a happy New Year and many returns of it. All of my officials take the Advocate except three. I guess I will put Ruleville on the "Honor Roll" soon. This makes 81 subscribers and renewals I have sent in in 1910. I have received 71 members since June the 1st on profession and by letter. My people are delighted with the New Orleans Christian Advocate.—O. J. L. Savage.

IT HELPS THE ORPHANAGE.

I am more than pleased to state that the portion of the proceeds which the Louisiana Orphanage has received from the sale of Mrs. C. C. Miller's book, AL-ETHE-IA, has already amounted to $33.00. This is very gratifying and shows a remarkable sale of this deservedly popular book. Of course the portion that comes to the Orphanage from the sale of this book has become available only after the cost of the book is met. Now that the book is on the market and the cost of publication has been covered, the Orphanage will constantly derive benefit from the sale of the book. Besides the fact that the book in itself is worth the small cost of twenty-five cents, all the friends of humanity should purchase and read the book, for with each sale a portion comes to the Orphanage. It is hoped that every Methodist in the State, as well as the friend to temperance and humanity, will purchase and read this very interesting booklet.

Sincerely,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

A WARNING TO PREACHERS.

One Wm. Long, claiming to be a local preacher in good standing, and traveling from place to place with his family, is an impostor.

A letter from a presiding elder of the M. E. Church, in Oakland, Md., states that his license to preach expired two years ago, and that he has systematically worked the East and Middle West.

He passed through this section a short time ago and "worked" some cash from us with a story that is absolutely false.

OUR RELATIONSHIP TO GOD. (Rom. v, 8-10; iv, 25.)

If men thought more upon God's relationship to them, they would be more easily won to their right relationship to him, for God had a profoundly close relationship to us long ages before it even dawned upon man that there was a God. Look at that baby in the cradle there. It has no conscious relationship to any person. But look at the young father standing by the cradle in the pride of his first flush of parenthood. Literally, every atom of his being is pledged to the tiny, helpless form before him. Henceforth the toil of his brain, the skill of his hand, and the thought of his heart can have no wider sweep than the circle in which moves the life of that little child. And that is a copy of the relationship that God claims with all his children of men everywhere.

"Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." What a tenderly encouraging assurance to the dawning consciousness of sonship! "God so loved the world." No need to go farther. His affection for man was a fact, existing before and independently of any slightest response on the part of man to his kindness. And his heart throbs drive the lifeblood through the arteries of the inhabitants of a world—a world of weak and strong, of near and remote, of vicious and refined. And he believes to see the travail of his soul and be satisfied. Thus has God's eternal thoughtfulness of man been unmistakably declared by a gift whose worth the world may never fully understand.

The Place of Christ in Our Relationship to God. The gift referred to in the last paragraph must be understood to be that element which completes and fulfills our relationship to God because it fulfills and completes his relationship to us. Jesus Christ is God's love articulate in a person, and he is a person not of commandment or of judgment or of revenge, but of companionship in suffering and in shame, in victory and in glory. Jesus described himself as "the way, the truth, and the life," as "the light of the world," as "the bread of life." He declared: "I lay down my life of myself. * * * And I take it up again." But the significance of all these descriptive phrases is made fully clear in the simple affirmation: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Of a like import is the quiet assurance: "He that receiveth me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me." Through the lawgiver, the prophet, and the poet God sent us messages. But Jesus is the express image of his person. The Father shows us God and bring us word from God. He shows us God. He brings God within the reach of these lame hands of faith of ours. He brings "our world-deafened ear" into tuneful agreement with the tones of his life-giving voice. In his name does our very being ascend in the scale of values until it is worthy to enjoy sonship with the eternal Father.

Tokens of His Friendship.—The eternal Father makes appeal to our power of appreciation by bestowing upon us rich gifts. When the power kindles and flames a response, communication between the Father and his child has been sealed. Thus God unfolds the landscape before us, with its exalted temples of wooded hills, its sloping valleys with verdure of green grass and shining water courses that unwind themselves into the wide-ness of the sea. He flings upon his canvas at the end of day pictures whose colors are traced in molten gold and flaming crimson and amethyst and pearl, with framing of shattered cloud fragments and the light upon them that "never was on sea or land."

"The spacious firmament on high, With all the blue, ethereal sky And spangled heavens, a shining frame, Their great Original proclaim."

He also makes his "paths drop fatness" until the harvest whitens under the hands of too few laborers.

Consider candidly also the endowments with which God has invested our personality. In making us able to know, God declares that there are no mysteries too sacred to be investigated. In making us able to feel, he claims our allegiance to the highest reaches of his affection. In making us able to decide, he displays the utmost respect for our power of judgment, and imposes in us a confidence that is sublime as well as also uplifting.

God does not stop with merely praising us thus highly. He seeks our fellowship in work. He deliberately gives us a garden to tend and a city to build and a truth to tell. He shows us an ideal of good to be attained and purposefully defers the fulfillment of the plan to the earnestness and persistence of our soul struggles. "Workers together with him" describes the relation into which every man is first invited to enter.

Friendship With God.—This is the goal to which our relationship to God ought to bring us. After having provided so many things for our enjoyment, after having created us with such enlarging capacities, after having committed so much of fateful importance to our management, what has he the right to expect of us?

Certainly he greatly desires that we trust him. He invites us to confide in him. He wants us to tell him all that is in our hearts. Our confidence in him ought to be as complete as his confidence in us is absolute. When this attitude of the soul is attained, there is no concealment of sin; there is no covering up of purpose; there is no pretense or fraud; there is no selfish enjoyment of anything that is good. But we take God into our confidence even as we do the trusted friend, and into our souls there flow the strengthening impulses of his loving heart.

This closer union of our souls with his causes us to hold God in ever-increasing reverence. Familiarity with him never breeds contempt, because, as we have seen, he carefully guards the relationship against the slightest suggestion of improper interference on his part. And the clearer revelation of his purpose and his presence only serves to create in us feelings of unworthiness and to create in us stronger aspirations after the lofty and the worthy virtues. God accepts with pity the homage that fear inspires. He welcomes with keenest pleasure the closer approach of his child, because he knows that only admiration and deepening reverence can draw a soul to himself.

And trust and reverence insure loyalty.

"To rise and take his part Upon this battlefield of earth" is what friendship with God enables one to do. To know his purpose and support it; to know his will and live to make that will effective; to renounce what he disapproves; to practice what he prescribes—that is loyalty. To obey without understanding but because there is love for the One who gives the commandment—that is loyalty. To fight to "the last ditch," never to give up the ship, to "keep the faith"—that is loyalty.

"To him that overcometh, to him will I give to eat of the tree of life."—Epworth Era.

LESSON FOR JANUARY 8, 1911.

JEROBOAM MAKES IDOLS FOR ISRAEL TO WORSHIP.

I Kings xii, 25.

Golden Text: Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image. Ex. xx, 4.

The Lesson Briefly Told.

- I. Shechem and Peniel, 28.
- II. Jeroboam's fear, 26-27.
- III. The golden calves, 28-30.
- IV. Other institutions, 31-33.

Jeroboam's first work after being made king over the ten northern tribes was to strengthen his kingdom by fortifying Shechem and Peniel, and his next was to strengthen his kingdom by establishing places of worship within his own territory. He feared that if the people continued to worship at the temple in Jerusalem they would return to their allegiance to Jerusalem's king, Rehoboam. Therefore he had two golden calves made and set up at the two extremes of his land, Bethel on the south and Dan on the north, and said to his people: "It is too far for you to go to Jerusalem to worship; worship God in these calves of God." Moreover, he built sanctuaries on many hilltops, selected priests, not from the tribe of Levi, but from other tribes, changed the date of the feast of Tabernacles from the seventh to the eighth month, and himself offered sacrifices upon the altar.

Though Jeroboam was warned by an unknown prophet of Judah (I K. 13) and later also by the prophet Ahijah (I K. 14), he returned not from his evil way. And his name in the annals of the kings of Israel is ever afterwards coupled with the words "who made Israel to sin."

Jeroboam's sin. The papers recently contained an account of a very singular "case." A young woman who has never had typhoid fever, and seems herself to be in perfect health, has been taken to a New York hospital for observation as a "human culture-tube," or "typhoid-germ factory." The typhoid germs in her system, which cause her no disturbance are giving that dread disease to others. So Jeroboam, though himself at this time free from the sin of idolatry, was nevertheless inoculating others with germs that were destined to increase in virulence till fifty years later a temple to the heathen god Baal arose in his kingdom and his people became corrupted by that dread sin.

There are many sins of which Jeroboam's record in this lesson shows that he was guilty; selfishness, hypocrisy, yielding principles to policy, unfaithfulness to duty, lack of religious perception—but he was not consciously an idolater; he would have repelled the thought of worshipping Baal with horror. He did not intend to present a false god for his people to worship—he did not break the first commandment: like Aaron he intended to represent the true God by symbols—he broke the second commandment. He gave the people a conception of God that made it easy for them to degrade him to a level with the god of the Semitic people akin to them, and their downward course from true worship to the worst forms of idolatry naturally followed.

Jeroboam's Images and the Images in Catholic Churches.

This is the Decree of the Council of Trent; The Holy Synod declares, That the images of Christ, of the virgin mother of God, and of other saints, are to be had and retained especially in churches, and that due honor and veneration are to be shown them; not that it is believed that any divinity, or virtue, is inherent in them, on account of which they are to be worshipped, or that anything is to be asked of them, or that trust is to be placed in images, as of old was done by the Gentiles, who placed their hope in idols; but because the honor which is shown them is referred to the prototypes which they represent; so that through the images which we kiss, and before which we uncover our heads, and fall down, we may adore Christ and venerate the saints whose likeness the images bear.

The true nature of idolatry is brought out in the incident. The true object of worship was idol worship. It necessarily degraded the conception of Jehovah. It brought sense into dangerous prominence as an aid to worship. The symbol might at first, and to the more devout, be a mere symbol, and transparent, but it would soon become opaque, and from symbol turn to embodiment, and thence pass to being the very deity represented. It is a feat of abstraction impossible for the ordinary man, to worship before an idol and not to worship the idol.

The Historical Background.

There was a mixture of good and evil in Rehoboam. After the division of his kingdom he listened to the advice of the prophets, and prospered for a time, building and fortifying many cities. According to one record, "there was war between Rehoboam continually, and in the fifth year of Rehoboam's reign the Egyptian king, Shishak invaded Jerusalem, despoiled the temple, taking away the shields of gold so that they had to be replaced with shields of brass, and shattered Rehoboam's power. The cause is pointed out by the prophet Shemaiah: Thus saith Jehovah, ye have forsaken me, therefore have I left you in the hand of Shishak. An illustration shows the colossal figure of Shishak with many captive kings. One has a Jewish countenance and is believed to represent Rehoboam in his humiliation. In long rows is given a list of the conquered Palestinian cities. Rehoboam reigned seventeen years, and was succeeded by his son, Abijah.

Our lesson takes up the fortunes of the Northern Kingdom soon after the separation, and tells about Jeroboam's policy of government.

The Geographical Background.

Jeroboam made Shechem his capital, but he soon removed to Tirzah, a few miles northeast of Shechem, I K. xiv, 17; xv, 21-33. Peniel was east of the Jordan on the northern bank of the river Jabbok, probably on a caravan road leading through Gilead to Damascus, and therefore Jeroboam fortified it against attack. It is mentioned in Gen. xxxii, 31 and Judges viii, 8.

Bethel was near the southern border of Jeroboam's kingdom, ten miles north of Jerusalem. Here Abramam and Jacob had worshipped, Gen. xii, 8; xiii, 3; xxviii, 11-19; xxxv, 9-15, and it had been the home of the prophet Samuel, I Sam. vii, 16. Its name, which means "House of God," was given it by Jacob.

Dan was in the extreme northern end of Jeroboam's kingdom, near one of the sources of the Jordan. It had been a "holy city" in the time of the Judges; a graven image there was worshipped under the offices of a Levitical priest, a grandson of Moses (Judges xviii, 26-31.)—Tarbell's Teacher's Guide.

DISTRICT STEWARDS' MEETING, GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

The District Steward's and Preacher's Meeting of the Greenville District will meet in Cleveland, Thursday, at 2 p. m., Jan. 12, and adjourn at noon of the following day. The first matter of the program will be the business of the District Stewards. After this is concluded, we will have such discussions of the work before the pastors and laymen as may be outlined in the full program. It is very important that each charge in the district be represented by its district steward, and in default of this, I hope that the pastor will have some other member of his church to attend the meeting. Of course, we will expect each pastor of the district to be present. W. W. WOOLLARD, P. E.

FROM A TEXAS LAYMAN.

Dear Dr. Meek:

I write to thank you for that splendid, very appropriate editorial on Bishop Mouzon, in your issue of Dec. 15th. I think I said to you at Asheville, N. C., last May when we were discussing men with a view of finding chief pastors, that Dr. Mouzon was in every way qualified to fill the office of Bishop, and I am glad to see your unqualified endorsement of him as a member of the Episcopal College. I love Mouzon, though I did not support him for his high office because of friendship, but because I felt the Church needed men of his ilk to superintend her affairs. All Texas, where he is so beloved and well known, will appreciate your commendation of our Texas Bishop. I failed to meet our other Bishop whom we also discussed at Asheville, when he was holding Texas Conferences. I had planned to visit the Texas Conference at Galveston, but much to my regret, was prevented. I hear all the Texas Conferences held by Bishop Murrah were delighted with his presidency. Bishop Mouzon, in speaking of Bishop Murrah recently, was lavish in his praise of him, and especially did he commend his sound, robust judgment.

Wishing you a happy holiday season and a prosperous New Year, I am, your friend and brother,

V. M. WEST.

Editorial

Not how much we pray, but the genuineness of our prayer, is the important question. There is no merit in mere quantity of utterance. It is when the heart speaks that God hears.

A revival is not a miracle which God occasionally works. It always comes when the right conditions exist, just as the rain falls when the producing causes are properly in operation. In bringing it about both the Holy Spirit and man have a part. What is required on the divine side, the Heavenly Father stands ever ready to do. The needed quickening waits on the requisite human co-operation. As the old preachers were wont to express it, "God's set time to favor Zion, is when Zion is ready to be favored."

Referring to the increasing triumph of medical science over disease, Dr. Osler, the noted physician, has coined what some seem to regard as a new phrase—"man's redemption of man." But in reality there is nothing new or novel in the thought. The atonement on Calvary was made by one who was truly a Man, and the recovering agencies that it set in motion were committed into the hands of men. Human beings have been toiling to uplift their fellow creatures in a striking manner ever since the inauguration of the Christian era. And the more extended becomes the kingdom of Christ, the more we shall see people exerting themselves in behalf of others.

Integrity is the crown and glory of manhood. One who possesses it, has the most essential thing; and one who lacks it, is poverty-stricken, no matter what may be his other qualities. Not brilliancy, not kindness of heart, not thrift or success, but "faithfulness"—truthfulness—will be commended by the Infinite Judge on the last great day. Robert E. Lee was not far afield when he said, "The sublimest word in the English Language is duty," and Pope did not miss it much when he sang, "An honest man's the noblest work of God." The true work of Christianity is to make men and women upright in thought, purpose, and action. Above all else, the disciples of Christ should be straight-forward and dependable.

"Give them a chance and see what they can become." So said Miss Lydia Holman in speaking of the mountain people of Western North Carolina to whom she is freely giving her life in unselfish service. She believes in the possibilities of those to whom she ministers, despite their present state of illiteracy and spiritual destitution. Such hopefulness has been characteristic of all the great workers in the Master's kingdom. We need faith in humanity, as well as in God. The transforming power of the Holy Spirit can do much even for the wrecks of the race. Having ourselves been exalted by the gospel, let us not conclude that it cannot lift up others. What it did for the fishermen of Galilee and the lowly ones, who found their way into the presence of our Lord, it can yet accomplish.

PROVIDING FOR THE PREACHER.

As this is the time when assessments are being made for ministerial support, it may not be amiss to make a few remarks on the subject. It is of the utmost importance that the men charged with the spiritual oversight of our congregations shall be adequately provided for, in order that they may be free from financial care and enabled to concentrate their attention upon the great work to which they have been called. A preacher who is disturbed by outstanding obligations, or who has to do other things to supplement his salary, is not in a position to render the best service of which he is capable. From the very nature of his occupation, a clergyman who endeavors to keep abreast of the age and maintain his efficiency needs more money than the average man. A servant of the public, he must have a telephone that he may be readily accessible, if he lives where that modern convenience is in use, or if his membership is scattered through the country, he must have means of conveyance to get about among his people. The merchant or farmer may do without books and magazines if he wishes to, but not so the minister. He must read, or soon lose his freshness of thought and become a mossback. These necessary facilities for work are expensive and make heavy drafts upon the meager stipend of the itinerant.

And another thing which should be taken into consideration now is the increased cost of living. Not in decades have the essential articles of food commanded such high prices. Two dollars at present will not purchase much more than one would a few years ago. This skyward march of indispensable commodities is most keenly felt by salaried men—the class to which preachers belong. The truth is, the most important considerations urgently demand that our ministers shall be better paid; and we trust that the stewards in every charge where the provision is not manifestly ample, will seriously and prayerfully review the situation and see if a more liberal assessment cannot be imposed. We are convinced that in many places our people are not doing their best. On the train a few days since a brother told us of having served a circuit of 850 members, which assessed for him $500, and came pretty near paying it. A worthy and consecrated man, he was not complaining; he seemed to think that his people had done very well. But such is not our opinion. We know something of the citizenship of that community, and we entertain no doubt that if our membership there had half tried, they could have raised for their faithful pastor twice as much. Not a few of our churches need to enlarge their vision when it comes to money matters. Many a zealous Methodist is too much tinctured with the old "Hardshell" doctrine of a free gospel. A paying conscience would mightily improve the piety of some saints.

Nor should the preacher be made to wait until the end of the year for his money. Such a course of procedure is a grave injustice and entails annoyances and embarrassments which frequently are of a serious nature. It is sometimes said, "Many of the people live on a credit; let the pastor do like wise." The trouble about that is that the pastor is usually differently circumstanced from the laymen who make up his flock. Often he is a stranger in the community without credit and has no collateral to put up. He has no growing crop that he can mortgage. To set him adrift to make his own arrangements for a living under such conditions, is a hardship which no board of stewards should allow to be inflicted. On the contrary, they should furnish him with enough money to meet his necessary current expenses when possible, and when they cannot do this, they should seek to effect some plan by which his needs can be supplied and the people held responsible. There are no truer, nobler men than Methodist preachers, and it behooves the churches to which they devote their lives to care for them properly, and in a manner which does not outrage their sense of self-respect.

A SUGGESTIVE UTTERANCE.

Bishop John C. Kilgo, at one of his recent Annual Conferences, made the following thought-provoking statement:

"I have had many letters recently about preachers and charges, but nobody has written me about the poor little country circuit. And yet this same country circuit is the most favorable field we have for effective evangelism. It furnishes practically all of our pulpits with preachers; and even our great city churches are largely recruited from the ranks of those who have been converted at its altars and brought up in the pure and wholesome atmosphere of its godly homes. Why is it, then, that nobody seems to be seeking the rural charge? And why is it that the position of the circuit rider is not generally regarded as one of honor? To be sure, his work is not attractive from a worldly point of view. It carries with it no earthly emoluments. It means, as a general rule, a life of poverty and self-sacrifice. But, then, is not the ideal of the Christian ministry one of service and self-giving? And does not our Lord teach that the place of honor in his church is not the conspicuous place, but the place where one may most effectively give up one's life for the good of others? Can it be possible that the church is unconsciously permitting itself to be dominated by the world spirit, that she has so far lost the spirit of heroism that she is inclined to look upon the man who for the love of Christ and the love of humanity is willing to live in poverty and obscurity and to endure hardness as a good soldier, as an amiable lunatic?"

The question of the rights of Protestants in Ireland in case that country should be given "home rule," is again to the front in British politics. Mr. John E. Redmond, chairman of the Irish parliamentary party, published in the London papers a few days since a lengthy communication in which he assured the public that the interests of non-Catholics would be adequately safeguarded. If they are, it will have to be done by the strong arm of the law. The Romish Church of to-day is little less intolerant than that of preceding centuries. Of all the organizations on earth, it has been the most unchanging.

BILL OF INJUNCTION FILED BY THE BISHOPS IN THE VANDERBILT CASE.

In the Chancery Court of Davidson County, Tenn.

IV.

1. The incorporators reported their action to the several Annual Conferences above named, making a printed report, in which account was given and a report made of the Memphis convention, the resolutions adopted, the application for charter, and the incorporation of the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the request of the petitioners representing the several Annual Conferences therein set out. In addition, the incorporators, who by the charter were made the first Board of Trust, requested the nomination of four members by each Conference to constitute the Board of Trust, and the several Conferences took action as follows:

The Tennessee Conference, at the meeting in Nashville, Tennessee, held October 16-23, 1872, received the report of the Committee and took the following action:

"The report of the committee appointed at our last session to take into consideration the establishment of a university was taken from the table, and, on motion of L. C. Bryan, was received." (It is a large printed pamphlet.) On motion of Dr. A. L. P. Green, seconded by Dr. John B. McFerrin, the report, with alterations and amendments proposed by Dr. McFerrin, was unanimously adopted. The Bishop was requested to appoint an agent for Central University in the bounds of this Conference. J. F. Hughes moved that the same brethren be nominated on the Board of Trust who are already serving in that capacity: A. L. P. Green, D. C. Kelley, R. A. Young, E. H. East, Jordan Stokes and D. T. Reynolds."

This was done, and Dr. A. L. P. Green was appointed General Secretary of Central University by the presiding Bishop.

3. At the Memphis Conference, held at Somerville, Tennessee, November 20-25, 1872, the report was submitted by the following members of the committee appointed: W. C. Johnson, S. W. Moore, T. L. Boswell, R. J. Morgan, and the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved: 1. That, in the interest of the highest literary, scientific, and moral culture, under the influence of Christian principles, we heartily approve what has been done toward the establishment of the Central University.

"2. That we willingly co-operate with other Annual Conferences in efforts to secure $500,000, at least, as an endowment fund; and, with this object in view, we earnestly invoke the enlightened liberality of our members and friends.

"3. That we invite the Rev. Dr. Green, Treasurer of the Board of Trust, to visit our charges as he may be able, in behalf of the university; and request the Bishop to appoint an agent, to co-operate with him in canvassing for an endowment fund."

The above resolution was unanimously adopted, and the blank in the third resolution was, on motion, filled with the name of W. M. Patterson. Subsequently, the Conference nominated W. C. Johnson, S. W. Moore, R. J. Morgan, and Milton Brown "to represent the Memphis Conference on the Board."

4. At the White River Conference, session of 1872, the following resolution was adopted:

"That the presiding elders be appointed a committee to obtain funds for the Central University, by donation, subscription, or bequest, as occasion may offer; and also that we will kindly receive among us the Rev. Dr. Green, Financial Secretary for said university."

The Bishop presented the following names for confirmation by the Conference as nominees to the Board of Trust of Central University—to wit: John M. Steel, George Dannelly, James H. McFerrin, and J. W. Stayton, and they were unanimously selected.

5. The Arkansas Annual Conference at its thirty-seventh annual session, held at Bentonville, Arkansas, in 1872, adopted the following resolutions:

"1. That we express our decided approval of the Central University, and pledge ourselves to co-operate with other Annual Conferences for its establishment."

"2. That, as requested, we nominate four brethren to represent the Arkansas Conference on the Board of Trust under the provision of the charter already obtained by the Board of Trust.

"3. That we invite the Rev. A. L. P. Green, D. D., Treasurer of the Board of Trust, and any other appointees of the Board to visit our charges in their efforts to endow the Central University; and in this work we cordially commend them to our people and to all the friends of Christian education."

Four members of that Conference were nominated for membership in the Board of Trust.

6. The North Mississippi Conference, at its regular session, held on November 28, 1872, adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved: 1. That this Conference will co-operate with other Conferences interested in the same enterprise in establishing a university of the highest grade, to be called the Central University.

"2. That this Conference approve of the measures already taken by the existing Board of Trust, and do hereby confirm the same.

"3. That Philip Tuggle, L. C. Garland, T. Y. Ramsey and L. Q. C. Lamar are hereby appointed members of said Board of Trust.

"4. That the Bishop be respectfully requested to appoint an agent to solicit subscriptions to said institution within our bounds."

7. At the North Alabama Conference in its annual session, held at Tuscaloosa, Alabama, November 25, 1872, the following resolution was introduced:

"Resolved, That we regard the establishment of a central university in our Church as of the greatest importance, and that this Conference heartily concur in the movement as presented by Dr. Kelley, and nominate the following persons as representatives in the Board of Trust: G. D. Oliver, James M. Wright, John S. Davis, and J. W. Whitten.

Signed by "J. A. Thompson and J. M. Boland."

This resolution was finally laid upon the table, and the Conference adjourned without taking further action. The North Alabama Conference at its annual session, held at Huntsville, Alabama, on the 12th day of November, 1874, elected the following members to represent that Conference on the Board of Trust: C. D. Oliver, Anson West, Hon. W. B. Wood, J. J. Dument. And thus the North Alabama Conference was restored to and took its place as one of the patronizing Conferences of said university and as a member of said corporation, all the members assenting thereto.

8. And thus, by the action of the Conferences, the university, as incorporated, was adopted by the Conferences, and the members of the Board of Trust selected by them.

9. The Board of Trust thus selected by the several Annual Conferences as members of the corporation held their first meeting at Brownsville, Tennessee, on the 17th day of January, 1873, and adopted by-laws for the government of the corporation, the seventh by-law there adopted being as follows:

"VII. Each co-operating Conference being entitled to four members or representatives in the Board of Trust, should any vacancy or vacancies occur, the Board shall fill the same upon the nomination of the Conference to be represented."

This by-law remained in effect until the 3d of May, 1875, when, on motion of Judge East, the following by-law was adopted instead of By-Law No. VII, to-wit:

"Each co-operating Conference being entitled to four members or representatives in this Board of Trust, should any vacancy occur in the representation of any Conference, the same shall be filled upon the nomination of this Board to the Conference in which the vacancy occurred, and stand subject to its nomination."

Thus by both of the by-laws adopted by the Board of Trust there was recognition by the then members, who had themselves been chosen by the several patronizing Conferences, that the patronizing Conferences were the members of the corporation and had the right to select their representatives as the members of the Board of Trust, and that the Board of Trust was constituted and should remain constituted at all future times by members either nominated by the Board of Trust and confirmed by the Conferences, or, as expressed in the by-law adopted in 1875, upon the nomination by the Board to the Conferences.

V.

1. The Board of Trust selected as aforesaid met in January, 1873, and issued an address setting forth the organization of the corporation and the purposes as specified by the Memphis resolutions, and called for funds with which to endow the university. Through Bishop McTyeire, who presided at the Memphis convention and was thoroughly familiar with the plan and scope of the work, was presented to Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, of New York, and resulted in the latter's munificent gift, made in the following letter:

"New York, March 17, 1873.

To Bishop H. N. McTyeire, of Nashville:

"I make the following offer, through you, to the corporation known as The Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

"First.—I authorize you to procure suitable grounds, not less than from twenty to fifty acres, properly located for the erection of the following work:

"Second.—To erect thereon suitable buildings for the uses of the university.

"Third.—You to procure plans and specifications for such buildings, and submit them to me; and, when approved, the money for the foregoing objects to be furnished by me as it is needed.

"Fourth.—The sum included in the foregoing items, together with the 'endowment fund' and the 'library fund,' shall not be less in the aggregate than five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000), and these last two funds shall be furnished to the corporation so soon as the buildings for the university are completed and ready to be used.

"The foregoing being subject to the following conditions:

"First, That you accept the Presidency of the Board of Trust, receiving therefor a salary of three thousand dollars per annum and the use of a dwelling house, free of rent, on or near the university grounds.

"Second. Upon your death or resignation, the Board of Trust shall elect a President.

"Third. To check hasty or injudicious appropriations or measures, the President shall have authority, whenever he objects to any act of the Board, to signify his objections in writing within ten days after its enactment; and no such act is to be valid unless upon reconsideration it be passed by a three-fourths vote of the Board.

"Fourth. The amount set apart by me as an 'endowment fund' shall be forever inviolable, and shall be kept safely invested, and the interest and revenue only used in carrying on the university. The form of investment which I prefer, and in which I reserve the privilege to give the money for the said fund, is in seven per cent. first mortgage bonds of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, to be 'registered' in the name of the corporation, and to be transferred only upon a special vote of the Board of Trust.

"Fifth. The university is to be located in or near Nashville, Tennessee.

"Respectfully submitted, C. VANDERBILT."

2. This offer of Mr. Vanderbilt was on the 26th day of March, 1873, accepted by the Board, which passed the following resolutions:

"Whereas Mr. C. Vanderbilt, of New York, has offered, through Bishop H. N. McTyeire, to the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the munificent sum of five hundred thousand dollars; and

"Whereas the Bishop has this day presented to this Board, duly convened, the offer of Mr. C. Vanderbilt in writing; therefore,

"1. Resolved, That we accept with profound gratitude this donation, with all the terms and conditions specified in said proposition.

"2. Resolved, That as an expression of our appreciation of this liberality, we instruct the committee hereinafter mentioned to ask the honorable Chancery Court to change the name and style of our corporation from 'The Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South,' to 'Vanderbilt University,' and that the institution thus endowed and chartered shall be from henceforth known and called by this name.

"3. Resolved, That the Hon. M. Brown, the Hon. E. H. East, and the Rev. D. C. Kelley, D.D., be and they are hereby authorized and requested to obtain at the earliest practicable day such modifications of our charter as will enable this Board to conform its future operations to the conditions aforesaid.

"4. Resolved, That the Secretary is requested to convey to Mr. C. Vanderbilt the sincere thanks of this Board with a copy of these resolutions.

S. W. MOORE,

W. C. JOHNSON."

3. The action of the Board was satisfactory to Mr. Vanderbilt, who replied thereto on the 31st day of March, 1873, as follows:

"New York, March 31, 1873.

"D. C. Kelley, Esq., Secretary.

My Dear Sir: Your favor of the twenty-seventh inst., inclosing a resolution of the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, passed the twenty-sixth inst., is received and is very satisfactory.

"Very respectfully yours, C. VANDERBILT."

VI.

1. At the time of making this donation to the university Mr. Vanderbilt did not suggest any change in the charter or in the membership of the corporation or in the relation of the patronizing Conferences to the university; and the only change that was made or suggested at the time was that set forth in the resolutions above quoted—to-wit, to change the name of the university as an expression of appreciation of his liberality; and this suggestion emanated from the Board of Trust and was done, a copy of the petition to change the name and of the decree thereon being exhibited herewith as Exhibits "A" and "B."

2. The several patronizing Conferences, members of the corporation, confirmed the action of the Board of Trust in changing the name to Vanderbilt University.

(a) The North Mississippi Conference, at its annual session held at Grenada, Miss., on Nov. 29, 1873, at which time $10,000 was subscribed to Vanderbilt University. The following resolution was adopted:

"We rejoice in the high favor which the Vanderbilt University is receiving from the patronizing Conferences. The work of increasing its funds goes bravely on, and we look forward to its early opening with great expectation. It will furnish our people the highest scholastic training, as well as the most thorough preparation for any department of professional business. Its munificent proposition to devote the annual interest on $200,000 to the education of candidates for the ministry and ministers' sons must commend itself to the heartiest support and largest liberality of all our preachers as well as of our laymen. This large sum, sacred to this noble object, in connection with the Biblical Department, which we learn is to be one of the first established, must, we think, inaugurate a new era in our Church."

(b) At the thirty-eighth session of the Arkansas Conference the following resolution was adopted:

"We feel that it is proper for this Conference to express their appreciation of the munificent donation of $500,000 to Southern Methodism from Mr. Vanderbilt. We would deem it wise policy for this Conference to unite in raising the $200,000 asked for by the Vanderbilt University."

"Resolved, That we regard Dr. Winfield as our authorized agent for Vanderbilt University, and trust he will raise our portion of the $200,000."

(c) At the Memphis Conference, held at Jackson, Tenn., Dec. 1, 1873, after an address by the Rev. Dr. Young in behalf of Vanderbilt University, the following action was taken:

"The Rev. Dr. Young, secretary of the Vanderbilt University, made an address in behalf of that institution, at the close of which he received subscriptions to its endowment fund amounting to $5,000."

"Report No. 2 of the Committee on Education was presented, and having been read, was adopted. It strongly favors the Vanderbilt University."

That report is as follows:

"We offer the following resolutions in regard to our great educational enterprise, the Vanderbilt University:

"Resolved, 1. That we recognize with gratitude the signal success which has already attended our great educational enterprise, the Vanderbilt University, and we look with pleasure and hope upon the efforts being made to establish an institution of learning of the very highest grade and affording the amplest facilities to our young men in all departments of Christian education."

"2. That we do all in our power to sustain this most worthy enterprise, and will recommend it to the hearty and liberal support of our people."

"3. That we welcome among us and invite to our charges the Rev. Dr. Young, secretary of the Vanderbilt University."

(d) At the Tennessee Conference, at its meeting at Franklin, Tenn., Oct. 8-15, 1873, the following report was made by the Committee on Education:

"At your session two years since at Lebanon you had the wisdom to inaugurate a university scheme of the largest magnitude. We are glad to report to you that God our Father has given his approval in a very marked manner to your faith and zeal. What you then expected to accomplish only by long and persistent effort has been accomplished for you by the noble and opportune gift of Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt, amounting to $500,000. This act of unparalleled generosity upon the part of a citizen of New York to our Church commands our esteem and gratitude in an unmeasured degree. The trustees hope to present you a complete building of magnificent proportions by the time of your next Conference session. It is recommended that Drs. Green and Young be appointed to the positions to which they have been elected by the Board of Trust of the university."

(Signed) "D. C. KELLEY, Chairman."

At the same Conference R. A. Young was made Agent of Vanderbilt University, and A. L. P. Green Treasurer of Vanderbilt University.

3. And thus, by the action above quoted and similar actions by other of the patronizing Conferences, Vanderbilt University was launched by the said Conferences as the members of said corporation and acting as such; and for twenty-five years the Board of Trust and the patronizing Conferences acted in harmony, the Conferences agreeing in almost every instance to every recommendation or request of the Board of Trust, but with no thought upon the part of either the Board of Trust or of the patronizing Conferences that the latter should surrender their rights as members in the corporation; and said rights have not been surrendered.

(a) An instance of the protection of the rights of the Conferences: At the Tennessee Conference held at Gallatin, Tennessee, October 7-13, 1874, the following resolution, sent up by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, was presented to that Conference for action—to wit:

"Nashville, Tenn., September 30, 1874."

"The following resolution, offered by Dr. Garland, was passed by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University:

"Forasmuch as the charter of the Vanderbilt University confers upon the Board of Trust the exclusive right and power to fill vacancies that may occur in its own body, and as this power cannot be delegated to any other body of persons; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this Board will now proceed to fill the vacancy which has been created by the death of the late Dr. Green."

"But in order to maintain the closest connection with the patronizing Conferences the Board submits this and every other election to fill a vacancy in its own body to the confirmation of the Annual Conference from which the election is made."

"On motion of Dr. Kelley, the Board entered upon the election of a trustee to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Dr. Green. Robert A. Young was elected."

To which the Tennessee Conference made reply as follows:

"Resolved, 1. That in view of the relations already established by contract between the Tennessee Conference and Vanderbilt University, we proceed now to nominate one of our members to fill the vacancy in the Board of Trust caused by the death of Dr. Green, and that we nominate Dr. R. A. Young."

"2. That, in response to the request of the Board of Trust, we consent to modify the original contract so that hereafter, when a vacancy occurs, the Board may nominate one of our members to us for confirmation, the nominee not to be a member of the Board until confirmed by us."

(b) And at the Memphis Conference at its session held at Paducah, Kentucky, November 23, 1875, the following was adopted:

"We recognize the hand of God in moving the heart of Mr. Vanderbilt to that noble munificence with which he has blessed our Church and our whole land in what he has done for our university. With the brethren of other Conferences, we have vested rights there which we hold sacred, and will do our part in making it a blessing to the Church, to our children, and to generations yet to come."

(c) And Chancellor Garland reported to the North Mississippi Conference, of which he was a member, at its regular session at Aberdeen, Mississippi, on the 25th of November, 1874, the following:

"We rejoice to look forward to the completion of an institution of high learning, partly under the control of this Conference and entirely under that of the Church. * * * By the magnificent liberality of him whose name it bears, and by the expected liberality of other patrons and friends, we hope, sooner or later, to see this institution so expanded in its organization, so furnished with libraries, cabinets, apparatus, and distinguished lecturers—in short, with every description of educational appliances—that our sons need not go to England or Germany or France for the prosecution of letters, but may find at Vanderbilt facilities for investigation to the utmost extent of human attainment in every branch of learning without detriment to their religious sensibilities."

4. And throughout the meetings, and constantly year by year, almost without exception, the minutes of the Tennessee Conference, the Memphis Conference, the North Mississippi Conference, the North Alabama Conference, the Arkansas Conference, and the Mississippi Conference, and other patronizing Conferences show that Dr. Young, secretary of the university, regularly appeared before the Conferences, and usually received contributions for the endowment fund. Committees on education in almost every instance made a report on Vanderbilt University, and from the foundation of the university to the present time the university has been recognized as a Church institution, commended to the Christian people and to the Church, and patronized and superintended by the patronizing Conferences, and finally turned over to the General Conference, as hereinafter set out; and since that time patronized by all the Conferences and by the General Conference.

VII.

1. At the meeting of the Board of Trust in 1888 the following report was made to the Board:

"Having carefully considered the matter referred to us, your committee respectfully recommends the adoption of the following by-law therein: The Board of Trust shall, after the expiration of the terms of the present members as hereinafter provided, consist of two members, one clerical and one lay, from each of the patronizing Conferences. These shall be divided into four classes, as follows: The members from the Tennessee and North Alabama Conferences shall constitute one class, and their terms of office shall expire in 1890; the members from the Memphis and North Mississippi Conferences shall constitute one class, and their terms of office shall expire in 1892; the members from the Louisville and Little Rock Conferences shall constitute one class, and their terms of office shall expire in 1894; the members from the Arkansas and White River Conferences shall constitute one class, and their terms of office shall expire in 1896."

"At its annual meeting in 1890, and every two years thereafter, the Board shall elect, as now provided by law, subject to the confirmation of the Conference concerned, members to take the places of those whose terms then expired. The members so elected shall hold their office for a term of eight years, unless sooner removed for cause, and until their successors are elected and confirmed. When vacancies shall occur, they shall be filled as now required by law, but only for the remainder of the unexpired term or terms.

"Resolved, That the Executive Committee are hereby directed to take all steps necessary to make the foregoing a part of the organic law of the university." (Vol. III, pp. 480, 481.)

From the above it appears that the Board of Trust recognized that in order to make changes as suggested in that report a change was needed in the organic law of the university, and this resolution of the Board of Trust was submitted to the Annual patronizing Conferences.

2. At the Tennessee Conference of 1888 the following resolutions were adopted:

"Vanderbilt University. We find the university in a more prosperous condition in all its departments than it has ever been. There is a large number of students in attendance from different portions of the country."

"Resolved, 1. That we are in full sympathy with the Theological Department of the university, and that we will do all that we can to advance the interest thereof in every respect."

"2. That we recommend to the Conference the approval of the action of the Board of Trust at its last annual meeting in reference to the election of members of the same as stated in the accompanying paper, which is made a part of this report."

"Provided, That the charter of the university be so amended as to secure the right of the several co-operating Conferences to act upon all nominations to fill vacancies before any party nominated by the Board can become a member thereof; and provided, also, that no amendment to the charter shall affect the ex officio members of the Board."

3. And to the session held in 1890 of the Tennessee Conference a report was made that the Rev. R. A. Young and E. H. East had been elected at the last annual meeting to the Board of Trust, the report being as follows:

"Nashville, Tenn., October 3, 1890.
"To the Bishop and Members of the Tennessee Annual Conference:

"Dear Brethren—At the last annual meeting of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University they began the reduction of that body to one-half its original members."

"Dr. R. A. Young and Hon. E. H. East on the first ballot were elected. You are hereby most respectfully notified of that fact, and requested to confirm their election."

"Yours in Christ, R. A. YOUNG, Secretary Board of Trust, V. U."

Which was done.

4. At a meeting of the North Mississippi Conference in 1888 the following action was taken:
"Vanderbilt University. As one of the patronizing Conferences, we regard the university with generous pride and recommend concurrence in the recent action of the Board of Trust changing the manner of its organization. We respectfully suggest that the charter be so amended as to secure to the patronizing Conferences, respectively (the right) to make nominations to fill vacancies in the Board."

5. At the Memphis Annual Conference held in 1888 the following action was taken:

"The Board of Education recommended the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, 1. That Vanderbilt University in its various departments is highly appreciated by us, and especially the Theological Department, and we will do whatever we can to promote its interests."

"Resolved, 2. That the Memphis Conference approves and concurs in the action of the Board of Trust at its last annual meeting on the election of members thereof as set forth in the paper referred to the Board of Education."

"Action of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University concerning the reorganization of the Board taken June 20, 1888, at the regular annual meeting in Nashville, Tennessee:

"The committee on the reorganization of the Board of Trust presented their report, which, after being amended, was adopted as follows:

Reorganization of the Board of Trust.

Church News

Bishop Candler is slated to conduct a revival at Oxford, Ga., the seat of Emory College.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has 400 deaconesses, and 100 more who are preparing to join this noble band of workers.

Gipsy Smith will again visit the United States during the present year. He is booked for a meeting at Portland, Oregon, next November.

The African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church has under way a movement to erect at Charlotte, N. C., a new Publishing House, which its leaders affirm will be the finest structure of the kind owned by negroes anywhere in the world.

At its recent session the Alabama Conference appointed two evangelists to labor within its bounds. They are Rev. A. L. Sillers and Rev. I. W. Chalker, and are said to be well adapted to the work for which they have been set apart.

The Canadian Methodists have resolved to raise $1,500,000 for missions in addition to their regular collections within the next five years. This effort is in response to the increasing demands of their work in both the home and foreign fields.

The Seventh Day Adventists have property in the western suburbs of Jackson, Miss., where they are also maintaining a school. The press dispatches report that they are enlarging their facilities for work, expansion being necessitated by their growth.

The Baptist College for young men at Pineville, La., was destroyed by fire on January 3. The loss of property is estimated at $40,000; the insurance was $20,000. The citizens of the town have opened their homes to the students, and the work of the session will go on.

During the past two years 300 Chinese students in leading colleges of the Empire have pledged themselves to the work of the Christian ministry. This is said to be largely due to the influence of the Student Volunteer Movement, which is becoming well established and active in the Orient.

Two Texas preachers well provided for financially are Rev. H. D. Knickerbocker, of Austin Avenue Church at Waco, whose salary is $4,000, and Dr. J. A. Rice, of First Church at Fort Worth, whose assessment is $5,000. Brother Knickerbocker was the predecessor of Dr. Rice in his present charge.

Dr. Beverly Carradine contributed to a recent number of The Christian Witness a most interesting article, entitled "Recollections of Sam Jones." He calls attention to the fact that the famous evangelist, though known as a Georgian, was by birth an Alabamian. He was born at Lanett, in Chambers County.

The Presbyterians promptly met the second $10,000 payment on their splendid hospital plant in New Orleans, which fell due on January 1. A free clinic will be opened in connection with this institution on the 15th of this month, and a woman pharmacist has been engaged to fill prescriptions for the poor at cost.

Bishop R. G. Waterhouse will reside on the Pacific Slope, making his home either at Berkeley or Los Angeles, California. His host of friends in the East will regret to have him go so far away, but he is needed in our western territory and his presence there will be a tower of strength to the cause of Southern Methodism.

The main building at Trinity College, known as the Washington Duke Building, was destroyed by fire on Wednesday, January 4. It originally cost nearly $100,000, and was insured for $40,000. The origin of the fire is said to be unknown. The affairs of the College, however, will be little interfered with, as the new administration building is about complete.

The minutes of the Alabama Conference show that the Southern University has property valued at $210,500, and an endowment of $101,000. There are eight professors and 139 pupils. The Woman's College, the joint property of the two Conferences, has property valued at $182,000 and $15,855 in endowment. There are eight professors and 82 pupils.—Alabama Advocate.

Bishop E. E. Hess will preach the opening sermon at the Conference on Evangelism at Wesley Memorial Church, Atlanta, Friday night, March 3, and lecture daily from 11 to 12 o'clock during the Conference on the fundamental doctrines of the Bible. He has also been engaged to deliver three addresses during the Conference on "Our Three Mission Fields in the Orient," which he has just visited.—Wesleyan Advocate.

One of the outgrowths of the great Edinburgh Missionary Conference is a new quarterly called "The Moslem World," which will give the news of Christian work in Mohammedan lands and endeavor to foster and promote it. The editor is Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, an Arabian Missionary, and the first issue is due to appear this month. The subscription price is $1 per year, which may be sent to the Nile Press, 35 John Street, Bedford Row, London, W. C.

The three Arkansas Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, have assumed the $35,000 debt of Hendrix College, and a vigorous effort will now be made to liquidate it. The General Board of Education in New York promised this institution some time ago a donation of $75,000 on the condition that $225,000 is raised from other sources. It is reported that this amount has been secured in cash and subscriptions, and that upon the payment of its debts, the college will be in a position to command at once $25,000 of the amount promised by the New York Board.

The Methodists and citizens of Opelika, Alabama, have invited Bishop W. A. Candler to make his home in that city and have promised him a residence free of cost in case he should decide to do so. Bishop Candler out of Georgia! The thing is unthinkable. Why, he is the foremost citizen of the commonwealth and the "Goober State's" proudest possession. Why didn't the Alabamians just invite the Georgians to bring their State Capitol to Opelika? Such an invitation would have scarcely been more immodest than the one they have issued to the great leader of Georgia Methodism.

TRAIN YOUR MEMORY.

In these days, when people read newspapers daily, making little effort to remember what they read, it is said that the art of remembering is going into a decline.

Now, a good memory is a wonderful help in life. If you try to develop yours in your youth, you will never regret it.

The most successful pastor is usually he who most quickly recognizes and calls by name the members of his flock.

The most successful politician is usually the one who remembers best the men whom he meets.

Writers, speakers, lawyers, doctors, merchants, and most others, depend largely on their memories for their advancement. There is no high place on earth for the forgetful man.

There have been many great characters who have declared that they owe their fame chiefly to their remarkable memories.

James G. Blaine was one of these. George Washington had a good memory. Napoleon was said to be able at one time to call every soldier in his army by name.

Milton could repeat the whole of Homer's works. Several men have committed the entire Bible to memory. Henry Clay could not learn poetry, but he never forgot a name, a face, or an argument. John Stuart Mill had a wonderful memory. Oliver Cromwell was another general who was said to know the names of all his men.

Probably Macaulay had as good a memory as any man that ever lived. He knew by heart the whole of Paradise Lost and the Pilgrim's Progress.

Make a practice of learning both prose and poetry. Then repeat it often to yourself, in order to retain it. Train your memory in every way you can think of.

A good memory will not take the place of original thinking, nor of industry, nor of energy; but it is still a very valuable help in life. In these days of close competition a good memory is always likely to be the factor which turns the scale toward victory.—Southern Churchman.

FIDELITY.

To engage in the performance of home duties faultlessly, without petulance, without haste, without fretting—to repress the sarcastic and unkind word; he calm in the hot moment of anger; to do without weariness, and to suffer without murmurings; to be charitable in judgment and trample out of the heart the Pharisee spirit, deeming life at once too short and too costly for quarrels and for pride; to maintain a chivalrous honor in all business relations; to hold back from the temptations of doubting or hasty gain; to wear "the white flower," not "of a blameless life" only, but of a life cleansed from its earthliness and made pure by the Holy Spirit; to walk about the world and before men with a calm heart filled with love; to shed abroad the "sweet savor of Christ," and allure men to the heaven to which they know you to be traveling—these are but many-sided exhibitions of the one holy character, many facets of the one jewel of fidelity by which you are to be "approved" of your Father which is in heaven.—Punshon.

TO AN ENEMY.

By Walter Malone.

Although I love my friend, still let me yield This tribute to thy worth, my enemy: Unjust thou art, perchance; no doubt unkind, Yet much I owe to thee, stern monitor! Faults though thou hast, due honor shall be thine. Close, keen-eyed critic, oft thy scrutiny Hath made me bluish defenseless, and in shame Turn from my darling idols. Thou hast set Full oft in paths of righteousness my feet, That else had wandered in forbidden ways, Lovely, yet treacherous, and thy censure harsh Hath oft rebuked my days of dalliance In pleasant fields where pitfalls hid in flowers Awaited me with secret perils. Yea, Thy sneer hath been a sword to prod me on To duty; it hath been a goading spur To make me win a race I counted lost. Thy jeer hath oft aroused me till I swore To reach success despite thy prophecies Of my defeat; thy challenge, like a blast Of trumpets, when the battle hangs in doubt, Hath nerved my hand to snatch the victor's wreath That else had never graced my brows. Again, Amidst my paeans sung by parasites, Thy frown from mien austere remindeth me That I am merely mortal, child of dust, Soon summoned unto strict account. Stern friend, Not thine to soothe with silken flatteries, Nor glose with unctious phrases; it is thine To do much more—to save me from myself! Memphis, Tenn.

THE CENSUS RETURNS.

The census returns place the population of the United States at about 95,000,000. The cities have shown increases beyond comparison with rural communities, and the figures contradict the assertion that a movement back to the farm has set in. There has been much shifting of population; much change in the character of various cities and sections, and a multitude of arguments can be found in the official figures which will prove the complicated character and the difficulty of the home-mission problem. If this country is to be and remain Christian, both the urban and rural problems of the Christian Church must be attacked promptly, vigorously and intelligently.—The Christian Intelligencer.

OPEN TO ENGAGEMENTS.

A Canadian lay evangelist of the Montreal Methodist Conference, who is spending the winter in the South, is open for a limited number of special services in Louisiana and Texas. Address: Norman Lambly, Jennings, La. Thanking you, I am, yours very truly, C. A. BATTLE.

Secular News and Comment

The present production of the Caddo oil fields is estimated at 25,000 barrels daily. The Standard Oil Company is busy drilling wells, paying good prices and making many friends in the oil section. But the $9,000,000 supposed to have been invested by them is thought to be greatly exaggerated.

Railroad men claim that 1910 was a bad year for the great interests they represent. The presidents of four great systems have issued statements that are candidly pessimistic. With all that, the gross and net earnings per mile during 1910 were the greatest in the history of the country.

Population statistics of the thirteenth census, announced a few days ago, show that Louisiana has eleven cities with a population of more than 5,000. This is an increase of four since 1900. Morgan City shows the greatest growth, being credited with an increase of 134 per cent in the ten years.

Postal savings banks have recently been opened by the government in every State in the Union. This is in keeping with a recent law of Congress. Depositors will receive interest at the rate of 2 per cent. Until the system becomes thoroughly organized, only one bank in each State will be opened. The first one for Mississippi is at Gulfport, and for Louisiana, at New Iberia.

As the time approaches for Congress to designate the place for holding the Panama Exposition, the rival cities of San Francisco and New Orleans are making every effort to win the prize. A special train carried a large delegation from New Orleans to Washington Saturday night to urge the claims of the Crescent City. The matter will probably be decided within the next two weeks.

The Nobel Foundation was established some ten years ago to distribute annually five prizes of $40,000 each to the men who have done the most for the advancement of physics, chemistry, medicine, literature, and the peace cause. Thus far prizes have been bestowed upon 56 individuals, distributed by nationality as follows: Germany, 15; France, 10; England, 7; Holland, Russia, Italy, and Switzerland, each 4; Sweden, 3; Denmark, Spain, and the United States, each 2; Austria, Belgium, and Norway, each 1.—Southern Christian Advocate.

A parlor car service across the Isthmus of Panama is the latest idea of the Canal Commission. Probably this is to be instituted under the impression that a good many passengers will leave the ships while they are passing through the canal for the brief change in the voyage offered by the two hours' railroad run across the Isthmus. One car already is being fitted out, and if the service is profitable, all passenger trains will carry such cars. Ten minutes have also been cut off the running time across the Isthmus, which is now two hours and five minutes.

The Chicago Tribune has printed figures showing that contributions to charities and beneficent enterprises during 1910 amounted to $141,604,538. Of this amount, charities of various kinds received $56,229,243; educational institutions, $61,283,182; religious institutions, $12,654,433; art museums, galleries, and public improvements, $9,536,680. Andrew Carnegie is credited with having given the largest amount, $19,664,325. John D. Rockefeller comes next, with $16,039,000, and Mrs. Russell Sage third, with $3,888,150.

The American public pays the six big packing concerns of Chicago the enormous sum of $945,000,000 a year for meat, their net profits aggregating $25,000,000 in round numbers. The gross annual business of these concerns and their net incomes are as follows: Armour & Co., $275,000,000, profits $9,808,305; Swift & Co., $260,000,000, profits $5,000,000; Morris & Co., $125,000,000, profits $2,171,339; National Packing Company, (owned by Armour, Swift, and Morris) $100,000,000, estimated profits $1,600,000; Sulberger & Sons, $100,000,000, profits $1,600,000; Cudahy & Co., $85,000,000, profits $1,700,000. It is alleged by many that these great beef barons are in some measure at least responsible for the high cost of living, and the United States Government is now, through the courts, seeking to enquire into their methods of doing business.

The report of the Internal Revenue Commissioners for the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1910, showed that the manufacture and consumption of intoxicating liquors had increased largely over the preceding year. The liquor interests pointed to these figures as proof that prohibitory laws really increase the consumption of alcoholic beverages. In answer to this view, The American Issue, the organ of the Ohio Anti-Saloon League, by a detailed study of the report, shows that such conclusion is utterly wrong. In prohibition territory there has been a striking decrease, both in manufacture and consumption, of distilled and fermented liquors. The increase has been almost solely in license territory. This certainly is a rational view. States which license the manufacture and sale of intoxicants may legitimately expect an increasing number of their citizens to be come addicted to the drink habit. Let no one be deceived by the specious plea, that "prohibition does not prohibit."

Booker T. Washington has issued invitations for an international conference of all persons in Europe or America who are directly or indirectly interested in the education and improvement of the negro peoples of Africa. This conference will meet at Tuskegee about the middle of January, 1912. Its purpose will be to get from the people who are on the ground a clearer and more definite idea of the actual problems involved in the redemption of the African peoples, and to enable those engaged in work in Africa to see for themselves what is being done at Tuskegee in the way of educating black men, and to decide to what extent the methods employed at the Tuskegee school can be used to advantage in Africa.—Zion's Herald.

The will of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, mother of Christian Science, has been filed in the probate court, Concord, N. H. Under the terms of the will the mother church at Boston is to get the bulk of Mrs. Eddy's enormous fortune. The church, in addition to special bequests aggregating $150,000, is also made the residuary legatee. There is every reason to believe that the value of Mrs. Eddy's estate has been underestimated, and that it will reach, if it does not exceed, $2,000,000. The special bequests are divided: $50,000 direct to the church and $100,000 in trust for teaching Christian Science to students who are unable to pay for their instructions. The Second Church of Christian Science of New York City is the next largest beneficiary, as there is left to it a sum not to exceed $175,000, to pay off its indebtedness. A number of gifts consisting of money and jewels are bestowed on favored friends and patrons. The noted crown of diamonds goes to Mrs. Stetson of New York, who was disciplined and expelled from the Christian Science communion a year or two ago.—Presbyterian of the South.

The estimated area of the forests of the United States is 545,000,000 acres. That of Russia is 812,640,000 acres. Canada, which ranks third, has a forest area of about 1,249,000 square miles, of which 400,000 is covered with merchantable timber. Mr. Zon, chief of silvics of the department of agriculture, Washington, has compiled a comparative statement of the forest resources of the world. A country deprived of many natural resources may still be prosperous and progressive, Mr. Zon says, because it is able to obtain all it needs from other countries having a surplus of products which it lacks. The British Isles are a striking example of this. With comparatively limited natural resources and high consumption of timber, grain and other raw materials, England has highly developed industries, which enable her to exchange her finished products for raw materials she needs. In a general way this holds for forest products, but with this difference: forests not only produce timber but play an important part in the life of every nation by exercising an influence on the water supply, on agriculture, and the general health of the population. For this reason only a few countries with an insular climate, as England and Holland, may with impunity reduce their forest areas beyond a certain safety limit. Ordinarily a country with a forest area of 20 per cent, or less shows to a marked degree bad climatic conditions, with prolonged drouths, frosts and alternating floods and low water. Portugal, Spain, Greece, Turkey and Italy, with a forest area of about 14 per cent, are examples of this, they being subject to extremes of climate, floods and drouth.

HOW TO KILL THE MINISTER.

The rules printed below for killing off a minister are suggested by Dr. J. S. Wrightnour in The Baptist Commonwealth, in the course of a discussion of the question as to why there is less reverence than formerly for those who preach the gospel:

Criticize him mercilessly.
Never praise him.
Pray AT him, never FOR him.
Keep his wife in hot water.
Some have found keeping his salary in arrears very useful also.
As turn about is fair play, it might be added that a good plan for a pastor to kill his influence, and his congregation, is much the same:
Criticize them unmercifully.
Never praise them.
Pray AT them, not FOR them.
Have a wife that will keep everybody in hot water.
And many have found that always harping on the question of salary is very useful also.—Pittsburg Advocate.

TO THE METHODISTS OF THE STATE.

Through all the years that Christian people have waged war against the liquor traffic, no agency has wrought such havoc against it as the Anti-Saloon League. Through the plain history of the past years God has clearly shown his people how to bring about the end of the saloon. There is but one difficulty in the way of the ultimate annihilation of the legalized liquor traffic. That is the difficulty of keeping all our Christian people united on the policies and principles of the Anti-Saloon League. Somebody is always anxious to organize some more effective or speedy way. All the ways find followers among people who have itching ears, or like those of old, are anxious to find some new way or follow some new thing.

Whenever we have lined up all together under the Anti-Saloon League we will have succeeded in Louisiana, but when we have gone off after other diverse and devious ways we have failed. No argument is needed to prove this and none shall here be given.

As leader for some time of the League work of the State, I may have made mistakes; I shall likely make some again. Let him who has never made one file the first objection. The matchless General Robert E. Lee made mistakes in his glorious career, but that would never justify a soldier in leaving the fight or surrendering the cause.

The record of Methodists everywhere is unsullied as to their attitude on the liquor question. Their influence and work is a most valuable asset in any campaign against the saloon. It is therefore, of the greatest importance to have this mighty host in line for valiant service. Every friend of this cause will be needed in this conflict. The liquor forces never divide, nor desert the ranks. It will take a united Christendom to defeat a united saloon army.

Let every man and woman now fall in line for the great campaign; enlist to stay till the battle is over and victory has been declared. The Lord of Hosts is with us, and victory is sure. It will take some money to carry on this campaign. If you have made a subscription, send it in at once. If you are not a subscriber, send in your subscription for 1911 to-day. Write to the writer, 615-617 Audubon Building, New Orleans.

PRAYER IS WISH OF THE HEART.

A story is told of a little shepherd boy who was obliged to keep watch over the sheep, and so could not go to church. But in his heart there grew up a longing to pray to God, as they were doing in church. He had, however, never been taught any prayer, and so, kneeling down, he began with closed eyes and folded hands, saying the alphabet, "A. B. C. D." on to the end.

"What are you doing, my little man?" said a gentleman, passing by.

"Please, sir, I was praying," replied the boy.

"But why are you saying your letters?"

"Why," said the little fellow, "I don't know any prayer, only I felt I wanted God to take care of me and help me to take care of my sheep. So I thought if I said all I knew He would put it together and spell all I wanted."

"Bless your heart, my little man! He will! When the heart speaks right, the lips can't say wrong," said the gentleman.—The Christian.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION OF THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

For One Year.....$1.50
(Commission to agents, 15 cents for each subscription.)

Eight Months.....1.00
To Preachers.....1.00
To widows of preachers.....1.00

In order to help our friends circulate the Advocate, and to bring the paper within reach of our subscribers at the very lowest possible price, we have granted the privilege of a rate of $1.25 in clubs of five or more. Although we continue a club rate as a privilege, yet where our agents desire it, they may retain 10 cents commission on each subscription, to cover expense of remitting, etc. We reserve the right to give the paper to poor persons, on recommendation of their pastors, for $1. Other than this, there will be no deviation from the conditions herein stated.

It costs us 10 cents to collect a personal check. We therefore request our friends, when making small remittances, to send by money order or registered letter, or by bank exchange. Any bank will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. This is the popular way of sending money without cost.

HOW IT LOOKS TO AN OLD-TIME METHODIST LAYMAN.

By Mr. J. M. Haley.

Some days ago I noticed a correspondent of the Memphis Commercial-Appeal said the Southern Methodist Church stood in the way of organic union of all the Methodists because her representatives seemed to be unable to shake off sectional feeling and were afraid of the negro problem. The sectional feeling forty years ago would have cut some figure in the matter, but since a new generation has appeared on the stage it seems to have about died out. But there are other and more potent reasons why Southern Methodism should work out her own destiny in her own ways without turning aside for new alignments. In the first place, this Church is prosperous, happy and aggressive (a combination hard to turn down), and doing a great work in a field geographically its own, and has attained to a size so large that there has been talk of cutting down representation in the general Conference. Think of three hundred picked men, all loaded down to the guards with new ideas and useful suggestions, fresh from the fields where these events are transpiring, with but a slim chance to be heard, and you can easily see why the General Conference should not be larger. Unite all these Methodisms, and there would be about fifteen hundred delegates, which would make it top-heavy and unwieldy.

The Southern Church, representing about one-fourth of the territory, would be at a great disadvantage in placing her best men in prominent and responsible positions, and why should she tie herself on to the end of anybody's car, when she can take care of herself? Look at the two Presbyterian churches now struggling in the toils of the law. The big church swallowed the little one and got its name and property, and nearly a century of church history, built from the ground up, by strong, self-sacrificing preachers, who felt that they were cutting out a new road, half way between Arminianism and Calvinism, that would be enduring as time itself. It looked well on paper, and sounded fine in resolutions, but after the marriage had been celebrated, legal documents signed, property transferred, and everybody expected to be happy, a divorce was soon called for, and that brought on trouble at once.

If the time ever comes when we shall be asked to take up our belongings and go to live with a rich sister (no matter how kind she is), I want it left to a vote of the Church members, ranging in age from 12 to 100 years old, so that it may be done by the consent of the governed. As to the negro problem, we made a satisfactory solution of that years ago, when we gave them property, ordained Bishops of their own color, set them up in business to themselves, and nursed them until they could walk alone. Now they and we are both doing well in the same territory without any clash of authority or misunderstanding of any kind. Unite all these Methodisms and the colored brother would be entitled to a Bishop. It would not do to consume time and space to argue the question of a colored Bishop presiding over a white Conference in the South. The white brother would be conspicuous by his absence. To preserve the itinerant system, a Bishop must be able to preside over any Conference in the Church, and we claim that our system is the best in the world, and cannot afford to do anything that would tend to cast a shadow on this, our strongest reliance, to carry out the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel." If we now, after nearly half a century's experience along this line, should do anything to disturb this happy solution of this vexed problem, we ought to suffer the consequences that would be sure to follow. Some people are infatuated with the idea of bigness—it is not so much the numbers as the quality of work done that counts.

I notice that the man that wants to change the name of the Church is on the warpath again; he wants to get rid of the word "South," the very best part of our name, and the only word in the English language that tells who we are, and where we are, supposing it does bother a few people in the extreme West, and a few Chinamen; better that than to dissatisfy the multiplied thousands who constitute the main body of the Church. We have made fine history and raised up many good and great men since we commenced business in our own name nearly three-quarters of a century ago, and the word "South" has not been much in the way. We have the kindest feelings for the followers of John Wesley all over the world, and want to see them prosper, but we are Southern people, living in a southern country, and have built up a Southern branch of Methodism that we are proud of. We are at home, doing our best as we see it, thankful for the past, and hopeful for the future, and are content to let well enough alone.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF MY CONFERENCE.

"I believe, Brother Lewis, your mission now is to write to the Advocate for the encouragement of us young preachers." So said a young brother to me whose name I cannot recall now. Well, if I can write anything that will prove helpful to my younger brethren in any way, I willingly do so. I am aware there are those who will not read what I write, but while such men as Major Millsaps, Prof. Ricketts, Dr. L. W. Cooper, Dr. A. F. Watkins, Dr. B. F. Jones, Dr. T. B. Holloman, and others ask me to continue to write, assuring me they enjoy my letters, I am encouraged to do the best I can.

A brother preacher told us at Brookhaven a year ago, he had always had an easy time. Paul thought it advisable to exhort Timothy to "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." Now my experience is, there are some rough places, some smooth places, some hard places, some soft places, some fat places, some lean places, some inviting places, some repulsive places, some rich places, some poor places, some places where the comfort and convenience of the preacher and his family are carefully considered, some places where these things are seldom, if ever, thought of.

When I was young in the work, but few of our country charges had homes for the preacher. The preacher was expected to either board, or furnish his own home. It often worked a hardship on the preacher and his wife. It is different now. Some of you, on reaching your new home, have had a warm reception—some otherwise. When it is otherwise it betrays a lack of interest on the part of the people in the work and preacher. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." It is ever so considered among intelligent, religious people. You may all rest assured of one thing, go where you may, you are going to find plenty of hard work to do. Remember you are there to cultivate that part of God's vineyard. Remember if you do not feed the people on the bread of life, many of them will go hungry.

Remember, much depends on the interest you feel in your work. Be burdened with the souls of men. Remember when God calls a man to preach, preaching is to be the work of his life. Some one has said, "There are a good many qualities that go to the making of an acceptable and efficient minister." Among the many are "a clear and definite call, a whole-souled consecration, a vital message, a Christ-like spirit, good manners," etc.

Some of you, like myself, were brought up in a humble home, and have not the advantage of a college education, hence you will realize the necessity of applying yourself closely to your studies. Some of you had to move a long distance, and perhaps had to borrow money to move on. It looks hard. It is hard when viewed from a human, or selfish point of view. Remember what is written, "All things work together for good to them that love the Lord." Go to work like a man. Live much on your knees. Trust God to lead, guide and keep you, and rest assured God will take care of you.

Some years ago (twenty-five years) I had every assurance I would be returned to the work I had served three years; but was moved nearly two hundred miles. One brother, who was in sympathy with me, said: "The devil made that appointment." Another brother said, "The Lord had nothing to do in making that appointment." We moved out of a splendid house, well furnished, into an old dilapidated box house, poorly furnished. It was a cold winter. We suffered much on account of the severe winter, an open house, and poor fire-places. Yet, after all, we felt like thanking God we were sent to Lauderdale. It proved a great spiritual blessing to us all, especially my precious, now sainted wife.

Trust God, do good, wait patiently; he will bring it to pass. I will have more to say later. Be true to God, true to your ministerial vows, true to your work and people.
H. P. LEWIS.

CHRISTMAS AMONG THE LEPERS.

The lepers of the Louisiana colony seem to have had as happy a Christmas as is possible under the conditions brought about by their affliction. The noble women of New Orleans left nothing undone to make the season, which speaks of him who was the leper's Friend, a pleasant one for these isolated sufferers. Two hundred and fifty baskets, filled with good things to eat, useful articles, and toys for the children were sent out to the colony for distribution. A worker among these stricken ones, in a letter to Mrs. J. W. Phillips, who had been active in collecting these supplies, describes their celebration of the occasion as follows:

"I wish to express to you, in the name of our patients, their satisfaction and gratitude for the Christmas cheer which you and your co-workers afforded them. The cottages and dining room of our patients were beautifully and artistically decorated; their dining room tables were bountifully spread with all the season's delicacies, and we served them for dinner with roast turkey and dressing, cranberry jelly, stuffed olives, mashed potatoes, celery, pickles, cake, mince pie, nuts, etc. Santa Claus came in great glee after dinner, his loud tooting horn and merry dancing form making the little children clap their hands with glee. Some of the little ones were frightened at the funny form of old Santa. Others more brave danced with Santa Claus around the beautifully decorated tree. Santa was so pleased with the children that he exclaimed, 'I have abundance of toys for you dear children of this home! I love you more than other little children because you are away from your mamas; and old Santa Claus emptied his sack, and toys of all descriptions were given to the children; to one, a drum, to others, ships, train of cars, garden sets, trunks, piano, dolls and numerous individual gifts which each of the patients had requested Santa to bring them. Besides, they received many other beautiful and useful gifts: warm gloves, soap, bayrum, warm shawls and dresses for the women and children. All were made very happy by Santa Claus' distribution and by his extra generosity in leaving a large box of fireworks for their Christmas evening's amusement. The Christmas season for our patients has been all that could be desired."

TODAY'S DUTIES.

By James L. Elderdice.

To-day alone is ours, and its allotment of duties, if unfulfilled now, will never be done. These duties relate to God, to our fellow-man and to ourselves. If pleasing God is the motive that prompts our work, then we will not put off until to-morrow the duty of to-day, but will avoid the sin of omission as well as the sin of commission. For if we have not a sense of God's presence in the commonplace daily tasks, we shall not find him in the great achievements.

Promptness in doing daily duties makes easier the tasks of the future. Procrastination heaps up trouble against a day of trouble. Not only does neglect "break a thread in the loom," but it makes a flaw which will be discovered too late to remedy. One punishment of neglected duty is to behold others enjoying the blessings which we failed to secure because of delay and unfaithfulness.

Not only promptness, but thoroughness, should be a governing motto in the performance of duty. Without it life is a failure, and vain all hopes of future advancement. Slovenly work is never completed. It always has to be done over again. On the other hand, the best reward of duty perfectly done is greater ability to better fulfill the obligations of a higher position. Thorough preparation to duty guarantees readiness to meet the emergency of to-morrow. Said President Thiers, of France, when asked how he delivered long, improvised speeches about which he had not had time to reflect: "You are not paying me a compliment; it is criminal in a statesman to improvise speeches on public affairs. The speeches you call improvised—why for fifty years I have been rising at five in the morning to prepare them."

We do not value as we should the opportunities for doing good which are presented by the duties of to-day. Duty is that which is due—due to those around us, here and now. Our plans for doing good relate too much to the future. We wait for the chance to do some great good, and overlook the countless little actions that constitute the whole account of character and history. Never mind the deeds to be done, the charities to be lavished, the joys to be reaped by and by. What are we doing to-day? Are we drying tears, inspiring hope in fainting souls, feeding hungry hearts or bodies now?

'Tis sweet in idle dreams to bask,
But here and now do we do our task?
Yes, this is the thing our souls must ask,
'What have we done to-day?'

DO YOU PRAY?

Little children, do you pray?
Do you thank the Lord each day
That He's kept you free from harm
By His strong and mighty arm?
For your home and parents dear
For your friends both far and near?
For the blessings He doth give
That His children dear may live?
Do you ask Him you to keep
When awake and when you sleep?
Child, the Lord is ever near,
Ev'ry little prayer to hear.

PUSS.

Did you ever think why we call the cat puss? A great many years ago the people of Egypt worshipped the cat. They thought the cat was like the moon, because she was more active at night, and because her eyes change, just as the moon changes, which is sometimes full and sometimes a bright little crescent, or half moon, as we say. Did you ever notice pussy's eyes, to see how they change? So these people made an idol with a cat's head, and named it Pasht, the same name they gave to the moon, for the word means the face of the moon. That word has been changed to pas or puss, the name which almost every one gives to the cat. Puss, and pussy-cat are pet names for kitty everywhere; but few know that it was given to her thousands of years ago.—Harper's Young People.

GIRLS AND THEIR FRIENDS.

"Most of us start out in girlhood with rather definite opinions as to friendship," says Anne Bryan McCall in Woman's Home Companion for January. "A friend should be this or that. We have the matter all settled in our minds. And then, along comes some experience entirely outside our expectation. The friend to whom we have vowed undying devotion fails us in some essential and disappoints us deeply. The structure we thought secure for all time falls suddenly. Some of us may perhaps sit among the ruins, bewailing and embittered; but the healthy-minded girl faces the fact squarely and looks about for reasons.

"One reason our friendships fail is that we think of them as complete and established things. Friendship is a thing never complete—it is always in the making. A vow of friendship, no matter how earnest, is, at best, only a promise to pay; whereas many of us mistake it for a payment in itself. Take any of those big qualities and requirements of every worth-while friendship, loyalty, truth, honor, unselfishness, fidelity—does it occur to you that any one of these can be established once and for all? Indeed, it cannot. Loyalty yesterday is not loyalty to-day, nor will an unselfish act of the day that is past serve to meet the obligation of unselfishness of the day that is here. It is not a luxury, this, that can be bought and paid for and a receipt given. This love you have set yourself to share with some particular person is an obligation, a duty, a task and a difficult one that shall last your life long."

THE STORM WINDOWS.

By Edith Havens.

It was getting cold away down deep in the great pond. Here and there a fish darted about in an effort to keep warm. Over near the middle and close to the bottom a group of pickerel were swimming about slowly and talking among themselves.

"Say, it is getting cold," said one, flapping his tail with a shiver. "It is pretty near time that Mother Nature put on the storm windows!"

"I should say so," said one of the others. "Why is it she waits until the very last minute?"

"Well, none of us have ever frozen yet, so I guess she knows best," answered the first pickerel slowly.

"Perhaps she will put them on to-night," he added.

Suddenly down through the water there flashed a dark round object and, thinking it was some morsel of food, all of the fish darted straight for it.

It proved to be nothing but a stone.

"Thrown by some idle boy up on the shore," remarked the biggest pickerel, a bit angrily. Then they swam about looking for something to eat.

As the day wore on, the water seemed to get colder and by night the fishes darted through the water with great speed in an effort to keep warm.

Then darkness settled down, and up through the water all the fishes could see the stars looking down at them. It was just the same as if you had looked at the stars through the window.

Up in the world the wind was whistling a merry song and as he passed over the pond the white caps rushed to the surface and danced to his music. Down deep where the fishes were it was very still and cold. The cold made the fishes drowsy and one by one they dropped off to sleep, their tails barely moving as they floated silently about.

The cold grew more intense and slowly but surely a marvelous change occurred upon the surface of the pond. Finding it too cold, in spite of their dancing the whitecaps had disappeared and now a gelatine-like covering was spreading across the top of the water. As the night wore on, it grew harder and finally all of a sudden there came a snap.

What do you think had happened? Dame Nature had done her work. She had put the storm windows on the pond.

What a wonderful great window pane it was. And do you know when it is once on, the fishes never suffer from the cold?—Times-Democrat.

ROBERT A. YOUNG, Secretary.

"Resolved, 3. That the Memphis Conference favors the amendment of the charter of the University in accordance with the foregoing action of the Board of Trust, and especially to secure the right of the several Annual Conferences interested in the university to act upon all the nominations made by the Board of Trust to fill vacancies before any person so nominated can become a member thereof. "The following report was referred to your Board: To the Bishops and Members of the Tennessee Conference:

"At the last annual meeting of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University Dr. James Hampton Kirkland was elected a member thereof. It now becomes our duty to ask the Tennessee Conference to ratify the election of Dr. Kirkland.

R. A. YOUNG,

Sec. Board of Trust Vanderbilt University.

"We recommend to you the ratification of Dr. James H. Kirkland's election to membership in the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University."

And in 1895 the Bishops and Chancellor of the university being made members ex-officio of the Board of Trust, at the session of the Tennessee Conference held at Winchester, Tennessee, October 23-28, the report of the Board of Education, which was adopted by the Conference contained, among other things, the following:

"The resignation of J. H. Kirkland, lay representative of this Conference on the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, having been reported to us, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That we recommend the Conference to fill the vacancy on the Vanderbilt Board of Trust occasioned by the resignation of J. H. Kirkland by the election of E. W. Cole to represent the Tennessee Conference on the said Board of Trust."

And thereupon the following action was taken by the Conference: E. W. Cole was elected to fill the vacancy on the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University made vacant by the resignation of J. H. Kirkland.

ANENT THE ADVOCATE.

Our mark for 1911 is 10,000 subscribers. Less than that number will not sustain the paper on its present basis, nor is a smaller circulation than this creditable to the 150,000 Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi. Let us get busy and press toward the 10,000 goal. We can reach it if we will.

What about the brother who takes a number of secular papers, but no religious paper? Does it not show that he has more interest in the affairs of the world than in the Church and its work? A man wants to know about the things which mean the most to him. Nothing so sets the soul of a layman on fire as to see what is being accomplished in the Master's name.

We will send bills out this week and next week to the preachers who failed to renew at Conference, and to those who paid at Conference for last year but not for this year. As far as is possible, it is our purpose to conduct business on a cash basis. Our terms to ministers, itinerant and local, are $1 a year IN ADVANCE.

Again we ask the brethren not to send us small checks on local banks. It costs ten cents each to collect them, and this amounts to a considerable sum during the year. New Orleans exchange can generally be had for the asking, or money orders or stamps will be accepted. The publisher desires to state that hereafter any one receiving the paper for $1 per annum and sending a check for that amount, will only be credited with ten months on his subscription.

Rev. J. W. Honnoll, of Tunica, Miss., who from a small membership sent us thirty subscribers last week, says the best time to get up a club for the Advocate is early in the year. He is right. Money is in circulation then, and the other claims of the Church are not being so persistently pressed. Moreover, it makes the Advocate the co-laborer of the pastor for a longer time and enables it to do more good among the people.

Our "Honor Roll" is growing. We add three names to it this week, all from Mississippi. It now stands as follows: Mansfield, La., Rev. A. W. Turner, pastor; Bogalusa, La., Rev. J. M. Afford, pastor; Tunica, Miss., Rev. J. W. Honnoll, pastor; Lumberton, Miss., Rev. T. W. Adams, pastor; Ruleville, Miss., Rev. O. L. Savage, pastor. Who next?

SOME STATISTICS AND THEIR LESSON.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate of January 4th gives a statistical exhibit of the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church by Conferences which, according to our view, is far from encouraging. Indeed, a careful survey of the figures should, it seems to us, cause our brethren of the North grave concern and lead them to ask prayerfully the question, What is the matter? The statistics submitted, which were taken from the Year Book of our sister Church (just from the press), occupy too much space for us to reproduce them, though we feel sure that they would greatly interest our readers. The following is the summary of them furnished by our able contemporary referred to above:

The Conferences fall into two main divisions, home and foreign. In the home field seventy-six Conferences report gains and fifty report losses. In six Conferences the reports for 1910 were not available for the Year Book. In the foreign field twenty-six Conferences report gains, six report losses, and in three the reports for 1910 were not available. In the home field the Conferences are grouped into three racial divisions—English, foreign, and colored. In the English division forty-eight Conferences report gains, thirty-three report losses, and in five the reports for 1910 were not available. In the for-ign group, ten Conferences report gains, nine report losses, and in one the report for 1910 is not at hand. The ten German Conferences of this group report a net loss of twenty-nine members. The five Swedish Conferences report a net loss of sixteen. The entire group, including all the foreign Conferences in the United States, reports a net gain of 174 members. Of the twenty colored Conferences eleven report gains and nine report losses. The entire group of colored Conferences shows a net loss of 1,731 members.

Certainly there is nothing in this showing that is reassuring or that should be productive of a feeling of gratulation. The 51 English Conferences, taken together, show an increase of only 23,934, a little over one per cent. In the light of these facts the leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church are exhibiting wisdom in seeking to stir up in their ministers the evangelistic gift and to light revival fires throughout their territory. Nothing but this can make the Word as they preach it efficacious and restore the waning tide of prosperity. Material resources, however affluent, cannot accomplish much for the extension of the Master's kingdom unless they are treated as mere agencies under the direction of the Holy Spirit. To rely upon them and forget the need of divine assistance, is to bring disaster and defeat. The temptation of all churches when they have become rich and great is to depend upon human means for their maintenance and propagation rather than the power of the Holy Ghost.

No other Protestant denomination in America has facilities for work superior to those of the Northern Methodists. Their wealth, their houses of worship, their schools, their hospitals, and the eloquence and learning of their ministry are second to none. Yet their achievements are disappointing and unsatisfactory. Is there not in this a lesson, not only for them, but for all religious organizations, namely: that the great spiritual warfare must be spiritually won: that when God's people are burdened with a sense of their weakness, then are they strong? We have long been convinced that there is too much disposition among the modern followers of Christ to substitute the feast for the fast, speculation for the gospel, and various forms of manipulation for prayer that takes hold of the throne. The power that carried Christianity forward in the beginning, must carry it now, if it is to fulfill its mission of saving the nations. Take that away, and the churches stand helpless before the mighty problems that confront them, and ere long "Ichabod" will be written upon their banners.

A PERNICIOUS MEASURE.

We give below the heading and text of a measure introduced in Congress on the fifth of last December by Delegate Andrews, of Albuquerque, New Mexico, who at present represents that Territory in the legislative branch of the National Government:

A BILL.

"Donating three hundred thousand acres of land to J. B. Pitaval, archbishop of Santa Fe, New Mexico, and his successors, to be held in trust by him for the establishment of a manual training school for the youth of New Mexico.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled: That three hundred thousand acres of unappropriated non-mineral land in the Territory of New Mexico, to be selected under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be, and the same is hereby, donated to J. B. Pitaval, archbishop of Santa Fe, New Mexico, and his successors, to be held in trust for the establishment of a manual training school in the Territory of New Mexico, for the youth of New Mexico, and that the income from said land or the proceeds of the sale thereof, be devoted exclusively to the maintenance and support of the said institution."

After the introduction of this measure in the House of Representatives, it was ordered printed, and was referred to the Committee on Territories, where it at present reposes, awaiting further action.

A bolder and more outrageous attempt than this to appropriate public property for the benefit of the Roman Catholic Church has never come under our observation. The three hundred thousand acres of land which it is proposed to donate to the Archbishop of Santa Fe at $2.50 an acre (its suggested value) would be equivalent to three-quarters of a million dollars. For such action there can be no possible justification or excuse. The separation of Church and State is one of the enactments of the Federal Constitution, and a fundamental principle of the American government. Written deep in our organic law is the declaration, "Congress shall make no provision respecting the establishment of religion or the free exercise thereof." Wherefore this attempt to have the Government assist in strengthening and upbuilding the Romish Church by donating to it a part of the public domain, which belongs to all of the people, an overwhelming majority of whom are Protestants? We dare say that if the curtain could be lifted and this movement traced to its true source, back of it all would be seen the Macbiaevellian hand of some Catholic bishop or priest.

It is scarcely needful to remark that this obnoxious measure should be defeated. The just and patriotic people of the United States should see that this is done. We suggest that the citizens of every community, either by a petition or direct correspondence, communicate with their Congressmen on the subject. It will not do to take too much for granted. The intriguing of Rome to have Congress contribute to the maintenance of her schools is an old, old story. And never was she more alert and aggressive than now, and the average politician trembles at her frown, knowing that the more ignorant of her votaries are welded together like links of steel and that thousands of them vote almost as a unit.

This noble Republic is the product of the teaching and influence of Protestant Christianity. Little does it owe to Rome. Had her sway been in the ascendancy, our country could never have been what it is to-day. What she does for a nation may be learned by looking at France, Portugal, Spain, and the States of Central and South America. The infallible test of every organization is its fruit where it is allowed to flourish untrammelled. It was La Fayette who said that the greatest menace to our free institutions would prove to be the Roman Catholic Church. Nor is it yet too late for his prophecy to find fulfillment. It generally takes not merely decades, but centuries, to tell the story of a nation's life.

A CHANGE IN THE ADVOCATE.

With this issue we will cease to publish discussions of the Sunday School and Epworth League lessons, and conduct instead departments devoted to these phases of our church work. We have weighed the matter carefully, and believe that more good will be accomplished by giving information as to what is going on in Sunday school and League circles within our territory, than by continuing the present arrangement. Our Sunday school periodicals and the Epworth Era give lesson expositions that are far fuller than any we could hope to carry; they are very generally reaching the people, and are, we think, admirably meeting the need that exists for instruction of this character.

In conducting our Sunday School Department, we hope to have the assistance of Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, field secretary for the North Mississippi Conference; Rev. P. O. Lowrey, Sunday school missionary for the Louisiana Conference, and of some wide-awake leader in the Mississippi Conference. And we shall also be glad to have reports from local Sunday schools and communications from other interested workers.

Our plans for the League Department have not yet been fully wrought out, but we hope that the Conference officers and chapters in the various charges will write us of their work. We want to know what is being done that we may tell it to others. This will create interest and tend to arouse a healthful spirit of emulation. Our aim and prayer is to make the Advocate the greatest possible force in building up the cause of Christ and our glorious Methodism.

CALLED UP HIGHER.

A note from Rev. J. H. Ingram brings news of the death of Mr. S. M. Spencer, Sr., which occurred at his home at Glen Allan, Miss., on December 30, 1910. This is, indeed, a great loss to that community. He was one of the most patriotic, upright, and useful citizens of Washington County, and his life in every respect was above reproach. He was a staunch member of the Presbyterian Church, though he worked in perfect harmony with our preachers, there usually being no other kind in the village where he resided. For many years he was superintendent of the Glen Allan Sunday school, and his influence was widely felt for good. In him every worthy cause found a faithful friend, and every evil one an uncompromising foe. He had a kindly feeling for Methodism, and was a reader of the New Orleans Advocate. He fought a good fight, kept the faith, has finished his course, and we doubt not has found awaiting him a crown. We mourn the departure of this clean, influential, high-minded citizen and stainless Christian gentleman. May God consciously abide with those who sorrow because he has gone from us, and comfort every aching heart!

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. L. Graves is happy in his new home at Iuka, Miss. We thank him for an invitation to visit him during the year.

The Pollock News states that Rev. A. R. Hoffmann preached to large congregations at his initial services the Sunday after Conference.

Rev. A. H. Williams reports a cordial reception by the people of his new charge at Shuqatalak, Miss. He is pleased with the outlook for the incoming year.

Miss Gordon, a resident of Biloxi, and long-time worker in the factory district, is associated with Miss Long in the noble work of the Wesley House in that city.

We learn that Brother H. R. Caldwell, of Mount Olive, Miss., is feeble in health but, as is to be expected, is strong in the faith. May his path constantly grow brighter!

Rev. C. A. Northington reports a most kindly reception at Bellefontaine, Miss., where he is happily domiciled in his new home. We thank him for his promise to remember the Advocate in his work.

Miss Belle Kearney of Mississippi, whose reputation as an eloquent advocate of temperance reform is national, is spending the winter at the Hotel Normandie in Washington City.

Rev. O. L. Savage, of Ruleville, Miss., continues to bring us under obligations for service rendered the Advocate. The Conference organ has no better friend than he, and in his hands all of the interests of Methodism are safe.

Rev. J. W. Merritt, an honored superannuate of the Colorado Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is visiting in New Orleans. He attended the preachers' meeting of our Church Monday morning and made a brief talk.

The Methodist Church at Tupelo, Miss., has increased the pastor's salary from $1,800 to $2,000. Rev. W. L. Duren who is in charge there begins the year in high favor with his flock and all departments of the work well organized and active.

Rev. J. H. Smith began his work at Boyle, Miss., on the first Sunday after Conference. The people have received him pleasantly, and he is cheerful and hopeful. He has an important field, and we trust that his labors may be crowned with success.

We are indebted to Dr. W. H. LaPrade of Meridian, Miss., for a list of eight subscribers. He is having a prosperous pastorate at Central Church, where he is greatly beloved by all of the people. Both as a worker and preacher he ranks with the best in the connection.

The following have recently sent us good lists of subscribers for which they have our sincere thanks: Rev. T. J. Embree, Bogalusa, La.; Rev. J. P. Haney, Greensburg, La.; Rev. W. M. Commander, Chester, Miss.; Mrs. A. T. Cannonche, Jennings, La.; Mrs. T. S. Randle, Gilbert, La.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, of Gulfport, and Rev. W. B. Jones, presiding elder of the Seashore District, were in the city last Friday and favored the Advocate office with a call. The editor regrets having missed these brethren, who, according to the report of the publisher, brought with them smiles and good cheer.

The Louisiana Conference has placed in the field as a Sunday school missionary, Rev. P. O. Lowrey, who served in the pastorate at Le Compté last year. He is said to be well equipped for his new position and has already entered upon the work. Our information is that he will make his headquarters at Mansfield.

Rev. H. H. Griffin, of Danville, Ark., in renewing his subscription for the Advocate, has kind words to say of the paper. His stewards have shown their appreciation of his worth by raising his salary. The last payment has been made on a handsome new church, which Bishop McCoy is expected to dedicate in the near future.

Rev. J. D. Simpson is entering upon his fourth year at Ackerman, Miss. He was the recipient of a generous "pounding" at the hands of his people on his return from Conference, which was a substantial expression of their love and esteem. May his prayer that this may be the best year of the quadrennium, be abundantly answered!

We thank Rev. W. H. Huntley for an invitation to visit him in his new charge, Jefferson Street, Natchez. Happy is the preacher who ministers to so excellent a people. And happy the people who may enjoy the delightful companionship and ministry of Brother Huntley. If circumstances allowed, we should be happy to accept the cordial invitation.

Under date of the 29th ult., Rev. W. V. Shearer writes as follows from Moorhead, Miss.: "We are nicely situated here. The people have heartily welcomed us, and did not spare money in furnishing the parsonage. They are planning to add several rooms to it at once, which will make it one of the most desirable of all the preachers' homes in the Wlnona District."

In sending in some subscribers to the Advocate on January 3rd (for which he has our thanks), Rev. T. M. Bradley stated that Dr. H. L. Sutherland, of Rosedale, had been ill for a week. This information has occasioned us not a little regret and solicitude. A better physician, a more worthy citizen, and a manlier man than Dr. Sutherland would be difficult to find.

Just as we are closing our forms for the press, a telegram from Rev. J. H. Felts, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, and Rev. R. P. Neblett, the pastor at Houston, Miss., brings the news that all of the officials at Houston have become subscribers to the Advocate, entitling that charge to a place on the "Honor Roll." Hurrah for Houston and all concerned!

Rev. M. L. Ward reached his new work at Dumas, Miss., on Dec. 13. He found a noble people and a promising outlook for the year's work. These are enough to inspire any preacher to his best efforts.

A recent dispatch from Aberdeen, Miss., to the Memphis Commercial Appeal states that the historic old Methodist Church of that place will soon be torn down and a new $40,000 structure erected. Brother Murrah is fast making a reputation as a church builder.

Dr. S. H. Werlein's sermon at the First Methodist Church of this city last Sunday morning was an appreciation of Tolstoi. Echoes of it that have reached us are to the effect that it was a scholarly and eloquent discourse, calculated to touch the heart and awaken a desire for higher and better things.

We clip the following from the Lincoln County Times of January 5: "Dr. I. W. Cooper will leave the last of next week for Jacksonville, Fla., where he will join Bishop W. A. Candler and a party of friends for a trip to Cuba. He will be away about a month and anticipates a most delightful vacation."

Work has been resumed upon the new church enterprise at Forest, Miss., where Rev. A. M. Broadfoot is the energetic pastor. The structure is modeled after the beautiful new house of worship at Amite, La., and is expected to be ready for occupancy early in the spring.

We appreciate the many kind expressions of our readers concerning the Advocate. Mrs. V. M. Millsaps, of Harrison, Miss., says she does not remember the time when the paper did not come to her home, and that she reads it from beginning to end. If all our people would read the church papers regularly, interest in our Zion would be greatly increased.

Mrs. E. C. Mayfield, of Durant, Miss., informs us of the death of a long-time subscriber to the Advocate, Mr. J. S. Weatherby, who passed away on last Thanksgiving Day. We regret to lose any friend of our paper, and especially those who for years have shown their interest and loyalty. We extend sympathy to all upon whom the shadow of this bereavement has fallen.

We are grateful to Miss Maggie Tate, of Blue Mountain College, for kindly words and good wishes for the New Year, expressed in a communication bringing her renewal. She is a Methodist who labors surrounded by Baptists, maintaining perfect loyalty to her own communion, yet honored and esteemed by her co-adjutors of another faith. Teaching, when one puts heart and high purpose into it, is a noble calling; and this is what Miss Tate does.

The December number of The Lookout, published by the students of Centenary College, is an attractive and interesting record of college life. The editor-in-chief, Henry T. Young, has an able corps of assistants, and the various departments of the magazine reflect great credit upon those in charge. A large circulation of this periodical would be encouraging to the students and would foster an interest among our people in the splendid work our educational institution is doing.

Rev. A. G. Hall, lately appointed to Crenshaw, Miss., writes as follows: "I came to my new charge in time to preach on the Sabbath immediately following the adjournment of Conference. Those of my people whom I have met (perhaps about three-fourths of our membership) have impressed me most favorably. Without exception, they have been very kind to Mrs. Hall and myself. They are very much in love with Brother W. J. O'Bryant, my predecessor. This is encouraging. We are expecting a year of prosperity."

Writing from Stockton, Cal., where he is now pastor, Rev. I. D. Borders, formerly of North Mississippi, thus speaks of the friends whom he has left behind: "The brethren of the home Conference are the dearest friends I have on earth, and my love for them is as unwavering as the North Star." Mississippi yet claims Brother Borders; we have only loaned him to the West awhile, and hope to have him back in the not-far future. We are pleased to state that he will tell our readers something of the "Land of the Sunset Sea" in our next issue.

We regret to learn that Judge F. A. Critz, of West Point, who is one of the best known Methodist laymen in Mississippi, has been quite ill and confined to his room for the past three months. The latest information from him, however, is that he is improving and his friends hope that he will soon be able to be out again. Judge Critz has long been an active worker for the Master, teaching in the Sunday school, serving on the board of stewards, and helping forward the interests of the Church generally. He has also been a member of the General Conference.

To Rev. W. M. Young, the faithful presiding elder of the Sardis District, we are indebted for the following items of interest, given in a letter written on January 6th: "Rev. V. B. Randolph has been quite sick, but is reported to be improving. He has made a favorable start at Como. Rev. J. W. Raper, of Byhalia, has also been ill for a week, having barely escaped pneumonia. The Sardis people are delighted with Brother Tucker, and he has made a fine impression upon the whole town. The work of the district is moving off well." We trust that the brethren indisposed will soon be able to be about their "loved employ" in their usual strength and vigor.

Rev. M. L. Burton, who has been at the Touro Infirmary in this city for about a month and was thought to be improving, had unfavorable symptoms the early part of last week and the attending physicians decided that it was wise to resort to surgical treatment. Accordingly, he was operated on for gall-duct troubles on Friday, the 6th inst., and passed through the trying ordeal remarkably well. At this writing the operation seems to have been a success, and the prospect is for a prompt recovery. Indeed, Brother Burton's physicians think that there is reason to hope that his health will soon be so fully restored that he will be able to become active again in the work of the ministry. Let earnest prayer continue to be offered that this capable and forceful preacher may be given back to the Church to aid in extending the Master's kingdom.

We had the pleasure of meeting on the train a few days since the Rev. R. B. Freeman, who is a son of Mr. C. B. Freeman of Memphis, and a nephew of the Rev. T. G. Freeman of the North Mississippi Conference. At the last session of the Pacific Conference, Freeman was appointed to Woodland, Cal., where he began his work with enthusiasm and the promise of large results. But on account of the alarming physical condition of his wife, in the interest of whose health he had gone West, he deemed it best to bring her back to Tennessee where she can have the attention and care of relatives and friends. Having been released from his charge, Brother Freeman is out of employment and would be pleased to do revival work, especially within the bounds of the Memphis and North Mississippi Conferences. He has had considerable experience and success in holding meetings, and the brethren who desire assistance would do well to correspond with him. He may be addressed at Martin, Tenn., R. F. D. No. 1.

NEW ORLEANS PREACHERS' MEETING.

The first regular meeting of the New Orleans Methodist Preachers' Meeting was held Monday morning, Jan. 9. Rev. J. M. Henry, presiding elder, was elected president; Rev. W. W. Holmes, vice-president, and Rev. J. W. Booth, secretary and treasurer.

Rev. Dr. Merritt, a superannuate of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was a visitor to the meeting, and spoke briefly of the work of Methodism in the West.

Dr. Thompson, representing the work of the Methodist Brotherhood and Men's Religious Movement, addressed the body concerning his work.

Dr. S. A. Smith, superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, was present, and spoke concerning the temperance movement in the State.

Brother N. E. Joyner called attention to plans for "outing work" to be undertaken this year, and also spoke of the "Boy Scout" movement.

Dr. R. A. Meek, editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, had a few words of interest for the meeting.

A motion was made and carried, to the effect that people outside of the city be requested to send to the secretary of the Preachers' Meeting, the names of Methodists moving to the city, and also the names of those coming to the city for treatment who expect to be here for some time.

J. W. BOOTH, Secretary.

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over two hundred words in length will be published free of charge. All over two hundred words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around.

ALTA MAE BIBB, wife of J. F. Bibb, was born August 6, 1891, and died at Drew, Miss., Nov. 7, 1910. She was united in marriage to J. F. Bibb, Dec. 23, 1910. She was converted and joined the church when thirteen years old. Her friendly greeting was without formality. She had a kind word for every one, which evidenced the noble spirit of a generous heart. In her going, the husband has sustained a crushing sorrow. We laid her to rest in the cemetery at Drew, Miss., amid the tears and sobs of a large circle of friends and relatives. May the God of the living comfort the bereaved husband and the sorrowing relatives! O. L. SAVAGE.

Father Time has again swung his blade and severed the thread of life from our honored and beloved friend and brother, W. R. MILLER. Many faithful years were his lot, filled with good deeds, kind words and faithful service. Long will live in the hearts of those who have known him the memory of Uncle Riley. He was for more than half a century a loyal member of the Methodist Church, always ready to co-operate in any undertaking up to his last year. On a cold winter day, we used to sit in some sunny spot, sheltered from the wind and enjoy the warmth radiated from the sun's inexhaustible heat; so it made us feel to talk to Uncle Riley. He was a source of warmth and love in this cold, selfish world. Just to be near him made us feel the beneficence that pervaded the atmosphere around. And now that he has gone to a happier home, we can feel his spirit still watching around the places he loved, unconsciously influencing us to live more unselfishly. Slowly, one by one, the "old guard" of the church is passing out of this life. There are only a few of those old pioneers of Methodism left in the Delta. They taught their lesson, performed their task, ran their race, left their impress, and now are going to claim their reward. And among the richest crowns we expect to see the one worn by Uncle Riley Miller. May the just and loving Father comfort his bereaved relatives and friends, and make his life an example to those striving to get nearer to our blessed Savior. **

THOMAS J. SPER JAYROE, the subject of this sketch, was born in Pike County, Ala., March 3, 1837. In said county, in a quiet country home Mr. Jayroe was "subject to his parents" all of his boyhood days. In 1858 he moved with his parents to Neshoba County, in Mississippi, and settled near the town of Philadelphia, the "Shire town" of said county. In 1859 Mr. Jayroe was happily married to Miss Susan Williamson. Of this union were born two children—a son and a daughter. In 1862 the good wife and mother was taken to heaven, but earth was left much the poorer by her going. In 1865 Mr. Jayroe was married to Miss Martha Jane Whitmire. This union was blessed with three daughters and two sons, all of whom, with their mother, yet live to mourn their severe loss. Mr. Jayroe enlisted for the Civil War of the "sixties," in the Fortieth Mississippi Regiment, and fought valiantly for the "Lost Cause" till July 28, 1864, when he was wounded, from the effects of which he never fully recovered. When a youth of seventeen years, Mr. Jayroe joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, but was not converted till three years later. After his conversion, his constant prayer and ambition were, "Preparer my God to thee," and his growth in grace was beautiful and continuous. In 1866 he was elected steward of the church, and from that time till his death he served the church as steward, trustee, or Sunday school superintendent, and sometimes in all three capacities at the same time. From the time he was first made an official of the church till decrepit old age prevented, he was always present at Quarterly Conferences, unless sickness prevented. Inclement weather or long distance never prevented him. It was the writer's honored privilege to be Mr. Jayroe's pastor two years—1906 and 1907—and he always found an association with this grand old saint to be an inspiration. I have never heard an unkind word spoken of Mr. Jayroe, but both young and old, rich and poor are profuse in their praises of him. He loved others, and those who knew him loved him. If he had an enemy, I never met him; and if any ever had any criticisms to offer, those criticisms have long since been buried in the depths of silence. In the latter end of the year 1903, a loathsome cancer began to prey upon the body, and although all that kind hands and surgical skill could do, was done, the ravages of the disease continued till the victim was claimed. As the body grew weaker the spirit grew stronger, and as the images of earth grew dim heaven grew brighter to this dear old disciple. In the evening of life, he delighted to talk only of God and heaven, and when he was assured that he was near the end of his journey here, he called his family about him and like Jacob of old, he blessed them, and told them there was nothing left for him to do but to praise God for his goodness and mercy that had followed him so long, and to suffer his will. On "Good Friday," the 25th day of March, 1910, the death angel came to claim his own. Never has a life been more bright, or more useful in its sphere, and never did a sun set more clear than did that of Brother Jayroe. For him to live was Christ, but to die was gain, for he has gone to be with God. May the God he loved and served so well, comfort and keep the bereaved ones! T. J. O'NEIL.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

The writer desires to express his appreciation of the character and ability of Rev. Elton Wilson who has left this circuit for Plaquemine.

Seldom have I heard sermons marked by greater thought and care in preparation than some of Mr. Wilson's; yet I have thought that his extemporaneous efforts were better. Mr. Wilson is not only a strong man, a thinker, but an earnest and bold preacher, not hesitating to preach sound doctrine and to rebuke sin.

He may lack those qualities that popularize him with the thoughtless and superficial, but the extent of the popularity and appreciation of Mr. Wilson may be safely taken as an index to the degree of intelligence and estimation of real worth in his community.

I would heartily commend him to his new congregation, and advise them to hear him, not for pleasure, or entertainment, but for instruction and edification—the real purposes of a sermon. Fraternally,

HOME REMEDY

Mrs. Temple Clark suffered for years, before she found relief in that popular, successful woman's medicine, Wine of Cardui.

Mrs. Clark, who lives in Timberville, Miss., writes: "Cardui has been worth more to me than a carload of silver. If it had not been for Cardui, I would have been dead. I love a dollar, but I have never seen one that I do not think as much of, as I do of a bottle of Cardui. I now keep it in my house, as regularly as I do coal oil or coffee, and have done so for years."

"Some years ago I jumped off a horse and had a mishap, and for about four years after that I suffered intense agony. At last I was induced to try Cardui, which cured me, and now I am well and happy."

"I am sure Cardui will cure other sick ladies as it has me."

Cardui is for women. It acts specifically and in a natural manner on the womanly system and has been found to relieve pain and to restore woman's health.

If you are nervous, miserable, or suffering from any form of female trouble, try Cardui. What it has done for other sick ladies it surely can do for you. Sold by all first class druggists, with full directions for use.

MEADVILLE, MISS.

Dear Brother Meek: At our Annual Conference at Hattiesburg, Bishop Mouzon read me out for the Meadville charge. I knew that I would have a new field of labor somewhere, for I had been at Topisaw for four years. I received my appointment as from the Lord, and at once set about to enter this new field. Monday morning, Dec. 19, I drove away from the parsonage at Topisaw. Tuesday evening, Dec. 20, I drove into Meadville and soon met a number of the kind people of this town. These people received me gladly. I had left my family at Topisaw to come Wednesday with a promise to meet them in Brookhaven. This I did, and on the arrival of the west-bound M. C. train at Brookhaven, we stood ready, with grip in hand, to board train for Meadville. At 7:15 p. m., the train pulled into the station. Brother J. S. Costley met us with conveyance to carry us to the parsonage. As rapidly as possible, we drove to the parsonage, a distance of nearly a half mile. As we neared the place, we could see the light shining through the windows, which made us more anxious to reach the place. Reaching our new home, we were conducted into a room where we found a warm fire, for we were cold. But this was not all. We met there a company of friends with bright faces, and as their warm hearts beat with ours, we at once felt at home and among a good people who knew how to make a preacher and his family feel good. As soon as we were through shaking hands and had warmed ourselves, we were invited to the dining room where we dined sumptuously. Oh, how we did enjoy that good supper! The good ladies had brought enough good things to last us several days. And it did not stop with that, for we are still receiving good things from our neighbors. Mrs. J. S. Costley is almost keeping us in milk and butter. What she lacks, Mrs. Gaugh supplies. Mr. and Mrs. Denis Sullivan did not forget us when they killed that fine hog. We had wondered and wondered what we would have for our Xmas dinner, and had about given up in despair when Mrs. R. E. Bennett sent us a nice, fat goose, ready to bake. Many thanks to our many thoughtful friends. The Meadville charge as it now is, is in its infancy, embracing Meadville, Monroe, Eddiceton, and McCall. The three latter are new towns on the M. C. Railroad. There is plenty of work to do here in developing this work, but we expect to do it in the "strength of the Lord," and by the time our four years are out here, we hope to see it one of the leading charges in the Mississippi Conference. We sincerely desire an interest in the prayers of all for us in our work.—J. B. King, P. C.

BOGUE CHITTO AND NORTHFIELD.

A resume of my two years' work at Bogue Chitto and Northfield charge: I was appointed to the charge by Bishop H. C. Morrison, December, 1908. I found 232 members at the two churches. After revising the church register at both places to ascertain the actual membership there appeared a net gain of 82 members in the two years I served the charge. The first year the assessment made on the work was $1662 which was paid; $479.64 was raised for other objects, making a total of $2141.64 paid by the two churches. This past year the various claims amounted to $1633.00, making a difference of $29.00. The presiding elder's claim and some others were a few dollars less. The total equally divided made $816.50, for each of the churches. The two paid for everything the past year $2152.64. The charge has lost C. S. Butterfield from Northfield, who was not only liberal himself but he impressed the Church with a spirit of liberality. The stewardship found a good second in Brother D. R. Kayes. He is active and efficient in the stewardship. He made a payment every month to the finances of the church and at the last Quarterly Conference reported every dollar in full. If the other church had followed his example, it would have been full, too. A. B. Connelly, now of Brookhaven, had belonged to Bogue Chitto and managed the finances of the church up to the time of my pastorate. He was the leading contributor in the church and the largest contributor to its finances. He made the Lord's business his business in the community. There is no one there to take his place. The power of such an one cannot be realized in a church until they are removed from it. If Connelly had been there, all the claims would have been met, as they were met at Northfield. The church at Bogue Chitto is handicapped because of the financial conditions prevailing there. The mill company only has two pay days a year. There are only two months in the year that those who work at the mill get money for their labor, the first of July and the first of January, the other months they get orders for goods only. Consequently the people who work for the company have little money to contribute to the finances of the church. A different state of things prevails at Northfield. The mill company is a strong financial company; they pay off their hands every month and then contribute cheerfully to the church and every worthy cause or claim. I decided many years ago that I would never go up to Conference with a deficit on any claim that the Conference expects me to raise. I have not gone to Conference since 1891 with an incomplete report except the nine years I was presiding elder, some preachers would fall behind and that would mar the report of the whole district. They would begin the year with the expectation of failing behind at Conference and they always succeeded. Some stewards are the same way, they talk failure and feel failure and the contagion spreads and failure is inevitable. Some Methodist stewards seem to care little about their pastor's salary. They will fall behind fifty or one hundred dollars and let him go to Conference unpaid and never offer a dollar on the deficit, all apparently without a pang of conscience, slinging with gusto, "I am happy on the way." Some members will let the years pass without contributing a dollar to the finances, who will be the first at the depot to meet the new pastor to give him the "royal welcome," full of gush and big promises. I leave the charge with many regrets. I have a number of good friends at both the towns. They have proven so by many tokens. I shall carry pleasant recollections of them to my last days. I am on the sick man's list this year, but do not expect to be idle. I shall preach when opportunity offers and shall seek such opportunity here and there.—O. G. Halliburton.

SOUTH SIDE STATION, MERIDIAN.

South Side Station does not sound any more than South Side and Poplar Springs, but it does mean more. It means progress and also greater progress. It means that the people of each place are purposing to do more and that more for them will be done. It means glory to God and greater good to the people. Today, the 31st of December, is the eighteenth day of work since Conference, and I am happy to say that I have made 165 visits during the eighteen days and baptized twenty-one infants, and as every pastor knows, did many other things. We have made a good beginning, thanks be to our Holy Father for a new station. Let each reader of this remember my family and our new station and me in his prayers. Pray for us to have an abundant fruitage, for our blessed Lord said: "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples." John xv, 8.—Isaac Lockhart Peebles.

Famous "Pint of Cough Syrup" Recipe

No Better Remedy at any Price. Fully Guaranteed.

Make a plain syrup by mixing one pint of granulated sugar and ½ pint of warm water and stir for two minutes. Put 2½ ounces of pure Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup. This gives you a family supply of the best cough syrup at a saving of $2. It never spoils. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

The effectiveness of this simple remedy is surprising. It seems to take hold instantly, and will usually stop the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. It tones up the jaded appetite and is just laxative enough to be helpful in a cough, and has a pleasing taste. Also excellent for bronchial trouble, throat tickle, sore lungs, and asthma, and an unequalled remedy for whooping cough.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar syrup (or strained honey) is a prime favorite in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has been imitated, though never successfully. If you try it, use only genuine Pinex, which is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in eucalol and all the natural healing pine elements, other preparations will not work in this recipe.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 236 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

DESIRES WORK.

Dear Brother Meek: Please announce through your paper that I am ready for work.

I am just out of college, where I have had four years of training; three of them in the Meridian Male College, at Meridian, Miss. I am a full fledged holiness preacher, and will not compromise an inch.

I prefer the itinerant work in the western country. However, "I will follow where He leadeth, and pasture where He feedeth." Yours for Christ's kingdom.

Eupora, Miss.

A. C. SEARCY.

THE ORIGIN OF GRASS WIDOW.

"Grass widow" is a corruption of "grace widow," a name originating in the Middle Ages, and meaning one who becomes a widow by grace or favor, and not of necessity as by death. Divorces were then granted only by the church, and the woman benefited was always alluded to in the papal decree as "vidua de gratia."—Old Scrapbook.

A LIFELONG FRIEND.

Most every one has some friend in particular, some one that gives them comfort in time of trouble, and on whom they can rely implicitly. Friends vary; that is, friends are not always necessarily human beings, but is any thing that is comforting in our dark hours. There are friends in the shape of people, cats, dogs, birds and what not, but the best friend in the world, the friend that can be relied upon regardless of circumstances or conditions, is "Gray's Ointment." It cures your boils, carbuncles, bruises, cuts, burns, old sores, rheumatism, felons; prevents blood poisoning and relieves you of untold suffering. It is a friend that you should have with you always. Get a box from your druggist for 25c, or write us for free sample to test its friendship, addressing Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 804 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE FROM DEATH.

Rev. T. P. Pierce, a minister and merchant of Vinemont, Ala., has a close call.

Rev. T. P. Pierce.

Following is Mr. Pierce's own story of how he fell into good hands and evaded the "grim reaper."

"In the spring of 1907 I was a complete wreck, and was pronounced by some doctors to have dropsy, by one to have cancer of the stomach, another said tumor in all, there were fourteen or fifteen doctors. Scarcely any of them agreed, and none of them did me any good whatever. Four of our county doctors said I could not be cured and gave me up to die. My weight had decreased to 147 lbs. and I was perfectly helpless, when I decided to try W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron. After using five bottles, my health was immediately restored, and in a few weeks, I was as strong and healthy as ever in my life. My weight to-day is 247 lbs., and I shall never fail to recommend W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron."

W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron can be had from any druggist in 50c and $1.00 bottles. If after using two-thirds of a $1.00 bottle you are not benefited, take the bottle back to your druggist and he will refund your money. If your druggist can't supply you, the W. H. Bull Medicine Company, St. Louis, Mo., will send it direct upon receipt of price.

CO-OPERATION WANTED.

To the Pastors of North Mississippi:

Your Sunday School Board is desirous of inaugurating a forward movement to stimulate interest, and help the two thousand and more earnest workers throughout North Mississippi.

Plans were set on foot at our recent meeting in Sardis and the detail matters were left to the Executive Committee.

In accordance with the report adopted by the Conference and the full and hearty concurrence of the old as well as the newly organized Board arrangements have been made for definite field work, and Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of Corinth, will serve us as Secretary to give you any assistance in stimulating the workers to greater zeal. She needs only to have your endorsement and encouragement that she may have access to the soldiers on the firing line, the superintendents and teachers.

We take great pleasure in commending her to you, asking that you put your leaders in touch with her office and let her be used of God for the splendid service of which she is capable. Most sincerely,

R. P. NEBLETT,

Chairman.

R. H. B. GLADNEY,

OUR RELATIONSHIP WITH ONE ANOTHER.

(Rom. xii. 4-5; I Cor. i. 10; xii. 13-17.)

The other day a man received a wound in his foot from a rusty nail. Within ten days, he was a corpse from lockjaw. A man in New York City was licked on the hand by a sick dog that he had befriended. He died of hydrophobia. When a surgeon performs an operation of any sort, the flesh where the wound is to be made is thoroughly cleansed with an aseptic fluid, every instrument is sterilized; the operating room itself, with all its furnishings, is also subjected to similar treatment, and the hands of the surgeon must be repeatedly immersed in disinfectant liquids. Much is being written in popular magazines to-day in justification of vivisection, performing operations upon living animals for the sake of experimentation. It is claimed that thousands of human lives have been saved by this practice. All we know about the treatment of smallpox, consumption, the plague, diphtheria, and scores of other human ills has been learned in this way.

Now the ravages of quick death as well as the scientific resistance to the same are explained by a single, simple fact, the circulation of the blood. The blood that flows through a festering sore is taken again into the heart and sent on its way through the healthy portions of the body. Hence blood poison, nerve paralysis, death. So a man dare not trifle with the scratch on his finger. The body is one with many members, and every member drinks the same blood. Now this fact so commonly known is a type of what society is. Certain familiar considerations will serve to enforce this contention.

1. The law of heredity proves it. "The sins of the father shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation," thundered the Lawgiver from Sinai. We used to think that this was the declaration of an arbitrary judgment. We have learned that it is the statement of a fundamental law of human life. "Blood will tell." The gift or the curse of a sire in this generation may reappear in a child many generations removed. Hence it has been aptly remarked: "If you want to make a man, you must begin three hundred years before the child is born." God laughs at that estimate. He began millions of years ago, and has not yet achieved the making of a perfect man. In all religious thought there are prominent two types of man: In the Christian religion Adam and Christ answer to the conception. "As in Adam all die," writes the apostle, "even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Men are partakers of the most corrupt and weakest strains that have appeared in the race, even as they are partakers of the most wholesome and strengthening influences that make themselves known. Since Christ the world has been straitened between two opposing strains of heredity. As it has tried to yield to the claims and the positive upward pull of the one, it has been drawn down and held in leash by the other. "When I would do good, evil is present with me."

2. It is proved by the law of environment. Every existing sanitary measure in the world to-day testifies to the fact that society is one just as much as the body is one. Adequate sewerage, ample supply of wholesome water, regulations in regard to the disposal of garbage, laws against spitting on sidewalks and in public buildings, the quarantine against infected districts, the pure food law and many other achievements without number mark society's dawning consciousness that it is not many but one. The congestion of population which has made it necessary for preventive and protective measures to be adopted is a symptom of another thing that has taken place, further demonstrating the oneness of society. The removal of physical barriers to human intercourse has destroyed the isolation that once characterized the great peoples of the world. China's great wall is broken down, Korea could not remain a hermit nation, India could not avoid the transforming touch of England, and Africa cannot long be described as the Dark Continent. The islands of the sea are finding themselves in the track of the world's commerce. The colors on every map on the globe are being modified by the shifting of populations. Nations no longer have to wait for faint echoes of what is taking place among their neighbors. The slightest whisper sends a recognizable impulse around the world, even as the slightest earth tremor is immediately detected by the scientist's instruments.

3. The result of this destruction of age-long isolation is easily manifest in the quickly felt and partially expressed sense of brotherhood with which the nerves of men tingle. Living in the same large room makes us feel dependent on one another. We exchange goods and ideas. We enter into treaty relations. We study in each other's schools and adapt each other's customs to our local habits. We exchange social calls, and in many ways come to recognize the fundamental likeness that we hear one to another. This sense of dependence creates in us a desire to co-operate in pursuing the most worthy objectives that loom upon our common horizon. China seeks our aid in fighting the opium monster. We cannot destroy the white slave traffic without the help of Europe. Prohibition will most effectually prohibit when it becomes an international policy. The dream of world peace is being slowly but surely wrought into the stuff of reality through The Hague peace court. The students of all nations are joined together in a federation for the freedom of the faith among the farthest inhabitants of the earth. God in very truth is no respecter of persons, but has made of one blood all the nations for to dwell upon the face of the earth.

Who, Then, is My Neighbor?

The other man. Where he lives, what the color of his skin, what his habits of dress or his practice of specter of persons, but has made of significance. In this day of the physical unity of the race candid intelligence owns a close and necessary relation to the other man. What shall that relation be in name and in fact? The Christian religion offers an answer. It shall be a relationship in which agreement, unity, the common good shall be the ideal of all our striving. And this condition is to be brought about in just one way. It shall be in the name of Jesus. "In the name" describes a wonderful region of thought and activity. Included within the area represented by that phrase are all the incentives and all the challenges necessary to the production of a perfect order of society. Read Ephesians iv. 1-15. The name indicates a way of progress toward the goal of human history. It presents a message that is full of truthful statements about men and the affairs of men. The name reveals a power that revives and sustains the person of faith who tries to walk in the way and be obedient to the message, for at the heart of the name is the Person that bears the name, and fidelity to the name wins the unfailing friendship of the Person.—Epworth Era.

LESSON FOR JANUARY 15, 1911.

ASA'S GOOD REIGN IN JUDAH.

II. Chron. xv, 1-15.

Golden Text: Be ye strong, and let not your hands be slack; for your work shall be rewarded.

TEACHING TOPICS.

A. Returning Conqueror. Asa, the king of Judah, had just won a great victory. During the years preceding, Judah had enjoyed peace. The energetic Asa had spent this time in building fortresses and in equipping a great army. It seems that a certain Zerah (perhaps Osorkon I, Pharaoh of Egypt) heard of these vast armaments, and undertook to destroy the new power, which was a menace to his country. Zerah came out against the men of Judah with an army of "a thousand thousand" and with three hundred chariots. Asa was a man of faith; he was humble, and trusted to God alone for succor. He cried unto Jehovah: "There is none besides thee to help, between the mighty and him that hath no strength; help us, O Jehovah our God; for we rely on thee." The hosts of the Egyptians were much greater than Asa's army. But he went forward in the strength of the King of kings, and in his strength he overcame the assembled thousands. Then the victorious army returned to Jerusalem.

The Victor is Met by a Prophet. The conqueror approaches Jerusalem. His heart glows with the memory of the stirring battle. He looks up to Jerusalem, enthroned on her hills, and thinks of the splendid city where he is king. His thoughts run forward eagerly as he imagines the acclamations of the multitudes, so soon to greet his ears. Has he not overcome the dreaded king? Has not the divine strength of Jehovah been vouchsafed to him? All heaven, as well as the whole world, has looked upon his victory, and now he returns in triumph. Then he sees a tall, simply robed figure approaching swiftly. It is Azariah, the prophet. He speaks no word either of praise or of blame. He has a word of solemn warning to speak to the king.

Asa's Danger. The messenger of God is most sorely needed when he is not expected, no, nor even thought of. Happy Asa, that he was privileged to hear the solemn note, before the shouts of the people should corrupt his mind with the pride of victory, his heart with the lust of power!

The Friendship of Jehovah. According to the prophet this was the fact of supreme importance for Asa to consider and for his people to know. Not all the glories of victory could compare for a moment with the unspeakable privilege of the presence of Jehovah. The prophet was much concerned lest the finest gift be lost in the deluge of good fortune. Therefore he calls the wandering thoughts of the king back to his God. He reminds a rejoicing people of gratitude and the higher loyalty.

Azariah's Doctrine of Election. Azariah had a very clear teaching to present to the great king. We may call it a doctrine of election, although it reads somewhat different from more modern doctrines of the name. To understand the significance of Azariah's thought, to himself, and to his hearers, we must remember the tremendous importance that the Hebrews attached to their belief in God's special choice of them. He was the God of Israel, and they were his peculiar people. With this background of thought we can appreciate something of the depth of the prophet's feeling and of his conviction. How clear was his ethical insight, how unswervingly true his consciousness of right! "Jehovah is with you while ye are with him." There is no mistaking Azariah's meaning. God's choice must be man's choice to make the covenant valid. No one should deceive himself with thoughts of the recent victory. Because they had sought Jehovah, they had found him. So would it ever be. But just as surely, if they forsake him, he would forsake them. It is a solemn thought. The momentous decision rests upon ourselves. Whether or not God dwells with men depends utterly upon their own desire. Here is the Biblical doctrine of the election. It makes the human initiative the crucial point.

A Memory of the Past. To enforce his point, the prophet recalled to the people some of the heart experiences of their country. It was a strong appeal. The wise man is he who can use history to throw light on the present crisis. He is the true emancipator who can lead the people to learn the lessons of gratitude and patience and hope, with which the past abounds.

The Higher Courage. It is rather a significant phrase, "Asa took courage" when he heard the words of the prophet. At first the simple words appalled the warrior. The captain of five hundred thousand men and conqueror of Egypt had to take courage before he could put away the abominations out of his own country! These abominations were the idols and the cruel and obscene accompaniments of the heathen worship. The cure of this evil was a more heroic task than the routing of Pharaoh's hosts. The reformers of to-day realize this fact. In their lofty endeavor we see displayed a higher courage than that of conquerors. The same thing is true in the life of the individual. It is more difficult to control one's self than to take a city. As Fortia said, "I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done than to be one of the twenty to follow my own teaching."

The Work Rewarded. Nevertheless, to nations and to men the challenge of the prophet still rings down the centuries. We hear also his word of comfort. "Your work shall be rewarded." The prophet's insistence on the work that remained may have irritated the man, who had achieved a more glorious thing on the battlefield. But he hearkened unto the wisdom of the prophet. He did honor to the cause of Jehovah by doing the deeds required of him. Asa's religion was a religion of the hands. His works were made manifest before men. "The result was that the men of the Northern tribes came to him 'in abundance' when they saw that Jehovah his God was with him." This illustrates a truth for all time. Jehovah is found to them that seek him with their whole desire. —Western Christian Advocate.

REV. J. D. NEWSOM.

This nice old gentleman and Mrs. Newsom, his wife, live at Shuqualak, North Mississippi Conference, in the Columbus District parsonage for superannuates. This property is worth probably $1,000 and is convenient to town and to church. The building is good in design—contains four or five rooms, with a porch and hallway and is supplied with necessary chimneys, flues, etc., but is still unfinished. The old people are cheerful and uncomplaining, and expend one-tenth of their income from the Conference to improve the property. The living room is newly finished inside with ceiling and fireplace, but open still at the floor for base planks, and is unfinished as to papering and mantel piece.

Some one in the Columbus District who has money would honor God and do a great kindness to these, his true servants, to send Brother Newsom enough to do this finishing and to paint the house. He greatly needs, also a book case.

Mrs. Newsom is the younger of the two, and is altogether attentive and domestic, and withal is useful as a worker in the church. Brother Newsom entered the ministry in 1848, and was valiant and efficient to plant the church at a time when service meant sacrifice and heroism. It is to the honor of his church and the district that the evening of his life is made fairly comfortable, but it should be made more so by completing the house and by making it more attractive and convenient. The Shuqualak people have done well for this retired minister and property, and Brother Newsom is much esteemed by his neighbors and often is generously dealt with by them.

Fluttering Hearts

"I have had heart trouble for 40 years after taking 18 bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy. I am entirely cured, and to-day I do not feel the slightest effect of heart trouble."

DAVID FRAZIER,
State Soldiers' Home, Erie, Co., Ohio.
Fluttering indicates a weakness of the nerves and muscles of the heart. Like palpitation, shortness of breath, pain in side and shoulder, it is frequently followed by the worse form of heart disease; therefore it should not be neglected.

Dr. Miles' Nervine
Is a most reliable heart medicine. It strengthens and regulates the heart action, stimulates the digestive organs, and increases the circulation.
The first package will benefit; if not your druggist will return your money.

Editorial

There is said to be a scarcity of local preachers in the Southern Methodist Church, but there is no lack of local members. By the latter we mean those who cannot see beyond their own little patch.

Influence may be defined as the attraction of personality. A human being can no more exist without it than matter can without the force of gravity. Whether any effort be made to exercise it or not, it emanates unceasingly from each and all. And it corresponds in kind to one's character. From the good man there goes forth a contagion of goodness, and from the bad man a contagion of evil. No one of all earth's millions lives to himself. By what you yourself are you are helping to make others either better or worse.

A Christian should live in touch with society and participate in its affairs. Not in its frivolities and questionable pleasures, but in those necessary activities which are essential to the happiness and welfare of mankind. The idea of a cloistered religion must have been invented by his Satanic Majesty. True Christianity is social, co-operative, aggressive, and wants to go everywhere. It has to do with politics, business, commerce, domestic life, education, and has even lifted the flag of the Red Cross alongside the banners of war. It would have its votaries live and labor among their fellow-men. The spirit of aloofness which sometimes takes possession of the weary disciple is not the spirit of Christ.

A writer in a recent issue of The Outlook says of Mr. Champ Clark, the prospective Speaker of the next national House of Representatives: "Having become leader of the minority, he showed more conservatism in his statements than formerly." The usual effect of responsibility is to steady men and increase their caution in speech and action. It has been stated that the United States Government has never had a Secretary of the Treasury whose views on financial questions were not considerably modified by his induction into office. We heard a leading Bishop say not long since that one of the first lessons a member of the episcopal college needs to learn is to be silent about many things. It is easy for those who are not accountable for the results to tell others who are administering great trusts what they should do. A free lance, who has only himself to take care of, generally has a critic's eye and a garrulous tongue. He can afford to be rash, but only a wise discretion befits men in responsible places either in Church or State.

At all times despicable, bigotry is most repulsive when it assumes persuasive tones and pleads for concessions to its claims. A conspicuous illustration of this is seen in the case of immersionists, who, when they have failed to convince an applicant for baptism by argument, appeal to him to adopt their view on the ground that all other denominations will accept baptism by immersion, but that they (the immersionists) do not regard any other mode as valid. A more pitiable begging of the question than this is inconceivable. Almost anything could be proven by such a method of reasoning. For instance, Tertullian held that only bishops have the right to baptize; how easy it would be for them, if they practiced immersion, to say, "Everybody accepts baptism as we administer it; we do not accept it when performed by any one else; therefore all the people should be baptized by us." Or the triune immersionists might come forward, and, with an equal show of logic, make a similar contention. Hard pressed, indeed, must be the cause which has to resort to such tactics!

Governor Comer of Alabama is said recently to have visited the State jails of that commonwealth, and as a result of his inspection to have pardoned over a hundred convicts who had been in prison for a long time. Referring to the matter, the Governor made the following statement: "I gave the question careful consideration, and I could see no reason for keeping these men, who had served so long and so disastrously to their own health and happiness." This action of Alabama's Chief Executive is reported to have been brought about by a recent reading of "The Prisoner of Chillon." Nearly a hundred years have passed since Byron wrote this imperishable poem, but from this account it would seem that "by it, he being dead, yet speaketh." No one can measure the influence of a great utterance that lives and rings through the centuries. Far more than we imagine, we are ruled by the sceptered sovereigns of thought who have vanished from the stage of action.

WHAT RELIGION IS AND DOES.

The question as to what constitutes true religion has been long discussed. But notwithstanding the vast amount of talking and writing that has been done on the subject, there is still a great diversity of opinion concerning it. Some have a notion that religion consists almost entirely in restraint and self-denial; in an unending series of don'ts, which take from the present life nearly all of its sweetness and joy. This view is a total misconception of the truth. There is, to be sure, a certain repression of self which is necessary in order to be a Christian, but it is the clamor of the meaner, baser self—the carnal nature—upon which restriction must be imposed. It is only when in communion with God that man's nobler self—his spiritual nature—can live, thrive, and progress toward perfection. Thus, losing his life in one respect, he finds it in a far higher and worthier sense. Giving up the coarse, the animal, the sensuous, he gains the things which are spiritual, uplifting, and divine. His soul thrills with a happiness which could never have come from the mere gratification of carnal appetite and desire. Not till the Godward side of one's nature is awakened and stirred into activity does he truly begin to live. A human being but gasps until there comes upon him a realization of the infinite and eternal.

Other common misconceptions of what religion is are those which make it consist in mere emotionalism, or mere morality, or merely in a spirit of altruism. There is, indeed, feeling in religion, deep, tender, sacred, and, at times, overpowering, but it is simply a result and not the essence or the cause. A man who only weeps and shouts is but a poor disciple of him who "went about doing good." There can be no true religion without morality; but one may be moral, at least as to his outward conduct, and yet know nothing of an experience of grace, or even have the views of the skeptic. Every Christian must be an altruist, but not every altruist is a Christian. Altruism is only the manward side of religion. It may utterly ignore the existence and claims of God, and when it does, it is naught else than a skeptical philanthropy—better, indeed, than selfishness—but utterly impotent to save. Examples of this have not been wanting in the world.

But what do the Scriptures say of religion? St. James says "Pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." But this is not a definition; it is what in logic is called a "judgment," which merely affirms of an object a part of what is true of it. A definition is a description which sets forth the entire nature of a thing. There is no adequate statement of what religion is in the Bible. The inspired writers seem to have preferred to describe it concretely as men have lived it, rather than abstractly to define it. Perhaps the nearest approach to a definition are the memorable words of St. Paul: "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." "Righteousness" means purity of thought, purpose, and conduct; "peace" evidences right relationship to God and man; "joy" is the result of conscious pardon and the high-born hopes enkindled in the soul, and the author of it all is the Holy Spirit, whose blessed presence still abides.

Instead of subtracting from and impoverishing one's life, true religion ennobles and immeasurably enriches it. For doubt, it substitutes faith; for the warfare in the soul, the glorious reign of peace; for the accusing voice of conscience, the divine whispers of forgiveness, and for the sense of loneliness and orphanage, the sweet assurance of the Heavenly Father's oversight and love. It supplies an authoritative source of moral obligation, strengthens the feeble human will, fortifies the moral nature at every weak point, and lifts the aspirations, groveling in the dust, and centers them upon high and holy things. It gives to human existence a new meaning and dignity, extends its horizon from the narrow tomb to eternity's farthest boundary line, and shows man as his final home, not the dark and repulsive grave, but "the house of many mansions," thronged with white-robed hosts, and ringing with the music of celestial choirs. Unchristian man is man despoiled of his birthright and without reasonable hope for the future. Man in Christ Jesus is man re-invested with the glory lost in Eden and moving toward the sky.

BILL OF INJUNCTION FILED BY THE BISHOPS IN THE VANDERBILT CASE.

In the Chancery Court of Davidson County, Tenn.

VIII.

1. The growth of the university was rapid, and soon it was desired that other Conferences should be admitted to membership of the corporation as was provided in the Memphis resolution. Both the Church and the Board of Trust desired the university to become the central university of Southern Methodism, and for it to become related in a connectional way with the entire Church, instead of with the patronizing Conferences, and it was determined by all parties that this could be effectuated by having the university related to the General Conference, and thus through the General Conference all the Annual Conferences could become patrons, in law as in fact, of the university. The Board of Trust as early as 1896 took steps to bring about the succeeding by the General Conference to membership in the corporation theretofore held and enjoyed by the patronizing Conferences.

2. At the meeting of the Board of Trust held in 1896 the following report was presented by Bishop Hendrix and Chancellor Kirkland—to wit:

"Your committee to whom was referred the question as to a change in the manner of electing trustees beg leave to report:

"I. We think it very important that Vanderbilt University should be closely allied to the whole Church as the central university of Southern Methodism.

"II. We believe this can be partially effected by increasing the number of trustees who are elected independently of our eight patronizing Conferences.

"III. We recommend that the by-laws be amended so as to give only one representative to each of the eight patronizing Conferences, and that the eight vacancies thus created be filled by the selection of representative men without geographical limitation.

"IV. As the best method of effecting this result, we suggest that each patronizing Conference be requested to approve this change in the by-laws and adopt the reduction from two to one representative."

3. Again in 1897 the following report was made to the Board of Trust:

"We recommend that in order that Vanderbilt University may be related to the Church as the central university of Southern Methodism and may assume a connectional relationship to the whole Church as the crowning feature of our educational system, the consent of the patronizing Conferences be asked to the proposition that hereafter the Board of Trustees be selected from the entire Church, without regard to geographical limitation, and to be confirmed by the General Conference. In order to secure such consent the Chancellor of the university is requested to submit this proposition to the several patronizing Conferences at the next annual sessions. We further suggest that a resolution be submitted to the next General Conference asking the adoption of this university as the central institution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." (Vol. V. Records of Board of Trust, p. 168.)

4. The action recommended by the above report was adopted by the Board of Trust, and the Chancellor of the university or some other representative of the Board of Trust appeared before the patronizing Conferences (which was a recognition of these Conferences as the members of the corporation), and requested action by the said patronizing Conferences in line with the above resolution; and the patronizing Conferences in the fall of 1897, with the exception of the Louisville Conference and the Tennessee Conference, assented to this arrangement; and in the fall of 1898 both the Louisville and Tennessee Conferences concurred therein.

(a). At the meeting of the Tennessee Conference held in 1897 a full report of the relation of Vanderbilt University to the patronizing Conferences was made, and the following resolution was adopted in reply to the request of the Board as set forth in Paragraph 3 of this section—to wit:

"Resolved, That the time has fully come when the control and ownership of Vanderbilt University should be in the General Conference, and that to this end we declare our willingness to transfer to that body all rights, title, and interest we have in said university, and hereby solicit the co-operation of all Conferences concerned and the Board of Trust in securing this desirable end.

"2. That until this is accomplished we adhere to the status secured to us by contract, which gives us a controlling voice in the appointment of our representatives on the Board of Trust."

(b) And the Memphis Conference, at its annual session held on November 17-22, 1897, adopted the following resolution:

"We have considered the resolution in reference to the transfer of the control of the Vanderbilt University to the General Conference. We recommend the action of the last Tennessee Conference, embodied in the following resolution:

(The same resolutions were set out which were adopted at the Tennessee Conference and contained in the preceding paragraph.)

(c) The White River Conference adopted a similar resolution.

(d) Chancellor Kirkland, of Vanderbilt University, reported at the annual meeting of the North Alabama Conference, held at Florence, Alabama, on the 3d day of December, 1897, and the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, That the time has come when the control and ownership of the Vanderbilt University should be in the General Conference, and to this end we express our willingness to transfer all rights, titles, and interest we have in said university."

(e) The Little Rock Conference adopted the same resolution as that adopted by the Tennessee Conference above set out.

(f) The Louisville Conference did not approve this at its meeting in 1897. At the fifty-third session of the Conference, held at Chestnut Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Louisville, September 21-27, 1898, the following resolution was adopted:

"At the last session of our Conference your Educational Board had under consideration a memorial from the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University requesting our approval and indorsement of the plan to transfer the management of the university from the eight patronizing Conferences to the General Conference; so that in future the trustees would be selected from the Church at large without reference to any particular Conference, and so that the ratification of the trustees thus selected should be by the General Conference in lieu of the Annual Conference. To this memorial we made the following reply:

"We have carefully considered the memorial from the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, and regard the proposed change in character as far too sweeping and radical. We therefore think it best to defer action for the present on this memorial, and so recommend."

"It now appears that all the patronizing Conferences except the Louisville have recommended the proposed change in the charter, and the General Conference has accepted the proposition to take charge of the university so soon as all the Conferences shall transfer their rights to it. The Board of Trust await the final action of the Conference to make the transfer.

"Your Educational Board has therefore reviewed the case carefully, and herewith submit the following:

"We cannot fully concur with the majority as to the wisdom of the proposed change. We believe the present basis of representation, giving one trustee to each of the patronizing Conferences, and a limited number elected from the Church at large, and the entire College of Bishops made bona fide members of the Board guarantees not only to the entire Church but to the outside world all the benefits and advantages of the institution.

"We think it a doubtful experiment to transfer so valuable interests, in which we now have secured to us the very best, collegiate advantages, to other hands, from whom we have no assurance that these advantages shall be perpetuated.

"When we were admitted to the list of patronizing Conferences it was understood that the college department of the university should become our college, and with this understanding, encouraged by those in authority, we have projected our educational system on the training school idea, to fit our boys for this higher college, rather than undertake to establish a Conference college.

"We do not think such radical change as here intimated is probable in the near future, but it is a possibility, and indeed some of the Conferences which have their individual colleges to care for have among them earnest advocates of a speedily disposed-of college work in this university.

"However, with all the difficulties confronting us, it does not seem proper that our Conference should stand alone in opposition to the proposed change, but rather yield to the wishes of the majority.

"With this explanation, therefore, we recommend the adoption of the resolution offered by Gross Alexander and R. W. Browder, which was referred to this Board on Saturday, and is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Louisville Conference approve the action taken by the late General Conference concerning the relation of Vanderbilt University to the Church, and we hereby transfer our rights in Vanderbilt University to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South."

"We also recommend that the Secretary of this Conference furnish a copy of this paper to the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University to be placed on its records, that its members may always understand the wish of the Conference as regards the perpetuity of the college department."

IX.

1. At the session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held in Baltimore in May, 1898, a committee of the Board of Trust of the Vanderbilt University, appointed in accordance with the resolution hereinbefore quoted, presented to the General Conference the following memorial:

"To the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in session in Baltimore, May, 1898:

"The undersigned, constituting a committee appointed by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University to make a special report to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, beg leave to present this communication with reference to the university and its relation to the whole Church. Vanderbilt University, as is well known, has heretofore been the central institution of eight patronizing Conferences. The title to the property is vested in a Board, to be held in trust for these Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. For several years the Board has had under consideration a plan to make the university entirely connectional and relate it directly to the whole Church. The plan proposed is to have the patronizing Conferences transfer their rights in the university to the General Conference, and to have the General Conference by proper resolution accept the patronage of the university and consent to assume toward this enterprise the same relation heretofore held by the separate Conferences. The Board of Trust has officially expressed its approval of this plan, and most of the patronizing Conferences have done the same thing.

"By the charter of the University the Board of Trust is vested with the power and obligation to fill its own vacancies; but the election of any member is not valid under the law of the university until said member has been confirmed by the Conference which he is designed to represent. Under the new plan the Board would be at liberty to select its members without geographical restrictions of any kind, and the General Conference would confirm or reject the appointment. This duty could be exercised either by the General Conference as a body, or it could be delegated by the Conference to some Board, itself the creature of the General Conference. Naturally the Board of Education will be thought of in this connection. This Board meets every year, and is likely to be charged more and more with the oversight of our institutions of learning. It is now trying to devise methods for correlating all our colleges and universities, and it would be appropriate for the General Conference to exercise its control of Vanderbilt University largely through the Board. In that manner vacancies in the Board of Trust of the University could be filled every year, and it would not be necessary to wait four years for action that might be promptly needed.

"As a committee, therefore, of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, we beg to present this matter to the General Conference, and invite such action as may be adjudged right and proper.

"(Signed) A. W. Wilson, Charles B. Galloway, Eugene R. Hendrix."

2. And at said session of the General Conference it accepted the proposed relation and control of Vanderbilt University, and the patronizing Conferences having assented thereto and transferred to it their membership in the corporation, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, became the member of this corporation. The action of the General Conference was embodied in the following resolution:

"First. That the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, hereby accepts the proposed relation and control of the Vanderbilt University and commits to the General Board of Education the confirmation of all trustees selected by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University.

"Second. That this resolution take effect as soon as the consent of all the present patronizing Conferences has been obtained, all the necessary legal steps taken, and preliminary details arranged."

X.

1. By the action of the patronizing Conferences in transferring their rights as members in the university to the General Conference, and the latter's acceptance of the same and "the control" of the university—which was done at the request of the Board of Trust—the General Conference, the law-making body of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, became the member of Vanderbilt University and exercised its rights to confirm the nominations of the Board of Trust, and did so confirm them up to 1910, acting through the General Board of Education of the Church. Thus from the founding of the university up to the present year the authority of the Church and its ownership of the university, either by the Annual and patronizing Conferences or by the General Conference, has always been recognized by the Board of Trust; and the Church, either a part of it as represented by the patronizing Annual Conferences or the whole by the General Conference exercising the right of member, has either nominated or confirmed the members of the Board of Trust.

XI.

In addition to the membership of the patronizing Conferences in the corporation, the founders of the university vested in the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, visitatorial power, and this was done by the 9th paragraph of the Memphis resolutions. However, it was not deemed necessary by the Bishops to exercise their power as visitors until the year 1910, and until the action of the Board of Trust on June 11 and 12 of that year as herein set out.

XII.

1. Prior to 1894 there had been some doubt upon the part of the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and of the Board of Trust as to whether the Bishops were members of the Board of Trust ex-officio and so made by the charter, and whether the Board of Trust as constituted by the charter was composed of the members as elected or confirmed by the patronizing Conferences and the College of Bishops jointly. And in order to settle any doubt upon this subject and to admit the Bishops to what was then regarded by the then existing Board of Trust as their charter rights, the following by-law was adopted:

"Each of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is ex-officio declared to be a member of the Board of Trust, and the Chancellor of the university is also by his office a member of said Board of Trust."

2. Subsequent to the adoption of said by-law the Bishops of the Methodist Church were recognized by the Board of Trust by virtue of their positions as Bishops under the charter of the institution as ex-officio members of the Board of Trust, and continued to be so recognized and to so act until the annual meeting of the Board of Trust in 1905, when by resolution the above-quoted by-law was rescinded, and five of the effective Bishops of said Church chosen in order of seniority were nominated to the Board of Education of the Methodist Church for confirmation as members of the Board of Trust.

3. To this meeting in 1905 the Chancellor submitted a report advising that a new charter of the institution be procured. That part of the report pertaining to the charter of Vanderbilt University and to the relation of Conferences thereto, and setting out the reasons why a new charter was desirable, is attached hereto and made a part of this bill, marked as Exhibit "C," but need not be copied unless called for. The part of the report attached hereto as Exhibit "C" was by the Board of Trust referred to a committee of its own members, and that committee reported back to the Board of Trust as follows:

"Your committee to whom was referred that part of the Chancellor's report relating to the charter of Vanderbilt University, after taking legal advice and having also the counsel of Bishop A. W. Wilson, who has given much thought to the matter, unanimously recommend that the Executive Committee be authorized to get the signatures of all the members of the Board of Trust to the form of application provided by the laws of Tennessee, and to file said application with the Secretary of State for the desired amendment to the charter.

"To give full membership in the Board of Trust to some who are ex-officio members, we recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That we hereby rescind the by-law making the Chancellor of Vanderbilt University ex-officio a member of the Board of Trust, and the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, ex-officio members of said Board.

"Resolved, That we hereby nominate to the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for confirmation as members of the Board of Trust, the Chancellor of Vanderbilt University and five of the effective Bishops of said Church, chosen in the order of seniority, and that the Chancellor be placed in that class of members whose terms expire in 1914, and that the Bishops be distributed according to seniority in the classes whose terms expire, respectively, in 1914, 1912, 1910, 1908, 1906.

"Respectfully submitted,

"(Signed) E. R. Hendrix, W. C. Ratcliffe, W. W. Duncan, J. H. Kirkland, Charles B. Galloway."

XIII.

1. After the action was taken by the Board of Trust as above set out, certain of the patronizing Conferences memorialized the General Conference to be held in Birmingham in 1906 to consider and act upon all matters involving the ownership and control of Vanderbilt University, and especially to direct what changes, if any, should be made in the terms of the original charter, and, in general, to set in motion such plans as would more perfectly conserve the interests of the Church and rally the Church more heartily and fully to the support of the university.

2. Likewise the university Board of Trust was requested to withhold action upon the application for an amended charter until after a meeting of the General Conference at Birmingham in 1906. As a result of the action taken by the patronizing Conferences, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held in Birmingham, Alabama, in 1906, adopted the following resolutions:

"There can be no question as to the ownership of the university by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, or as to the charter rights of all the Bishops; but in view of certain questions which must be authoritatively decided we recommend the appointment by this General Conference of a commission of five laymen of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as follows:

"1. To inquire into and determine the present relations of the Vanderbilt University to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"2. To take legal steps, if necessary, to perfect the transfer of the university from the patronizing Conferences to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"3. To define the charter rights of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and when so defined, the Bishops are hereby instructed to enter on the same.

"4. We recommend that this commission be composed of the following gentlemen: Judge Edward O'Rear, Frankfort, Ky.; Judge John A. Rich, Slater, Mo.; Judge E. D. Newman, Woodstock, Va.; Judge Joseph A. McCulloch, Greenville, S. C.; and Hon. Creed Fulton Bates, Chattanooga, Tenn. This commission shall have power to fill any vacancy in its membership.

"5. This commission is instructed to proceed in this matter as early as possible, and they shall communicate the result of their deliberations simultaneously to the College of Bishops, the Board of Trust of the Vanderbilt University, and the General Board of Education.

"6. The General Secretary of the Board of Education shall act as secretary of this commission to notify its members of their appointment, to conduct all necessary correspondence, and to gather all available data bearing upon the above matters.

"7. We recommend that the expenses of the commission be paid by the General Board of Education. "Touching the memorial from the Tennessee Conference which requested the General Conference to inquire into the status of the proposed charter and to counsel with the Board of Trust thereon, we report that we have been informed by the representatives of the Board of Trust: 'No action for amending the charter is pending, and that nothing can be done at any time in the future without the unanimous consent of the members of the Board.' We recommend in case of any future charter or amendment that the present existing rights of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Bishops thereof be preserved.

R. G. WATERHOUSE, Chairman,

JOHN M. MOORE, Secretary."

In accordance with said resolution, the members requested to act upon said commission by the fourth section of said resolution agreed to act, and met at Nashville, Tennessee, on August 15, 1906, and later in the same city on October 24-29, inclusive. This committee diligently examined into the several matters committed to them, and before them appeared representatives of the Board of Trust, of the Church, and of the College of Bishops, in person and by counsel. Evidence was heard, documents were submitted, and, after due consideration, the commission filed on December 4, 1906, its report determining:

(a) That Vanderbilt University was established and is being managed by the patronizing Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, up to 1898; that up to said date said patronizing Conferences were the members of the corporation; held the right to select its trustees and control its polity so long as it regards the purpose of the trust and violates no condition imposed by any donor.

(b) That no further action was necessary to transfer the rights of the patronizing Conferences to the General Conference, which had become, and was, the successor to the rights of the patronizing Conferences; but in order that formal recognition of this transfer might be made, and that the said patronizing Conferences might take such steps as would forever quiet the right and title of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to act as the member of said corporation, they recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Whereas by resolution prior to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of 1898 this Conference memorialized the General Conference to take over the charge of the responsibility of Vanderbilt University; and

"Whereas the said General Conference has agreed to do so and has done so, which has been approved by the assent of this Conference;

"Now to confirm the original purpose of this Conference and to unify the title in the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; be it

"Resolved, That this Conference do now cede, and there is hereby ceded, to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, all rights, privileges, and authority which this Conference had as a member of the corporation known as Vanderbilt University."

(c) Determined that the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, were, by the action of the founders—to-wit, the patronizing Conferences and the Memphis convention—made common-law visitors of the university, defining their duties to be judicial, not executive or legislative. They are "to judge whether the acts of the trustees are within the law of the institution, and whether their by-laws are in the spirit of the trust." The visitor is in no sense above the law of the institution, but his judgment within the law is necessarily supreme.

XIV.

1. This finding by the commissioners was acquiesced in by the patronizing Conferences, all of which adopted a resolution in conformity with the one above set out.

XV.

1. The Board of Trust of the Vanderbilt University, upon receiving the report of the commission, accepted the same and acquiesced therein, enacting the following resolutions:

"Whereas the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in session at Birmingham, Alabama, May, 1906, appointed a commission to report upon the following matters:

"1. To inquire into and determine the present relations of the Vanderbilt University to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South;

"2. To take legal steps, if necessary, to perfect the transfer of the university from the patronizing Conferences to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South;

"3. To define the charter rights of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South;

"And whereas the commission has concluded its labors and reported the result of its deliberations to the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University:

"Resolved: 1. That we cordially receive the same, and direct that it be filed with the records of this Board.

"2. That we hereby express our appreciation of the ability and fidelity with which the members of the commission have discharged their important duties.

"3. That, recognizing and rejoicing in the ownership of the Church in the university and all the responsibilities arising therefrom, we welcome any supervision by the College of Bishops that may aid us in executing the great trust committed to our hands so as to insure the observance of the charter, the conditions of specific gifts, and the statutes of the State."

XVI.

The report of the Vanderbilt Commission was likewise presented to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at its meeting at Asheville, North Carolina, in May, 1910, and the said Conference took the following action thereon:

"Resolved, first, that this General Conference hereby accepts the report of the Vanderbilt Commission as a definition of the rights of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to Vanderbilt University; moreover, that it accepts the judgment of the Commission that the College of Bishops is a Board of Common-Law Visitors of the university; and, furthermore, that it accepts the finding of the Commission that the General Conference has the right to select the Board of Trustees in such manner as it may elect, either by direct election by the Conference itself or through such agency or agencies as it may designate.

"Resolved, second, That it is the sense of this General Conference that its right to select the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University and fill vacancies in the same should now be exercised, and hereafter at its discretion; and it being ascertained that vacancies now exist in the Board of Trust of said university, the following named members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are hereby elected to fill said vacancies—namely:

"Resolved, third, That following this election the General Conference will for the future continue the method of choosing the trustees adopted by the General Conference held at Baltimore in 1898; when it committed to the General Board of Education the confirmation of all trustees by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University.

"Resolved, fourth, That the General Conference approves the action of the Bishops in entering upon the discharge of their duties as visitors of the university.

"Resolved, fifth, That the General Conference approves as a sound principle of law the position of the College of Bishops—namely, that 'it is not competent for the Board of Education to delegate the function intrusted to it by this General Conference to any other body or person whatsoever; and the General Board of Education is hereby instructed to accede to the request of the Bishops—namely, that hereafter said Board will confirm no persons as trustees of Vanderbilt University except such as may be officially nominated to the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in writing by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University.

"Resolved, sixth, That the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, shall provide whatever means may be necessary to sustain the finding of the Vanderbilt Commission if it shall at any time be called in question in the civil courts. In such event the Bishops of the Church are hereby instructed to take whatever steps they may deem necessary to maintain the rights and claims of the Church."

BISHOP HOSS SEVERAL TIMES MORE.

By Dr. G. B. Winton.

Nobody can discuss Vanderbilt University in a way satisfactory to Bishop Hoss. When the editor of the Texas Christian Advocate began, some months ago, the Bishop took the matter out of his hands. A little later he did the editor of the Southern Christian Advocate a like service. A member of my own Conference had to give way last year to the Bishop—who was not a member—when this subject came up on the Conference floor. Now, no doubt, Dr. Featherstun feels complimented and relieved that he too has been rescued.

The Bishop's arguments, however, are all of one kind; they are assertions—oral and dogmatic assertions, to be sure, but assertions nevertheless. He asserts, for example, that I have changed front on this Vanderbilt question. I have done nothing of the kind. There is not the vestige of support for the repeated charge that I agreed with and commended the conclusions of the Vanderbilt Commission. I did not commend their conclusions because I did not agree with them. I did commend the Commission for its abnegation and diligence. The only comment I made, however, was not in the editorial columns of the Christian Advocate but merely in a few lines on the cover page, put in to fill the space under a cut of the members of the Commission, and made up of kind generalities.

Again, he wishes to make capital of my remark that the right of the General Conference to confirm members of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, resting as it did upon a formal agreement and having stood unchallenged for years, was of the nature of an organic right. I am still of the same opinion. But since the General Conference of 1910, like the dog in the fable, threw away that right while grasping after a shadow, what boots the discussion now?

After all my earnest requests for proof, the affirmation that the Supreme Court of Tennessee decided the Southwestern Presbyterian University case on the basis of the statute of 1895 remains unsupported. Why can we not have a reference to page and line of the published reports of that Court? I made and make no claim to original knowledge in this matter. A competent lawyer, not acting at the time as a hired attorney at all, a man in whose ability and integrity I have as much confidence as I have in the integrity and ability of Bishop Hoss, told me that he had gone over the record in that case twice and had found no reference to the statute of 1895. If there is such a reference, everybody concerned would feel grateful for a citation by which it could be verified.

In this last article Bishop Hoss repeats once more the absurd contention that certain Annual Conferences were "members" of, that is made up, constituted, the original corporation, now known as Vanderbilt University. He says: "The incorporators did not dream that they were the corporation." Well, as to that, the decree of the court creating the corporation ought to be pretty good authority. Here is the exact language of Chancellor Baxter: "The Court * * * doth hereby order and adjudge and decree that the petitioners be declared a body politic and corporate." The "petitioners" in question are the same gentlemen whom Bishop Hoss calls the "incorporators," namely Messrs. Johnson, Morgan, Green et al., the first Board of Trust. They may have been poor dreamers, but it seems improbable that when awake they failed to understand the import of language as plain as that. Concerning the right vested in them by that charter to fill their own vacancies the situation is equally simple. Any corporation in Tennessee, of which the charter does not specify some other mode of filling its vacancies, not only may but must fill them itself. The charter of Vanderbilt University does not specify how vacancies are to be filled. Therefore, as asserted by the Board itself, as far back as 1873, by that very silence it requires the Board to fill them. It is not now a question of what the Board wishes to do, but of what it must do.

In the matter of how many trustees withdrew their names in 1905 from the petition for a new charter, I got my information from the Secretary of the Board who gave it to me from the Board's records and official correspondence. What Bishop Hoss assumes to know on the outside does not interest me. Two names were formally withdrawn—and only two.

Such are a few samples of Bishop Hoss' argument by unsupported assertion. There are others, but let these serve. His positive and repeated charge that the proposed connection between Vanderbilt University and the new Peabody College for Teachers, a connection highly creditable and beneficial to both institutions, had something dangerous and objectionable in it, led the College of Bishops to include that in their list of things which they recently asked the courts to forbid. Now, after two months of consideration, during which period their lawyers have twice asked for more time, the Bishops, under pressure from their own attorneys, have decided to recede, as gracefully as they may, from a position found to be absolutely untenable. So much for following a man who thinks a thing is so because he says it is so.

The fight between New Orleans and San Francisco for the Panama Exposition will be settled, it is thought, by the House Committee on expositions next Friday. Final arguments were heard Monday. When the committee makes its report, the matter will be before Congress for action.

The number of ship passengers who came into this country through the port of New York in 1910, was 1,104,000. Of these, nearly 800,000 came in the steerage, and it is estimated that more than 700,000 were immigrants seeking homes in the United States or Canada.

It is reported that the "cold storage trust" has been forced to the necessity of throwing millions of pounds of butter, eggs, cheese and poultry on the market immediately. It is thought this will reduce materially the price of these products. This will be good news to the consumers.

The news comes from New York that an attempt will be made in the legislature to compel the New York Stock Exchange to take out articles of incorporation. This would put the institution under state supervision, and would act as a protection to the general public in its operations.

Hon. T. J. Kernan, one of the most prominent lawyers of Louisiana, died suddenly at his home in Baton Rouge at an early hour Monday morning, Jan. 9. He came into great prominence a few years ago through an address delivered before the American Bar Association, of which he was a member, on the "Unwritten Law."

Secretary of the Navy Meyer has given assurance that the battleship Idaho, a sister ship of the Mississippi, will go up the river as far as Vicksburg, about May 10. There is no longer any doubt that it is perfectly safe for the largest vessels of the navy to ascend the Mississippi river for a considerable distance.

The twenty-second annual council of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations will open in the city of New York on January 17. It is said this will be the most important meeting of American Jews that has ever been held. Ex-President Roosevelt will be one of the guests and speakers at the annual banquet on January 18.

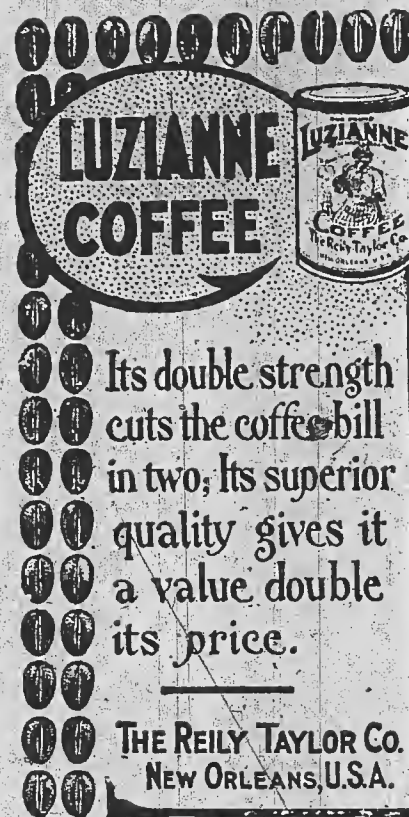

Wireless telegraphy is demonstrating its usefulness every day. Recently a prescription was sent 300 miles for a desperately sick man on a steamship on which there was no physician. The case was one of ptomaine poisoning, and the patient's recovery is attributed solely to the prescription received by wireless. So science works its wonders.

The prevalence of the boll weevil throughout the cotton belt has forced the farmers to turn to some other crop for a living. Peanuts are becoming popular as a money crop. They are grown for the oil that is extracted from them, and are worth about 75 cents per bushel at the mills. It has been estimated by one authority that Mississippi will plant about 125,000 acres of peanuts this year.

The effort to invalidate the election of Senator Lorimer of Illinois was inaugurated in the Senate on January 9 by Senator Beveridge, in a minority report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The minority report takes the position that at least seven tainted votes were cast for Senator Lorimer, and these make the election a fraudulent one. The outcome will be awaited with great interest throughout the United States.

As the time approaches for the Democrats to assume control of Congress, the Democratic members are becoming alarmed at the prospect of having to face a large treasury deficit. There appears a possibility, at this writing, that the deficit will amount to $100,000,000, and the Democratic Congressmen do not relish the idea of being held responsible for this shortage. Reckless appropriations are held responsible for the possible deficit.

partment of Agriculture, in his annual report for 1910, states that the fear that the population of the country will increase faster than the means of subsistence, is unfounded. There has been a gratifying increase in the production per acre of practically all crops during the past ten years, and the report says the soil, when properly cultivated, is able to keep ahead of the normal rate of increase of the population.

In the effort to build up an American merchant marine, negotiations have been entered into with the United Fruit Company to transfer its fleet of thirty magnificent vessels from the British to the American flag. More than a dozen of these ships operate out of New Orleans, while the others sail between Boston, New York and the tropics. If this plan is carried out, it will give more work to American sailors, and will in no wise interfere with the operations of American shipyards.

Dr. Andrew D. White, former president of Cornell University and ex-minister to Russia and Germany, has issued a statement in which he urges the immediate passage of laws by Congress to prevent entrance into the United States of a flood of undesirable citizens from Europe. As a reason for greater care in admitting immigrants, he cites the great increase of crime in this country. The number of murders in 1910 was 8975, an increase of 900 over the year preceding. This statement should give serious concern to all who are interested in the welfare of this country.

A MESSAGE FROM MISS WATKINS.

To the Missionary Workers of the Mississippi Conference—

My Dear Sisters: From my room in the hotel in San Francisco, I am sending you a letter of thanks and good-bye. Miss Siler and I have been out for our last glimpse of a brilliantly-lighted city, and have looked wistfully into florists' windows at the exquisite flowers. There are many beautiful things in America. But I am feeling richer to-night than I have ever felt in all my life before, because on the table before me is the watch given me by the women of the Foreign Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference. It is just the kind of watch I like best—small, simple, elegant, with a closed case, initials in the back and a long gold chain. But more than this, it speaks to me of your love and trust, and it is no small thing to me that the most beautiful gift I have ever received came to me from my sisters in the Conference. As I try to use my time wisely and well, I shall have many occasions for remembering your beautiful gift.

I go lovingly to the work in China, knowing the need. When I got to San Francisco, I found a letter from one of the girls who was in our school several years. She was a girl of splendid character, and she responded quickly to the teachings of Christianity. Deep grief and sorrow came to her home, and she writes, with characteristic honesty, that in her sorrow she turned again to the Buddhist writings and found comfort and that she is a Buddhist again. I feel I must go back to help her. Pray that I may be used of God to lead her back to Christ. Like Paul, "I am ready."

A loving farewell and a wish that mission work may prosper through our gifts and our love.

JANIE H. WATKINS.

Church News

Dr. John H. Dye has been elected to the chaplaincy of the Arkansas State Senate.

Bishop Hoss was booked to spend last Sunday in Conway, Ark., where his sister, Mrs. P. H. Prince, resides.

The Wesley Hospital of Atlanta received from the collections of the Christmas season $2,526 in cash and $600 in subscriptions.

The present address of Bishop R. G. Waterhouse is San Antonio, Texas. His family are spending the winter in that charming and historic old city.

The secretaries of the various foreign missionary boards in New York City are talking of launching a movement to raise fifteen million dollars for missions.

Bishop W. F. McDowell and Rev. John F. Goucher, D.D., have been appointed fraternal messengers from the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Methodist Church of Japan.

The Jackson (Mississippi) Convocation of the Protestant Episcopal Church is in session at Brookhaven this week. Rev. Halsey Werlein, Jr., is presiding over the sessions of the body.

It has been announced that the Sunday school class taught by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., at the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church of New York City will hereafter take up no collection. Why should it?

There are said to be in Atlanta, Ga., 11,000 Methodists, 13,000 Baptists, 5,000 Presbyterians, and about 130 each of Universalists and Unitarians. The Mormons also have an organization in the city.

Dr. J. M. Buckley, the distinguished editor of the New York Christian Advocate, is giving some luminous expositions of Mrs. Eddy's teachings in a series of editorials. Conversant with both theology and medicine, as well as nearly everything else, no man in America is more competent than he to handle the subject.

Mr. T. M. Lemly, formerly of Jackson, Miss., but now a student in Union Theological Seminary (from which institution he will graduate next June) has been called to the Barton Heights Presbyterian Church of Richmond, Va. He was educated at Millsaps College, having taken a degree there in both the literary and law departments.

Mr. James J. Hill, the famous railroad magnate, recently said in a public address: "There is something about a denominational college that always appeals to me. It is a character builder. I believe in keeping the boy in the religious path of his ancestors." Good! Mr. Hill has within the past two years given $35,000 to the Methodist institutions in the Northwest, and is still offering upon certain conditions to do vastly more.

Mr. Juan Orts Gonzales in a communication to The Presbyterian of the South, under the caption, "Do Roman Catholics Need the Gospel," makes the following statement. "In Spain, France, Italy, and Mexico less than one family in ten thousand has the Bible. Even here in the United States among the Roman Catholics less than one in a hundred families has the Bible; and when they have the Bible, it is one with notes and the reader is warned time and again to be careful not to follow any other meaning but that of the Roman Catholic Church."

In the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States there were 3,000 less baptisms in 1910 than in 1909. It is reported that the authorities of this denomination think that race suicide is standing in the way of its growth; but we should not wonder if the worldliness of its membership is not the real cause of its poor showing. Indeed, this doubtless also explains the decreasing birth rate among their people. We gave the statistics of the Episcopalians in Mississippi and Louisiana a couple of weeks ago. Those for Tennessee are as follows: Clergy, 58; parishes and missions, 76; lay readers, 26; candidates for orders, 3; postulants, 5; baptisms, infant, 354, adult, 93, total, 447; confirmed, 407; communicants, 8,276; last reported, 7,725; increase, 551; marriages, 123; burials, 290; Sunday schools: teachers, 383; scholars, 3,188; contributions, $99,513.37.

It now appears that Mrs. Eddy's estate of $2,000,000, nearly all of which she bequeathed to the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, known as the Mother Church, will be hung up in the courts. The property is under the jurisdiction of the State of New Hampshire, and that commonwealth is said to have a statute forbidding a bequest of over $5,000 per annum to a church. Ex-United States Senator William E. Chanler, and Mr. Hannis Taylor, professor of constitutional and international law at George Washington University, have expressed the view that this statute invalidates the will, and that Mrs.

Eddy's relatives will be able to come into possession of her vast property interests. This doubtless means that a spirited lawsuit will soon be under way.

Methodist federation is making rapid headway in Mexico. At a meeting of the committee having the matter in hand in Mexico City on December 13, it was decided to consolidate the two Methodist weeklies published in that country—El Abogado Cristiano, organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and El Evangelista Mexicano, organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The two papers will become one, and the editor will be elected by a joint publishing committee. It will be called El Apologista Evangelico, and the subscription price will be $2 (Mexican). It was also decided to have one editor of Sunday school literature, and one book editor and the same course of study for preachers throughout all the Spanish-speaking fields of the two Methodisms.

The Methodists of Alabama are getting in earnest about their educational work. They have declared for the correlation of their educational institutions, and committed the government of them all to a Joint Board of Trustees—twelve from each Conference. They have affirmed it to be their purpose not to injure any of their existing schools, but to strengthen and advantageously relate them to one another. The main building of the Woman's College at Montgomery, the John J. Flowers Memorial, will soon be finished at a cost of $125,000, and a campaign has been projected to raise $1 per capita from the Methodists of North Alabama for Birmingham College. Assurance has been given that there is at present no disposition to abandon or neglect the historic old Southern University at Greensboro, which has done so much for the Methodism of the State.

So satisfactory was Bishop Morrison's presidency over the South Georgia Conference that by formal resolution his administration was heartily commended, and his return requested.

An event of connectional interest transpired in Chattanooga, Tennessee, a few days since. The two leading Methodist Churches of that city—the First Church, of the Northern Methodists, and Centenary Church, of the Southern Methodists—are each planning to build a new and more adequate house of worship. These two great congregations have for a long time been domiciled close to each other, and their relations are said to have come to be quite fraternal. Accordingly twenty-five representatives of each denomination had luncheon together, and discussed the needs and future of Chattanooga Methodism very frankly and freely. The outcome of the conference is summed up in the following statement given to the public on January 12th:

"1. The two Churches were planted in proximity to each other, each representing its respective denomination and each undertaking to occupy the most advantageous position for serving its own constituency. Separated by only a short distance, the two churches have grown side by side in numbers, in influence and in strength, each in a large measure the representative church of its respective denomination in the city of Chattanooga. During all the years that the churches have lived and wrought in such close proximity to each other the fraternal returns between the two have constantly grown and strengthened until the two churches have become one in spirit.

"2. Both the Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the First Methodist Episcopal Church have come to the place in their history when they are under necessity to improve and increase their equipment for service to the community. Plans for the erection of two new churches have been inaugurated. It is agreed by the conference committee that in order to conserve the resources of both churches, and to utilize the forces of both denominations, that only one church should be constructed, and that the two denominations, now one in spirit, should be made one in fact, and for the common cause of Methodism.

"3. To the end that unity of spirit may come into unity of service the committee has agreed that all fraternal and kindly relations between the two churches should be fostered by bringing the people together in religious exercises and by co-operating one with the other in every good work.

"4. The site selected by the Centenary Church for the erection of the new church, we are agreed, is an advantageous and strategic location for our common Methodism to occupy.

"5. Confidently anticipating that the joint commission created by the respective General Conferences of Methodism will speedily formulate a plan for unification of all the Methodist forces in America, we are agreed that our plans for new church buildings should be held in abeyance as far as consistent with the interests involved pending the final adjustment of the whole problem by the constituted authorities of the denominations."

"FAR MORE EXCEEDING."

"From glory unto glory!" Thank God, that even here The starry words are shining out, our heavenly way to cheer!
From "glory that excelleth" all that human heart hath known,
Our "onward, upward," shall begin in the presence of the Throne.

"From glory unto glory" of loveliness and light,
Of music and of rapture, of power and of sight;
"From glory unto glory" of knowledge and of love,
Shall be the joy of progress awaiting us above.

"From glory unto glory" that ever lies before,
Still wondering, adoring, rejoicing more and more;
Still following where he leadeth, from shining field to field, Himself the goal of glory, Revealer and Revealed!

"From glory unto glory," with no limit and no veil,
With wings that cannot weary, and hearts that cannot fail;
Within, without, no hindrance, no barrier as we soar;
And never interruption to the endless "more" and more."

Then let our hearts be surely fixed where truest joys are found,
And let our burning, loving praise yet more and more abound,
And, gazing on the "things not seen," eternal in the skies,
"From glory unto glory," O, Savior, let us rise!

INFORMATION CONCERNING CALIFORNIA

Editor Advocate: Please permit me to say to your readers that, by arrangement with our Bay Cities Church Extension Society, I am now, and expect to continue to be, in daily attendance at the M. E. Church, South, headquarters, 948 Market St., San Francisco, Room 892, where correspondents may address me, or where I may be found by those who would see me. I will be pleased to answer all inquiries from prospective residents of California, giving them the benefit of my knowledge of the various sections of the State in which I have lived and labored during the past thirty-five years (this knowledge being brought fully up to date by a recent tour of investigation, extending over several weeks. I will endeavor to candidly answer all questions. It will be decidedly to the interest of our friends who are looking this way, and of the Church, as well, if they will confer with me before deciding upon a location. Very sincerely,

REFLECT THE MASTER'S LOVE.

The world is dark, but you are called to brighten
Some little corner, some secluded glen;
Somewhere a burden rests that you may lighten;
And thus reflect the Master's love for men.

Is there a brother drifting on life's ocean,
Who might be saved if you but speak a word?
Speak it to-day. The testing of devotion
Is our response when duty's call is heard.

THE MID-WINTER BIBLE AND MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

By Rev. R. H. Wynn.

Rev. W. H. Coleman and myself enjoyed the privilege of representing the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions at the Conference in Nashville, Dec. 28 to Jan. 5.

This conference is held in the assembly hall of the Methodist Training School for Christian Workers, and the visitors are most satisfactorily taken care of in the big missionary family, over which Prof. McCulloch presides. One has to visit this school and breathe its atmosphere to fully value the great service which it is rendering the church in preparing young men and women for skilled service at home and abroad. I cannot but regret that so far, Louisiana has had such small representation among the students. There must be a number of young people in our state who would respond with joy to an opportunity like this, if its advantages were made known to them. Each pastor would do well to write for a catalogue of the school, and thoroughly acquaint himself with it.

The program of the institute was most skillfully prepared and, with the exception occasioned by Bishop Quayle's inability to be present, went off like clockwork. Dr. O. E. Brown's morning expositions of the "Hebrew Prophets" were brilliant, profound and heart-searching. It was the unanimous opinion of all his hearers that he should give these messages larger usefulness through the printed page.

I cannot begin to write of all the impressions received, nor of all the features of the rich and varied program.

The round-table meetings of Conference secretaries and other officers, were marked by intelligent discussion, most intense earnestness and prayerful determination that our great Church shall rise to meet its great missionary opportunity and responsibility.

The newly elected president of our Conference Board has his head full of plans for a forward movement in Louisiana, and he will soon be heard from. Dr. J. M. Moore, Secretary of the Home Department, is especially interested in Louisiana, and promises to give us assistance in our campaign for "collections in full," and then great enlargement of the work in our State.

THE MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

By John M. Moore, D.D.

The sixth Mid-Winter Bible and Missionary Conference of the Methodist Training School and the Board of Missions was held Dec. 28th to Jan. 4th in the chapel of the Training School in Nashville. Twenty-two Conferences were represented by 60 delegates. The Missouri Conference led in numbers, with a delegation of 11, of whom 7 were presiding elders. The St. Louis Conference had a delegation of 10 pastors. The Memphis Conference had 7 delegates, the Tennessee and North Alabama 5 each, and no other Conference more than 2 delegates. There were 15 presiding elders and 15 Conference missionary secretaries in attendance. The seven Conference missionary secretaries, who are employed by the Conference Boards of Missions, were present, as follows: Revs. W. B. Beauchamp, D.D., of Virginia; M. B. Kelley, of South Carolina; A. C. Johnson, of Missouri; L. P. Latham, of the Alabama Conference; H. K. Boyer, of Western North Carolina; G. H. Galloway, of the Mississippi Conference, and R. H. Archibald, of the North Alabama Conference. Rev. J. W. Bergin, the Conference missionary secretary of the Texas Conference, was prevented by a delayed train from reaching the Conference until the closing session. Louisiana was represented by Rev. W. H. Coleman and Rev. R. H. Wynn.

The program, as announced, was carried out with two exceptions. Bishop Hoss was detained in Oklahoma, and Bishop W. A. Quayle, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was prevented from coming by the illness of his wife. The unavoidable failure of these two distinguished and eloquent speakers brought very keen disappointment to the delegates and to those who had the institute in charge, yet the feast of good things was so hountiful that no word of complaint was allowed to escape the lips of any who were present. On the other hand, the expressions of eminent satisfaction with the entire program were so numerous and so emphatic that all were forced to say that this was evidently the best Conference that had been held. This is a high compliment to Rev. J. E. McCulloch, the president of the Training School, who made the program and secured the speakers, just as he has done in the preceding institutes. Progression seems to be his watchword, and so we may expect that the next institute will surpass all that have been held.

Rev. W. W. Pinson, D.D., the general secretary of the Board of Missions, was the chairman of the Conference. In the opening address he set forth the aim and outlined what should be the spirit of the institute with ringing words that aroused, at once, the enthusiasm of the audience. On another evening he spoke on "The Significance of the Edinburgh Conference," and emphasized the remarkable features of that grand gathering of missionary specialists. Throughout the Conference the general secretary in his introduction of the speakers and in the announcement of topics contributed largely to the direction of the controlling thought of the institute.

Bishop W. R. Lambuth never missed a session and scarcely an address. He delivered two splendid addresses; the one on the opening evening on "A Survey of our Missionary Fields and Resources," and the other on the last day on "Our Brazil Mission." His recent visit to Brazil as the general superintendent, and his long service, as the departmental superintendent have given him a knowledge of our work in Brazil, as well as the needs of that republic, which few men possess. His intimate relations to all our fields, his personal acquaintance with the history of our labors and his wide travels over the earth furnished him abundantly for the survey of the first night. His keen interest in the addresses of all the speakers, his wise comments on all suggested plans, his genial and sympathetic attitude toward all the secretaries, the delegates and guests, made his presence a veritable benediction.

Rev. Professor O. E. Brown, D.D., gave opening Bible addresses daily on "The Missionary Message of the Hebrew Prophets," which illuminated the Scriptures, awakened religious zeal and inspired the preachers for larger service in their prophetic office. Rev. E. B. Chappell, D.D., the head of the Sunday School Department of the Church, gave a carefully prepared and highly suggestive paper on "The Missionary Education of the Children." The missionary secretaries, including Drs. Cook, Rawlings, Reid, Moore and Miss Mabel Head, gave addresses on the work and plans of their various departments, to which the members of the Conference gave most careful and sympathetic attention.

Rev. J. D. Hammond, D.D., read a very valuable paper on "The Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to the Negro." His earnest appeal for the colored people was vigorously applauded by the audience, and it was heartily endorsed by Bishop C. H. Phillips, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, in a few well chosen sentences. Rev. Professor A. M. Trawick on one evening gave an "Illustrated Address on Social Conditions in Nashville," which awoke new interest in forsaken sections of our cities and the neglected classes of our city people. He showed clearly that all our cities need a social service which the Church could and should render.

The closing address of the Conference was made by Rev. Gross Alexander, D.D., on "The Ministerial Leadership Demanded for our Times." A more drastic arraignment of society and a more caustic indictment of social evils one scarcely hears in a lifetime.

The guests who brought messages were Rev. Geo. R. Stuart, D.D.; Rev. Ira Landrith, D.D.; Rev. A. J. McKelway, D.D.; Prof. D. Spence Hill, Ph. D.; Rev. H. F. Cope, Ph. D., and Rev. Professor Walter Rauschenbusch, D.D.

Dr. Stuart occupied one evening with a strong address on "Evangelism." He contended that evangelists were needed as a part of any denominational ministry, and that they should be sent forth, directed and controlled by the authoritative bodies of the Church. He is right in his contention, and the Church should put forth efforts, and that right early, to bring back into its regular and authorized ministry the great company of earnest, God-fearing men who have been compelled to give up the itinerancy in order to meet a recognized call to the work of an evangelist.

Dr. Landrith, the president of the Belmont College, Nashville, delivered a very thoughtful and helpful address on "Church Federation as an Aid to the Evangelization of the World." This great theme is upon many minds in this period of the Church.

Dr. McKelway, of Washington City, gave an illustrated address on the "Conservation of American Childhood." He is connected with the Child Labor Bureau and is engaged in the important work of promoting legislation in state and nation to prevent child labor. Dr. Hill is the professor of Psychology in the Peabody College for Teachers in Nashville. His address on the "Boy Problem" was a scientific treatment of the mental life of the child. It was instructive and highly suggestive.

Dr. Cope is the general secretary of the Religious Education Association of the United States. His office is in Chicago. He gave three addresses: "What is Religious Education?" "Organizing a City for Character Purposes," and "The Efficient Layman." In them he presented the claims of the social and civic life of to-day upon Christianity. He is an enemy to billboards, congested alleys, unwholesome tenements and iniquitous amusements. He is an advocate of parks, sanitary laws, boards of health, civic clubs, and all other provisions that make for social betterment. He believes that the Church should create the enthusiasm and furnish the leadership for carrying on such campaigns as will bring about proper social and civic conditions.

Dr. Rauschenbusch was looked upon as the star of the institute. His great book "Christianity and the Social Crisis," has given him a place of first rank among the advocates of social Christianity. For eleven years he was the pastor among the poor on the West Side of New York. He lost his hearing and was compelled to give up his work. He then became professor of Church History in the Baptist Theological School of Rochester, New York. His experiences as a pastor influenced unquestionably his views as expressed in his great book. His one thought seems to be for the poor; his one effort to create sentiment for principles and a system of operation and co-operation that will prevent poverty and social distress. His great theme is "The Kingdom of God." This subject and "The Social Situation and its Call to the Church," "The Forces at Work in the Social Movement" gave him an opportunity to open to his hearers something of the program which he would have the Church pursue. On Sunday morning he spoke in McKendree Church on "The Contribution of the Church to the Making of the Nation," and a more sane, clear and forcible presentation of the merits of the Church one has seldom heard. He is a great soul, with a great mind, a noble heart, a high purpose, a beautiful spirit and a devout attitude toward God, Christ, and the truth of revelation. He enriches the lives that touch him and stirs the righteous thoughts of all who hear him.

Vesper services were held each afternoon at five o'clock and were conducted by Rev. J. S. French, D.D., of McKendree Church; Rev. James I. Vance, D.D., of the First Presbyterian Church; Rev. Stonewall Anderson, D.D., the Secretary of Education; Rev. W. F. Tillett, D.D., of Vanderbilt University; Rev. G. H. Detwiler, D.D., of West End Church, and Bishop Collins Denny.

Great as this Conference was, already plans are being made for a greater. Resolutions were adopted asking the Bishops to co-operate with the presiding elders of the Church in making this Mid-winter meeting a most influential occasion for the kingdom of God. At this time leaders of the Conferences, presiding elders, secretaries, presidents of boards and lay leaders should agree upon plans for the missionary operations of the year. If we are to take our missionary work seriously the time has come when we must become conscientious about the plans and methods which we employ in carrying on this work.

HIGHER CRITICISM WANING.

In the "Nineteenth Century" for November, 1910, page 897, an article on Gibbon concludes with this sentence: "The history of an exploded Deism and of a fast exploding Higher Criticism lead us to believe that even with new Gibbons looming up in the future, the triumphs of learning and science will be largely accomplished by professors of the Faith."

And this foot-note follows: "Mr. T. K. Cheyne of Oxford admits with startling candor that the 'Higher Criticism' is being 'undermined' by Assyrian studies (Bible Problems, page 103, Williams and Norgate, 1904). Mr. George Adam Smith of Edinburgh, regards the higher critical positions as no longer 'assured,' and is requiring revision at the hands of a more orthodox school (Quarterly Review, January, 1907). Mr. A. H. Sayce assures us that 'the method of the higher critic' is unscientific."

The pronouncement of archaeological facts in no instance has supported the conclusions of the higher critic. (Homiletic Review, March, 1903; Cp. his Monument Facts and Higher Critical Fancies; Religious Tract Society). A very distinguished writer in the Edinburgh Review, after a detailed examination of the result of Wellhausen's 'chaotic learning,' sums up: "The decay of this school, the methods of which have become somewhat out of date, is clearly marked in the recent utterances of Wellhausen and Renan, who have brought into the controversy nothing that is very new either as to methods or materials since the second or third centuries." "That we should now witness to the disintegration of what was once the critical theory is no doubt a sign that some method more in accordance with real knowledge is about to arise" (Edinburgh Review, July, 1892).—The Presbyterian.

HIS MOTHER'S BOY.

By Mabel Lewis Stuart.

Edith Blackwell sat in a low chair drawn up before the fire, a little baby in her arms. Her husband leaned against the mantel watching the firelight play over the little face with its closed eyes and parted lips, and touch with light the mother's wavy hair.

"God has been very good to us, Edith," he said softly, "to give us a little son. Sometimes I can scarcely realize how good."

"But it is a great responsibility, Percy. We must guard our boy carefully that he may become a good man. I shall be satisfied if he develops into a strong, noble character like his father."

"And I shall not be satisfied," finished Percy, "unless he is a great deal better than that. I want him to be like his mother."

"Like his mother?" the child in truth became. Her refined, cultured taste made beautiful the home in which he grew to manhood and as surely helped to shape his character.

"Mother, to-morrow is my 19th birthday. May I have a few of the fellows over for a little celebration? Cousin Henry, Jack Reynolds and Jed and Jerry. Incidentally, I'll show them a real home with a real mother behind the teacups."

Edith smilingly glanced up at the tall, handsome boy standing before her.

"Why certainly, my son. I'll have the whole sophomore class if you say so."

"No, thank you, mother, I don't want them all. Just the four will do."

The next day the boys arrived. Edith, wearing a pretty dress and with a red rose in her soft gray hair, greeted them cordially. She had caught Harold's spirit about the dinner and was determined to make the occasion a memorable one. Before dessert was reached each of Harold's friends had decided that their friend's mother was one woman in a thousand and that Harold was the luckiest boy on earth.

"Mother," asked Harold from the foot of the table, "may I have just a little more of the pudding? But please serve Jack and Jerry first. I think they, too, want some more. I didn't know Kate could make such good pudding."

"Kate didn't make the pudding, my son," answered Edith. "Your mother made it herself, so all compliments will be appropriated by her. Kate, more pudding, please—with plenty of sauce."

"That's right, mother! It's the sauce that makes the pudding," rejoined Harold gaily. "It tastes like—what is it, Jerry?" with a wink at the boys.

Edith did not notice the remark or its accompaniment, so busy was she looking at her nephew's plate upon which lay the pudding almost untouched.

"What's the matter, Henry," she said, "don't you like it?"

Henry flushed and then he said slowly:

"I thank you, auntie, but I don't believe I care for any."

"What? On account of the sauce? You foolish boy, it won't hurt you. You don't suppose your aunt would give you anything harmful, do you?" answered his aunt lightly.

Henry again courteously declined and the incident was forgotten, for the time being at least. After a college song or two the boys took their departure, Harold going with them for a stroll. Henry was to return with him for the night, and Edith, with true mother instinct, went upstairs to see that nothing had been neglected which could contribute to the boys' comfort. That duty accomplished, she seated herself and was soon lost in reveries concerning Harold. She reviewed his life, year by year, and tears filled her eyes as she realized what a splendid young man her boy had become. Until nearly dusk she sat there, not realizing how rapidly the time was passing.

Suddenly she heard a footfall on the stair.

"You, Harold?" she called.

"No, it's Henry, auntie," was the reply. "Uncle sent me to tell you that—that Harold—you see he is not feeling well—he—"

"Henry, is Harold hurt?"

"Yes, auntie, a little. Uncle wanted you to get the bed ready. They are bringing him."

Edith sprang to the window and saw at a glance Harold's unconscious form being lifted from a carriage. She caught at the heavy curtains for support.

A minute later the boys brought in their burden accompanied by the father and Dr. Van Arden, the family physician and an intimate friend of the family.

"Percy, what is it?" she asked.

"The boys were treating Harold—a cut from a wine glass—he fell against the bar—a bad cut, the doctor says. Be brave, dear."

Edith half staggered to the bedside and leaned over the boy.

"Doctor, tell me what the matter. Surely, my boy is not going—to die?"

"Edith," said Dr. Van Arden gently, "I fear his brain is injured. I shall do my best, but in his condition—it will be a hard fight."

Edith bent over the motionless form.

"What do you mean? You can't mean that our boy is—has been—intoxicated? How could it happen?"

The doctor gravely bowed his head and said: "He has, I fear, inherited a taste for liquor."

"Inherited! His father never touched a drop. Neither of his grandparents drank. My mother said no boy ever had a cleaner line of ancestry."

Dr. Van Arden crossed the room to where he stood. He took her hand on which flashed the diamond as brightly as when it was placed there over twenty years ago.

"Edith do you remember the first day you wore this ring?"

Edith nodded with a wan smile.

"I remember it well," continued the doctor, "for Percy had brought me down from college to join the little house party at your home. Do you remember the impromptu dinner party that night at which announcement was made of your engagement to one of the best men on earth, as you said, and as I still believe?"

"Yes, I remember," Edith murmured.

"And Edith, do you remember what the dessert was that evening at dinner? Perhaps you don't—it was a common dish at your home. I have not forgotten it, for you all laughed at me because I wouldn't touch the wine sauce, and I permitted you to think it was because I didn't like the taste. You were very busy for the next few months getting ready to go to your own home, and I remember your saying that your mother petted you in everything. She even made the wine pudding you liked so well two or three times a week, at the risk, as you laughingly explained, of your being intoxicated. I realized the danger of your so freely indulging in these dishes, for you recall how frequently they appeared—branded peaches, wine jellies and the like—upon your table, but, heaven forgive me, I was not man enough to warn you against them. That is how your boy may have inherited his taste for liquor."

The mother stood for a moment as if stunned by the words of the physician. Then she dropped upon her knees by Harold's bed, burying her face in his pillow.

"Inherited from me, his mother," she moaned. "Can the sin of a thoughtless girl be forgiven. O God, can you forgive—such cruel carelessness and ignorance and—save my boy?"

Anxious days and nights followed each other in slow succession. Often as the mother bent over her son in his delirium or unconsciousness this prayer fast repeated in agony of spirit:

"God forgive me and save my boy."

One day came the answer. Harold slowly opened his eyes and whispered:

"He has forgiven, mother," then fell into the sweet, refreshing slumber which means life and health—Union Signal.

AN APPRECIATION.

Charles Molloy Langford, son of the late Rev. Lorenzo D. and Katherine M. Langford, was born near Tuscaloosa, Ala., January 29, 1831, moved, with his parents, to Choctaw county, Miss., where he grew to young manhood; thence he moved to Yazoo county during the 50's, where he remained to the end of life, which came December 18, 1910. He was happily married to Miss Sallie Long of Yazoo county, October 28, 1868, who, with five sons and one daughter, survive him.

At the age of six, he was soundly converted, and at once joined the Methodist Church of which he was a consistent member to the end of his life; a period of 74 years. Having joined the Masonic fraternity at 21 years of age, he was for fifty-eight years a devout Mason.

He was a soldier in the Confederate army and was often detailed to perform duties which were entrusted only to men of daring and skill. His conversation, at all times, was pure and chaste. I never, in my associations with him heard him make use of one profane or vulgar word, and he had scant respect for those who did.

While he was not a man of material wealth, he has left his children a richer heritage, the heritage of right precept and godly example.

We miss him, Oh, so much! But we cherish his memory, and hope to see him again in the bright beyond. He breathed his last without a gasp or quiver of a muscle, except that he gently closed his eyes. "He is not dead, but sleepeth."

HIS SON, EMMETT.

Editorial.

ANENT THE ADVOCATE.

We thank our friends for the good work they are doing for us in many of the charges. It takes a constant outflow of money to publish a paper. Our expenses have to be met every week, and we have no resources except the earnings of the Advocate. Our pleadings are not at all in our own behalf—the paper is yours, not ours. The good of Louisiana and Mississippi Methodism demands that it be maintained and circulated.

"Word and Work" says, "The press is the greatest living agency for disseminating knowledge. If the friends of Christian literature do not give the people pure literature, the enemy will give them vicious literature. The people are going to read something." The slogan of Methodism all over the land should be, "A church paper in every family." The battle for the salvation of the world will be lost or won within the precincts of the home.

Of course, it is possible for a mistake to be made by the bookkeeper in the Advocate office, who handles from 8,000 to 10,000 accounts during the year. We have never known an accountant who did not occasionally make an error. As has been said, "One who never makes mistakes never makes anything." Let not our friends become impatient or irritated if they very unusual occurrence of an erroneous entry should appear upon a bill. We mean to do right, and are always glad to have our attention called to a discrepancy of any kind. At the same time, we desire to assure our patrons that our books are carefully kept and that every letter containing a business item is painstakingly filed and preserved. Unless it is perfectly distinct, it is not safe to match memory against a written record.

Some of our pastors in writing for lists of subscribers have been kind enough to give the names of all the postoffices at which their members receive mail. This is very necessary, as we do not know the arrangement of the charges and cannot otherwise tell in whose jurisdiction many of our readers are. We appreciate the help which the brethren who have done this have given us, and we trust that all others who have a membership at more than one place will do likewise.

The Pacific Methodist Advocate says: "Some people don't pay for their paper until the end of one, two, or three years; then they think it comes 'awful' high. They don't take into account the fact that we have, through these years, met all expenses of publishing the Advocate and sending it to them through these long months without their giving us even a 5-cent piece to help 'buckle and tongue meet.'" It is not our Western contemporary alone which has this experience. Every journal has more or less of it. However, the vast body of our readers are loyal to their Conference organ and are prompt in giving it support. What we need is to widen the circle.

We add two new names to our "Honor Roll" this week. Here it is as it now appears: Mansfield, La., Rev. A. W. Turner, pastor; Bogalusa, La., Rev. J. M. Alford, pastor; Tunica, Miss., Rev. J. W. Honnoll, pastor; Lumberton, Miss., Rev. T. W. Adams, pastor; Ruleville, Miss., Rev. O. L. Savage, pastor; Homewood, Miss., Rev. W. W. Grayes, pastor; Houston, Miss., Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor.

THE NEW LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT.

A new Laymen's Movement is well under way in the Methodist Episcopal Church. It began quietly, and apparently under the leading of the Holy Spirit, as has been the case with most of the influential movements in the history of Methodism. Already it has attained to considerable proportions, and is being accorded not a little attention by both the religious and secular press. Seeing the possibilities for good in it, the Commission on Evangelism of the Methodist Episcopal Church has wisely fostered and encouraged it, and the episcopal duties of Bishop Berry, one of the most forceful men in American Methodism, have been lightened in order that he may lend a vigorous hand in carrying the new movement forward.

And most successfully is this being done. Largely attended conferences are being held in the great centers and the interest is rapidly spreading. The primary theme considered at these gatherings is how to deepen the spirituality of the Church and enlist laymen in the great work of winning souls to Christ. It is reported that quite a large number of men have become aroused as to the importance of direct personal service to extend the Master's kingdom, and have signed the following covenant:

"Trusting in God for strength, I hereby covenant with him and with my comrades in this meeting:

"1. To read a portion of Scripture and pray daily at the family altar.

"2. To regularly attend the mid-week meeting of the church, unless providentially hindered.

"3. To invite some man, each week, who does not attend any church, to come and hear my pastor preach.

"4. To endeavor by individual effort to persuade my unconverted friends to accept Jesus Christ."

But what is the difference between this Movement and the Laymen's Movement of which we have been hearing so much for the past two or three years? That is a missionary movement; this is a movement for evangelism. That is designed to conduct a campaign of education concerning the needs of the heathen world; this is intended to make them see their own spiritual poverty and the need of doing personal work to rescue the perishing about their own doors. That is a call for larger liberality and for money; this is an appeal for deeper consecration and for service.

But will not this latter Movement tend to hurt the former? We scarcely think so. But whatever effect it may have upon that particular enterprise, we feel sure that it will not injure the cause of missions. Any agency that quickens and enriches the spiritual life of the Church must necessarily strengthen and give impetus to every proper phase of its activity. As Bishop Berry has said, nothing can so weaken and hinder the work abroad, as to let the blight of worldliness and materialism destroy the work at home. No army can hope to press onward to conquest which does not take care of its base of supply.

Let us not be understood as belittling or disparaging the Laymen's Missionary Movement. It has accomplished much that urgently needed to be done. It has conducted a missionary propaganda and enlarged the vision and loosened the purse-strings of thousands. Its influence has been felt throughout Christendom and in every pagan land. But though it has done great good, all must admit that it has failed thus far to reach the great masses of the laity. Perhaps this has been because they are too much immersed in worldliness to respond to any missionary call, no matter how eloquent and appealing. They need first to be spiritually awakened. The best cure for indifference to the supreme task of evangelizing the world is a genuine case of conversion. Men must have Christ consciously in their hearts before they can have a passion to give him to others.

We hope that the Laymen's Movement for Evangelism will come South and find its way into our Church. We believe that it has the right conception and is striking at the right thing. Its dominant note seems to be, We seek not yours, but you. This was where Paul placed the emphasis, and, in our opinion, it is where the Church needs to place it now. There is too much disposition on the part of our men to use their money as a sort of means of purchasing exemption from service. "Take it," they say; "you are welcome to it, but leave us alone." We can afford to agree to no such compromise. Men are more than money; and when such a bargain is made, Satan retains the prize that is worth having, and we are hoodwinked with a trifle. Win the man, and you have him and all that he has.

The Christian warfare has long been too much of a general's fight, with the army loitering in the camp. What is needed is for the rank and file to put on their armor and get into action. It was the laity, filled with the Holy Ghost, and every disciple an energetic propagandist, that made primitive Christianity invincible. And only a witnessing and working membership can today make the Church spiritually prosperous and strong, and enable her to move triumphantly forward upon her mission of reaching and saving the lost of all races and in all lands.

THE WORK OF NORTHERN METHODISTS IN THE SOUTH.

The work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the Southern States is frequently discussed in the papers by representatives of that denomination. Occasionally some brother of an optimistic turn of mind talks glowingly of what they are doing down in Dixie, and suggests that they are about to conquer this section religiously as they did with carnal weapons back in the sixties. Well, here are the figures as they have just been tabulated by the Northwestern Christian Advocate, and we are perfectly content to let them speak for themselves:

THE NEW PRESIDENT OF MANSFIELD.

Prof. A. B. Peters, the new president of Mansfield College, has been in charge since January 1, and the report is that the work of the session is going forward admirably under his guiding hand. This does not at all surprise us, for President Peters has an excellent reputation as an educator and it was to be expected that he would give a good account of himself in his new position. Both as an instructor and administrator he has been tried, and not found wanting. Under existing conditions, he will have much to do to build up and carry forward the institution of which he has been made the head, but he is said to be a man who does not shrink from hard work, and there are few difficulties which persistent labor cannot overcome. Let our pastors and people rally to the support of the new president, and leave nothing possible undone to hold up his hands and make his administration one marked by growth and progress. Every consideration demands that our only college for young ladies in Louisiana shall be placed upon a firm footing, and maintained upon a scale commensurate with the educational requirements of the age. The Methodists of the State can do this, and we believe that they will.

AN IMPORTANT MATTER.

At a recent session, the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting adopted a resolution earnestly requesting the pastors in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and other States, to send to its secretary, Rev. J. W. Booth, the names of Methodists moving to the city to live, or who come here for medical treatment expecting to remain for several days or weeks. This request deals with a matter of great importance, and we hope that the brethren will not overlook it, or fail to comply with it. Methodism sustains a tremendous leakage by the emigration of her members from one locality to another, because no satisfactory system of keeping up with them has been wrought out and put into operation. Many do not take church certificates with them, and those who do, feeling ill at ease among strangers, frequently fail to connect themselves with another congregation. The only way to avoid this loss is for the pastor in the community which they are leaving to write the preacher in the place where they are going. Beyond any question, we need to be more alert at this point. Especially are we in danger of losing members when they go to a large city, where they are likely to be lost sight of in the vast population. It is also well to look after our sick who go to hospitals to be treated. Far too long we have allowed the Romish Church to have a monopoly of this work. There is no better time to impress people and win them for our Lord than when affliction has made them serious and thoughtful. Our pastors in New Orleans—a noble band—will gladly take upon themselves the task of looking after the sick from outside the city, if they are only informed. Brother Booth's address is No. 119 Vallette street.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson reports pleasant surroundings and a good outlook at Scooba, Miss.

Rev. E. H. Cunningham is in place and hard at work at Rienzi, Miss. He serves a good people, who are thoughtful of his needs.

Rev. J. S. Rutledge is a good friend of the Advocate. He recently sent us a list of new subscribers and renewals, for which he has our thanks.

Rev. J. O. Winburn has begun his work at Seminary, Miss., in his usual energetic fashion, and is greatly encouraged with the outlook for a good year.

Rev. F. L. Applewhite writes as follows: "We are pleased with our new situation. The people of Benton gave us a kind welcome. The new year promises to be a good one."

Ruleville, Miss., goes on our "Honor Roll." Under the efficient leadership of Rev. O. L. Savage, the Advocate now goes to the home of every official member of that charge.

Rev. W. L. Blackwell, of Hermanville, Miss., has our thanks for a good list of renewals to the Advocate. He is a man who is accustomed to look after all interests of the Church.

Brother E. A. Vail requests us to state that he would be pleased to add the brethren in revival services by conducting the singing and doing personal work. His address is 1405 Baronne Street, New Orleans, La.

After an absence of seven months in Europe and the Holy Land, Miss Bennett has returned. She is at Richmond, Ky., with her family, who, like the Home Mission sisters, are rejoicing to have her on our own soil.

Rev. J. E. Carpenter is delightfully situated at Lawton, one of the growing cities of Oklahoma and the Southwest. He has a fine congregation, an attractive parsonage, and the stewards have fixed his salary at $2,500.

We regret to learn that Rev. J. H. Hoffpauir is quite sick with pneumonia. We trust the disease will be stayed, and our brother soon enabled to continue the work he so much loves. Let prayer be made for his speedy recovery.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone, the energetic pastor at Greenville, Miss., writes that the money to pay a church debt of $1,450 has been secured. We rejoice with him and his good people over the accomplishment of this splendid result.

Rev. W. H. Coleman, of Ruston, and Rev. R. H. Wynn, of Monroe, attended the recent Mid-Winter Missionary School at Nashville. Elsewhere we publish a brief account of that interesting gathering from the facile pen of the latter.

Brother J. H. Havens, of Vancleave, Miss., has been receiving the Advocate about thirty-two years. In renewing his subscription for another year he says he looks upon it as a friend which never fails him. So it is a faithful friend to many.

We extend hearty thanks to Rev. Thomas L. Porter of the Mars Hill Circuit for eight subscribers sent us and commendatory words. We reciprocate his good wishes, and pray that God may lead and bless him in all that he undertakes to do.

Rev. J. P. Haney requests us to state that his post-office address is Clinton, La., and not Blairstown. Former pastors of the charge have lived at Blairstown, but he finds it expedient to make his home at Clinton. Let his correspondents take note.

Rev. M. L. Burton continues to improve, and is now considered out of danger. He takes plenty of nourishment, has more vigor expressed in his face, and is gaining in strength. Sister Burton has been constantly by his side during his severe illness.

Rev. J. T. McCafferty, of Leland, Miss., has our thanks for a list of renewals and new subscribers. Brother McCafferty is one of the most effective pastors in the North Mississippi Conference, always looking carefully after every interest of the Church.

Dr. J. A. Parker requests us to state that all mail and express matter intended for him should be addressed to St. Martinsville, La. Let all concerned take note. No man in Louisiana has been more faithful to the interests of Methodism than Dr. Parker.

Rev. B. W. Lewis is happy in his work on the Enterprise and Stonewall charge. Brother Lewis is one of the Lewis family which has given so many able preachers to Methodism in Mississippi. We thank him for an invitation to visit him in his new work.

We regret to know that Rev. F. J. McCoy, of Tloga, La., has been ill with la grippe. We are indebted to the Sunday school secretary at that place, Mr. M. A. Walsworth for a list of five subscribers. We wish these friends a year of large prosperity in their work.

The Advocate acknowledges a call from Mr. G. E. Knott, of Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Knott is assistant superintendent of Trinity Sunday school of that city. He is here with his brother who is seriously ill in Hotel Dieu.

Miss Mary Lawrence, of Haughton, La., has brought us under obligations by sending us a splendid list of subscribers. She says she cannot get along without the paper, and if people will read it, they will find likewise. Of course this pleases us very much.

Writing from Lorman, Miss., on the 12th, inst., Rev. J. E. Sampley says: "We have been very kindly received on our new work. A constant stream of good things has been flowing into the parsonage. The Lord has been with us in our services, and we are hopeful."

Rev. O. W. Bradley moves out with all of the indications propitious at Holly Springs, and is expectant of a good year. We dare say that he will have it. He always does. We are under obligations to this popular pastor for good work done for the Conference organ.

Rev. J. A. Wells, of 7th Avenue, Meridian, Miss., is another preacher who realizes the value of the Advocate to his official board. He has given us instructions to send it to each of his official members. We have no doubt that he will see good results from this action.

The Trustees of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage at Ruston held a meeting last week, and thoroughly reviewed the work of the institution. There was a good attendance of the members of the Board, but what specific business was transacted is unknown to us at this writing.

Rev. M. M. Black and family have been given a cordial welcome by the good people of Philadelphia, Miss., his new charge, and the work has begun with encouraging prospects. We predict that under Brother Black's capable leadership substantial results will be accomplished in this field.

From Vaughan, Miss., we have received a letter bringing the names of several subscribers and a check to correspond. We are indebted for this good work to Rev. W. W. Perry, one of the Advocate's best friends. We pray that the Lord may greatly prosper the labors of this energetic itinerant.

Brother J. T. Otts, of Homer, La., has our sincere thanks for a fine list of renewals and new subscribers from that place. He states that Rev. A. S. Lutz has made a fine beginning in his work there, and that the people are very much in love with him. Those who know Brother Lutz and his excellent wife are not surprised to hear that.

From a personal letter from Dr. H. G. Davis, presiding elder of the Tuscaloosa District, North Alabama Conference, we learn that great prosperity attended the Church in that section last year. In the Tuscaloosa District about eighteen new churches were organized, and about eight hundred new members added to the church. The North Alabama Conference is one of the strongest in the Connection.

Rev. A. I. Townsley, of Arcadia, kindly sends us a picture of the beautiful new Methodist Church at that place, and gives of it the following description: "Our church here is a model in artistic architecture. It is mission style, steam heated, and cooled by electric fans. It has 26 art glass memorial windows, three exits and entrances, is seated with modern pews, and brilliantly illuminated with a 50-light bouquet chandelier. It has a debt of $1,500 on it, which we are already planning to raise, and we hope to have it dedicated later in the year."

Dr. M. O. Shivers, of Greenville, one of the foremost physicians in Mississippi, has been forced by health considerations to go West. He has selected Colorado Springs, Col., as his new home. The removal of Dr. Shivers and his interesting family is a distinct loss to our Delta Methodism, and they will be followed by the prayers and good wishes of a host of friends, who will ever hold them in loving remembrance. Persons desiring to communicate with the Doctor may address him at New Colorado Springs, Col., in care of the Acacia Hotel.

Rev. Ira B. Robertson, a superannuate of the Mississippi Conference, is visiting his daughter, Mrs. E. A. Baldwin of this city. We were pleased to have him and his little granddaughter call at the office one day last week. We entertain a feeling of reverence for the men who have borne the burden and heat of the day and spent their strength in the service of the Master. Brother Robertson is in his fifty-first year in the itinerancy.

At the request of our Church Extension Board, Mr. George W. Cramer, a capable New York architect, has prepared for distribution a catalogue of plans of "down-to-date twentieth century churches," which deals with structures costing less than $25,000. A catalogue of more expensive edifices will be issued later. Congregations planning to erect new houses of worship would do well to write Dr. W. F. McMurry, 705 West Chestnut Street, Louisville, Ky., for a copy of this book of plans. In this day of modern methods of work church architecture is an important matter, and should be given careful consideration by building committees.

We acknowledge the reception of a copy of the Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference. Brother Countiss is to be congratulated upon getting them out so promptly. The pamphlet presents a neat appearance, and the contents are well arranged. Our only objection to them is that they are rather too condensed—in our opinion a common fault of Annual Conference minutes. The secretaries, however, are in no wise to blame for this, as they have to work with inadequate funds. It is surprising how well they do with the means at their disposal. This is particularly true of Brother Countiss who is not only a fine secretary, but who also has in a marked degree the editorial gift.

A PARLOR CONFERENCE ON CITY MISSIONS.

Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 11, an important conference on mission problems was held by leading workers of our churches in New Orleans. The ministers and members of the Home Mission Societies were invited by Mrs. W. W. Carre to meet in the spacious parlor of her home at 1922 State Street. An hour and a half was given to a careful consideration of the progress and needs of St. Mark's Hall, the splendid city mission work projected by the Woman's Home Mission Society and the Board of Foreign Missions, and now under the supervision of the General Board of Missions. A statement of the work at St. Mark's Hall and the immediate needs for enlargement was made by the superintendent, Rev. N. E. Joyner, and Miss Margaret Ragland, the head-resident. The discussion following the statement was participated in by Dr. J. M. Henry, presiding elder, Rev. A. G. Shankle, J. L. Sutton, Mrs. W. W. Carre, Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, Mrs. John Parker and others, showing how deeply interested are the churches of the city in the general work of Methodism in the city. The suggestion of Mrs. Carre, that a canvass be made for a list of annual contributions to St. Mark's Hall, each one being asked for one dollar a year, or more, was unanimously adopted and arrangements were perfected for making the canvass in each of the churches by volunteer workers. In addition to this, a cash donation of twenty-five dollars was made by those present toward the equipment for the boys of St. Mark's Hall. Superintendent Joyner announced plans for the purchase of a summer camp for St. Mark's Hall and the raising of a special fund for "outing work" the coming summer. A full statement of these plans will be made in the columns of the Advocate at an early date.

FROM MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Our first Quarterly Conference convened on the evening of January 1st, with our new presiding elder, Rev. H. R. Singleton in the chair, and to say that our people are delighted with Brother Singleton is but correctly stating the case. His sermons were strong and helpful. One of our best laymen, a man of many years' faithful service, was heard to say, "Bishop Murrah made a fine selection when he appointed this strong, energetic man presiding elder of the Shreveport District." Our congregations are good, and are working for a good year in our Lord's kingdom.

Professor A. B. Peters, the newly elected president of Mansfield Female College, arrived on Jan. 1, and is in charge. We have received several new girls since Conference, and the work is moving on nicely. President Peters expects to spend his Sundays with the pastors laboring in the interest of the college. He is anxious to fill the college with girls, and I believe that, with the co-operation of the pastors, Brother Peters will do the work. Brother pastor, may we count on you? I want to suggest that every pastor who feels an interest in the success of our college for girls, write a postal to Brother Peters, inviting him to visit his charge. Do it now. If there are one or more girls in your community who ought to go to college next year, send the names to Brother Peters right away, and he will do the rest. Brother J. L. P. Sheppard, one of our best-loved superannuates is suffering some with throat trouble, but is able to get about pretty well when the weather is good. Every man and woman in Mansfield knows and loves Brother Sheppard and his good wife. His brotherly counsel has been a great help to me. Come up, Doctor! We want to see you and hear you preach.

LOUISE PAINE CLACK, infant daughter of W. S. and Dora Paine Clack was born December 31, 1909, and died December 5, 1910. A bright and affectionate little blue-eyed darling, the pet of the household has left us. She was a great-granddaughter and niece of Dr. S. L. Paine and Bishop Robert Paine. God gave us our precious little darling such a short time. She cannot come to us, but we can go to her, and by God's grace we will. She is still our babe. Grandmother Wade.

Entered into rest on November 30th, 1910, Mrs. MADY E. WILSON, widow of Charles A. Wilson and daughter of W. A. and M. E. Brady; born in Carroll county, Miss., January 21, 1871. Earth is poorer and heaven richer today with the passing of this soul, a soul so true and tender and faithful in all the relations of this earthly life that the Master's "well done" were deservedly spoken when she looked into his face and heard the blessed words. The home is desolate, the brave heart stilled that breasted the storms of life for those she loved; but even in death that love is triumphant in power for good, for "her own" can never forget. Its memory and influence will abide with them, uplifting and purifying them through all the years to come; and as the broken lines of life are re-adjusted, it may be given them to know the peace which was hers in striving to follow where she led, imbued with her spirit of self-sacrificing devotion and unflinching loyalty to duty. She leaves one son and daughter, with a large number of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss.

O. L. Savage, Pastor.

A LETTER FROM TEXAS.

Dear Dr. Meek: If you will allow me space, I will write a few thoughts. Rev. C. A. Spraggins, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, and now the new presiding elder of the McKinney District, spent New Year's night with me, and we had a long talk about old North Mississippi and its pastors and people. It was very pleasant and refreshing to one whose early life, and ministry were spent there. North Texas has had many recruits from that fertile field. Some have gone, some are retired, while others are at the front of the battle. And I am proud to say that none of them have cowered at responsibilities, nor brought reproach upon the ministry again.

The first to go was A. C. Allen. To me a grander man than he we have never had. R. M. Powers left his impress upon the church. Then comes Rev. C. L. Ballard, who passed away in the close of our Conference. He was a good pastor, presiding elder, and one of the strongest defenders of the doctrine of our church. He was a local preacher in my charge in 1881, and went from there to Conference that fall. We were close friends all the time. How I did hate to give him up. Arthur D. McVay, M. C. Pierson and M. M. Dunn, are all on the "honor roll." J. M. Hunter, B. H. Bounds, H. E. Smith, A. W. Gipson, and myself are superannuates. O. P. and O. H. Thomas, E. H. Casey, J. B. Whitehead, C. A. Spraggins, and John R. Allen, are still on the "honor roll" at their several posts of duty.

Just here I wish to remark that out of a class of seven or more that joined the Memphis Conference with me at Holly Springs, forty-one years ago last November, all are living, and all have continued in the work except Irl R. Hicks, the weather prophet, and two are still in the pastorate, J. J. Brooks, of North Mississippi, and J. S. Renshaw, of Paris, Tenn. I cannot remember any one else who joined that fall; but if there was, we were separated in the division and organization of the North Mississippi in 1870. By the way, I roomed with an old preacher at Conference who was licensed to preach by Rev. J. H. Brooks in 1849, just twenty years before I was licensed by that man of God. What a happy gathering it will be when we all meet on the other shore!

I have an excellent picture of Bishop Murrah, nicely framed. He endeared himself to the North Texas Conference very much.

There are other Mississippians in other Texas Conferences: Rev. Wm. Foster, Brother Cunningham, son of my old friend J. T. Cunningham, and R. A. Burroughs, all doing good work.

If I decide fully to make a visit to North Mississippi this summer, I would love to visit Asbury, Texas, Shannon, Pleasant Grove, Myrtle, Abbeville, Byhalia, Mt. Pleasant, or other points where I can help brethren in revival meetings. If the brethren will notify me in time to arrange with them, I preached in North Mississippi forty-nine times last year, mostly in the Delta where twenty-five was my largest congregation. I want to work in the hills where I can have an audience. Yours in Christ, S. W. MILLER.

SHUQUALAK, MISS.

Shuqualak, as Brother Borders would say, is by no means a place to be "sneezed at." We have here a really handsome house of worship, elegantly furnished, and conveniently located, and the parsonage, when completed according to present plan of improvements, will class among the best preachers' homes of the Conference. The out of town churches are well spoken of, and are said to be aggressive and reliable in support of church interests. The town also has a Baptist and a Presbyterian church, and quite a few large and general assortment of stores are in evidence; also there is a bank and a splendid water supply from more than one thousand feet below the surface. Very many beautiful residences and a fine school building indicate the good taste and thrift of the population. Rev. Q. A. Oats was in his fourth year as pastor here, when he was called; during his enforced vacation and absence from his charge, to the great Conference gathering, where it shall never be said, "I am sick," and where church problems and ministerial assignments are at an end forever. Dr. Monk of Arkansas, however, affirms that he will "preach in heaven," and who can say to the contrary, since the story of human redemption ("which things the angels desire to look into") must continue of interest through the cycles of eternity. The young college theologian, Brother Guinn, who completed the term for Brother Oats was much respected and is mentioned with regard. Little is remarked of his immediate predecessor, at first appointed, who Jonah-like, "took ship for Tarshish." We have, therefore, a pleasant beginning, and hope for a year of good interest and of results among the churches. Rev. L. B. Hankins was expected at Mayhew on the day after our departure. By all signs himself and family went to be "in the hands of their friends." A. H. Williams.

Tidings from the Field

Escatawpa, Miss.:

We were received very cordially on our new charge. We have been "pounded" twice. And have received six by profession, two by certificate and one more adult is yet to be received by vows; have organized one new Ladies' Aid Society at Orange Grove, with twelve members and have added thirteen new members to the Aid Society at Escatawpa. Both societies will become W. H. M. Societies soon. I have organized one new prayer meeting and put new life in the old one. Have two good Leagues, which are alive. The Conference organ will be the next thing on program. Have made about seventy-five pastoral visits. Have also organized a little folks' Bible study class, which meets on Wednesday, and also one Bible class for old folks in the Sunday school.—E. L. Whiddon.

Trout, La.:

We find ourselves situated for the new Conference year in Trout, La. We were heartily welcomed upon our arrival by the most lovable set of people it has ever been our good fortune to meet. They are a godly people, and heartily in sympathy with every phase of Christian work. There is a fine, wide-awake Sunday school here that is putting forth every effort for the advancement of the cause of Christ in the town. The teachers, superintendent and other officers are to be praised for their splendid work. We are highly delighted with our pastoral charge and feel that the outlook for the present year is very flattering. Immediately after the holidays we were kindly remembered in a very substantial way by a real Methodist "pounding," which was greatly appreciated by the pastor and his wife.—C. F. Sheppard, January 10, 1911.

Vimville, Miss.:

At the last Conference I was read out for Daleville and Brother R. E. Rutledge for Vimville. After reaching home the presiding elder found it best to make a change, so I remain at Vimville, and Brother Rutledge goes to Daleville. We have held our first Quarterly Conference. Reports were all very good, and we are planning for the best year of our life in the work of the Master. We were able, by the help of God, and the co-operation of the people, to make the best report at the last Conference that has ever been made from this charge, and our aim is to surpass it this year. Last, but not least, we had one of the best "poundings" last Saturday by the good people of Pleasant Hill that the good editor ever heard of in his rounds. Pray for us.—Yours fraternally, H. J. Maddox.

Columbus, Miss.—Second Church:

As you know, I was changed after Conference from Crawford to Second Church, Columbus. We were met at the depot by Prof. Dabney Lipscomb of the I. I. and C., that good man, who is always ready to do any thing to advance "his Master's cause." We were carried direct to the parsonage, where we were met by a committee of splendid ladies. There were bright fires in the grates, and a splendid dinner in readiness, with the pantry well supplied. And on New Year's Day we were remembered again, and still the good things come. We were well received, and have been kindly treated ever since our arrival. Yesterday (the second Sunday) was a high day for Second Church. We had a well-filled house, morning and evening; a fine communion service at 11 o'clock, with seven additions to our church. We are grateful to our Lord and the good people for these blessings. We pray a Father's blessing upon our people. We are working, praying and expecting a good year and a great revival. We will look after the Advocate. God bless the paper and "long live the editor."—Yours for the work, W. C. Carlisle, Jan. 9, 1911.

Lumberton, Miss.:

I send you list of subscribers to the Advocate. When you send out next week's issue every family in the entire official circle of my church will read the New Orleans Christian Advocate. You will have the name of every steward and trustee in the Lumberton Church on your mailing list. You are giving us a paper that is altogether worthy of loyal and generous support. It should have, a greatly increased circulation. I sometimes make good resolutions looking to a more vigorous campaign in its behalf, but I no sooner begin to plan for action than some other matter of immediate concern interrupts. You have been a pastor, Bro. Meek, and know how it is. I wish I could spend a week among my people with nothing to do but to present the claims of the paper—our Conference organ. May 1911 be a year of great things with you.—T. W. Adams, Jan. 6.

North Carrollton Circuit:

We were returned to this charge for another year. This will be our second year here. We hope that it may prove a much better year than the one that has just passed. We feel, however, that the year now gone has not been an entire failure. We have some as true and loyal people here as can be found anywhere. We have had many "glad welcomes" since our return. Our congregations at nearly every point have been good and a fine spirit is prevailing. We have had a good spiritual feeling manifested in our mid-week prayer services, and fairly good interest in our Sunday schools. We are hoping, working and praying that greater interest will be taken, and that all the work of the church may go steadily forward. The lands of this section are fertile, and the people know how to manage and are abreast with the times. The Longview people have built for themselves a beautiful new church, which is just now being completed. This speaks well for their interest in our Lord's work. May showers of richest blessings be bestowed upon that Christian community and the day soon come when it can be said as of old: "Behold their young men see visions; their old men dream dreams and their sons and daughters are made to prophesy in the name of the Lord." The young people compare favorably with those of any other community. One of our girls is in school at Grenada and there are others who ought to go. I ask an interest in your prayers for one of our faithful sisters who has been sick for nearly a year. Pray for us.—Mrs. T. E. Gregory.

FROM THE LAND OF THE SUN-SET SEA.

Many times since the fateful day when I turned my face away from the scenes of my youth and with saddened heart and blurred vision took up my journey to the place where duty and opportunity seemed to call me, I have wanted to write a word of brotherly greeting for the columns of the Advocate. I have twice essayed to do this, but could not bring myself to believe that my chat would be worthy of a place in its pages, as calculated to entertain, enlighten or edify, so my epistolary efforts have died a-borning.

But I hunger so for the companionship of the dear friends and brethren, I find such delight in the notes from their pens, that I can almost persuade myself that not a few of them will indulge me in their interest, and will read at least with generous patience my comprehensive greetings to them as they begin the New Year. The Conferences are over, and they are settled for another year. I suspect that few, whose interests were actually at stake, watched for the appointments more eagerly than this lorn boy who could but spy the game through a knot hole in the fence. (I should not presume to use this figure of speech, but for the recent decision touching athletics, which seems to warrant larger liberties in this regard.) I crave the privilege of praying upon all a blessed year, full of fruitful and happy service and richest blessing.

Perhaps I may be expected to say something about the land in which my lot has been cast. California is a charming country; full of romance, beauty, opportunity, destiny. It is difficult for us to conceive of its magnitude, and so we are apt to confuse the whole with a part. From one end to the other it measures about eight hundred miles, its sea line being much more than this. It varies in elevation from a depression two hundred feet below the level of the ocean, to Mount Whitney, the highest mountain in the United States proper, 14,898 feet above the sea. There are some areas which are practically sterile, veritable deserts, unfit for the abode of man or beast, while, yet again, there are vast valleys of incredible fertility. In some of the interior desert valleys a sprinkle of rain is said to be a rare phenomenon, while along the northern coast the precipitation is almost constant during the winter months. The population is heterogeneous in the extreme; a hodge-podge of every nation under heaven, from Hebrews to Hindus.

Those who labor faithfully here are building for a mighty future. The great inland empires, the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys, each slightly smaller than Mississippi, will some day support teeming millions, where to-day but thousands live. The growth of the country during the past decade was wonderful, but in my judgment will be augmented during the next census period. A soil of marvelous richness, a climate of rare delightsomeness, scenery of bewildering grandeur, a versatility of resources scarcely equaled anywhere else in our nation, every prospect pleases, but alas! many men are vile. God, the Church, the Sabbath, Temperance, Morality are honored here as little as anywhere I have ever seen. This is particularly true of Northern California, to an extent far greater than of the vicinity of Los Angeles. Sometimes my heart gets so hungry for the blessed associations of the homeland that I think I must go whether or no, and then there rises before me the vision of the need of this land. There is plenty of work for the Church to do everywhere, but it is especially true that here the forces which make for righteousness are tested as perhaps nowhere else in America. I venture to predict that within fifty years the Pacific coast will be our greatest asset or our greatest menace, and it is only the Church of God which can save it from being the latter. Finally, brethren, pray for us.

I. D. BORDERS.

Sleepless Nights

"My wife is of a nervous temperament, and has suffered much from sleeplessness. Since using Dr. Miles' Nervine she has greatly improved and now sleeps well."

W. W. FISHBACK, Redkey, Ind.

When the nerves become weak, worn-out, excitable from overwork, worry, grief or mental exhaustion, their turbulent condition prevents that total relaxation that induces sleep.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

by its soothing and quieting influence and by strengthening and replenishing the exhausted nerve force brings profound and restful sleep.

The first package will benefit; if not your druggist will return your money.

DESIRES WORK.

Dear Brother Meek: Please announce through your paper that I am ready for work.

I am just out of college, where I have had four years of training; three of them in the Meridian Male College, at Meridian, Miss. I am a full fledged holiness preacher, and will not compromise an inch.

I prefer the itinerant work in the western country. However, "I will follow where He leadeth, and pasture where He feedeth." Yours for Christ's kingdom.

A. C. SEARCY.

Eupora, Miss.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

"HOW AMERICA GOT INTO CHINA."

The story of "How America Got Into China" is one of the most interesting and important chapters in commercial history. It has been written for the January Century by Frederick McCormick, for many years special correspondent in the East for the Associated Press, Reuter's, and other news-gathering agencies; and in it he tells the inside history of the diplomacy by which the United States achieved an equal opportunity for trade with China.

The signing of the Hu-kuang loan, May 23, 1910, Mr. McCormick declares, was a victory for American commerce, trade, political influence, and for the open door in China. By virtue of that victory, America's position in China is now a new subject of study to American statesmen. It affords commercial opportunities on a parity with those of other great industrial nations, and on account of America's peculiar relations to China, involves her in responsibilities greater than those borne by other powers.

CO-OPERATION WANTED.

To the Pastors of North Mississippi:
Your Sunday School Board is desirous of inaugurating a forward movement to stimulate interest, and help the two thousand and more earnest workers throughout North Mississippi.

Plans were set on foot at our recent meeting in Sardis and the detail matters were left to the Executive Committee.

In accordance with the report adopted by the Conference and the full and hearty concurrence of the old as well as the newly organized Board arrangements have been made for definite field work, and Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of Corinth, will serve us as Secretary to give you any assistance in stimulating the workers to greater zeal. She needs only to have your endorsement and encouragement that she may have access to the soldiers on the firing line, the superintendents and teachers. We take great pleasure in commending her to you, asking that you put your leaders in touch with her office and let her be used of God for the splendid service of which she is capable. Most sincerely,

R. P. NEBLETT,

Chairman.

R. H. B. GLADNEY,

Treasurer.

JAS. G. MCGOWEN,

Secretary.

THE MODERN PLOW.

To-day, about ten years after the first practical traction plowing engine was made there are ten thousand operating in America and Canada, each of which plows an average of eight hundred acres a year. Some of the larger steam plows average one thousand acres, or more, but the lighter gasoline and other internal combustion engines plow enough less to bring the average down to eight hundred.

An illustration of the saving in time—and in crop yield—comes from the Last Mountain Valley in Saskatchewan where a section of rich wild sod land—640 acres—was broken in thirty-six hours, three steam outfits working continuously in order to get the land plowed immediately. A six-horse team with a gang plow would have required a month, Sundays included, to perform the same amount of work. The result was that the owner was able to plant his entire 640 acres at the right time, instead of only a small portion of it as would have been the case had he depended upon animal power.—National Magazine.

AL-E-THE-IA.

Mrs. Clinton Smith, president of the W. C. T. U. in Washington, D. C., writes of Mrs. Miller's temperance story:

"I have read the book most thoroughly and carefully. I admire your ability to use such good and clear language to make your meaning plain. I found the book interesting, and, better still, convincing, and will recommend it when ever I can."

Price, 25 cents. For sale by Mrs. C. C. Miller, Hammond, La., or New Orleans Christian Advocate.

A REAL BLESSING

What a blessing is perfect health!
What enjoyment there is in feeling well! Life is all pleasure, and work is but play. But if one is continually ailing, life seems scarcely worth living.

Thousands of women suffer, continually or periodically, from the ill or weakness peculiar to their sex. Pain kills pleasure, hinders the performance of their daily duties and makes them most wretched.

Countless women, suffering such ill, have found relief or cure in that old, reliable medicine, especially prepared for women,—Wine of Cardui. Thousands of these grateful ladies write to tell what Cardui has done for them.

We recently had this letter from Mrs. Annie Vaughan, of Raleigh, N. C.:
"I cannot find words to express my deep gratitude for what your wonderful medicine, Cardui, did for me, for I sincerely believe it saved my life. I was sick and worn out, almost unto death. My sister finally persuaded me to take Cardui. Before I had taken 3 bottles I was well and strong."

Cardui is a pure, vegetable remedy, which acts gently and naturally on the womanly system. If you are nervous, weak or sick, try Cardui. Get it a once. It will help you.
At all druggists in $1.00 bottles.

THOROUGHBRED ANIMALS AND PLANTS.

Their Great Commercial Value.
There is as much difference between thoroughbred and ordinary plants as between thoroughbred and ordinary animals. This statement is made by D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, the greatest flower and vegetable breeders in the country, and appears in their 1911 Annual Catalogue just issued. They argue for the great value and economy of thoroughbred seeds. "Any fundamental natural law which applies to animals applies equally to plants." A good cow (i.e. a thoroughbred) eats no more than a poor one, but may give twice as much butter-fat. "Good blood" makes as much difference with corn as with cows. But thoroughbred plants, like thoroughbred animals, are not produced in one or two generations, for no matter how superior an individual of common origin may be, its progeny are as a rule like the general run of its antecedents. Hence the need for seedsmen like D. M. Ferry & Co. They have experience, the best plant breeding equipment in the United States, and the business acumen to sell only such seeds as have been bred from the choicest stocks for many generations.

D. M. Ferry & Co's Seed Annual for 1911 may be had free of charge by writing to them at Detroit, Michigan.
It contains much of interest for those who think.

The Epworth League.

FORWARD MOVEMENT POLICY.

Unanimously Adopted by the Christmas Conference of League Workers.

1. In view of the increasing activity of the Sunday school in several departments of work heretofore conducted exclusively by the Epworth League, your committee recommends that a commission be constituted, composed of the General Secretary of the Epworth League and a member of the Epworth League Board and one other person to be chosen by the General Secretary, to confer with a similar commission from the Sunday School Board with a view to correlating the work of the Sunday school and of the Epworth League in such a way as to secure the widest and most effective extension of the principles for the success of which both organizations are striving.

2. In view of the confusion that has arisen in many places in regard to the work of the Juvenile Missionary Society, the Mite Box Brigade, and the Junior League, your committee urges that the commission mentioned in the preceding paragraph be asked to take counsel with the proper officers of the Woman's Missionary Society, looking to reaching an agreement correlating the work of all our Juvenile Societies; the agreement to be published as the official policy under which the religious education of our boys and girls is henceforth to be carried on.

3. Your committee recommends, in the third place, that evangelization be emphasized as the one dominant interest of League activity during the next twelve months; that special attention be given to disseminating such literature as will help to equip our young people to do personal work, and to assist the pastor in all evangelistic efforts undertaken in the local church.

4. It is further recommended that the plan of the Boys' League be enlarged to include the best features of the Boy Scout movement, and that work with boys be rapidly and persistently promoted in all our pastoral charges.

5. Your committee believes that the matter of using district secretaries for institute work in the local chapters of their respective districts ought to receive the most painstaking attention from the general secretary and all his co-laborers.

6. The last recommendation your committee makes is that the collection and distribution of the funds derived from the Ten-Cent Assessment and the Five-Cent Assessment be placed in the hands of the members of the Annual Conference Epworth League Cabinets and of the Annual Conference Epworth League Boards. We believe that this measure will fix the League in a secure place in the practical policy of our church.

R. W. Hood,
P. B. Kern,
J. Marvin Culbreth, Committee.

EPWORTH LEAGUE RESOLUTIONS FOR THE NEW YEAR:

I will go nowhere that I can not take Christ with me.

In everything I will try to shape my conduct so as to please Christ.

I will not criticize my fellow Leaguers, nor will I be given to fault-finding.

I will live closer to God during the year to come than I did in the year just passed.

I will, by God's help, try to make every one happier and better with whom I come in contact.

I will make it my daily habit to read a portion of God's Word, and to offer up a prayer to "Him who seeth in secret."

I will be very considerate of the feelings of others, and try hard to obey the injunction, "In love preferring one another."

I will read some good book or paper every day, and try to remember what I have read and practice what I have learned.

In public and private, among strangers and friends, I will strive so to conduct myself as to prove to all that I am a friend of Christ.

I will not use language unbecoming a gentleman and a Christian, neither will I associate with those who persist in using such language.

Realizing that if left to myself I shall not be able to keep any of these resolutions, therefore I am resolved that upon bended knees I will ask God daily for strength to do his will.

I will try to be punctual at all the League and church services, and will do all in my power to make these services interesting and helpful. I will not say evil of any one. I will not, like a cowardly dog, be a "backbiter," neither will I "take up" a reproach against my neighbor."—Pittsburg Advocate.

THE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

"What are you going to be next year? Better, or worse, or the same, my dear?"

If you're not better, you'll surely be worse;

Not ng stands still in the universe."

"We can not divide our work from ourselves, nor isolate our future from our qualities. A ship might as well try to sail north with her jib, and east with her foresail, and south with her mainsail, as a man to go one way in conduct, and another way in character, and another way in destiny."—Henry Van Dyke.

NOTES.

The Leaguers of the North Mississippi Conference have pledged themselves to educate a young lady at Grenada College and a young man at Millsaps College.

The Epworth Era a few weeks ago referred to the Noel Memorial League at Shreveport, La., as a "Live-Wire League." The members are said to bestir themselves to reach and interest visitors and strangers.

The transfer of Rev. R. A. Clark to the Memphis Conference took from North Mississippi one of its most wide-awake League pastors. He will be greatly missed in carrying forward the work of the new year.

Rev. E. L. Whiddon, in charge of the Escatawpa work, Mississippi Conference, has found two good Leagues to begin with in his new field. He is a fortunate pastor. The right sort of a League is a valuable re-enforcement to the preacher.

The Pleasant Grove League, on the Buena Vista Circuit (Mississippi), is working in the interest of the Song-do school in Korea. We are pleased to hear of missionary activity among our young friends.

The following are the officers of the League Boards of our three patronizing Conferences: Mississippi Conference—President, Rev. H. W. Van Hook; secretary, B. W. Lewis. Louisiana Conference—President, Rev. C. D. Atkinson; secretary, Rev. A. F. Vaughan. North Mississippi Conference—President, J. H. Holden; secretary, J. B. Randolph.

A good Leaguer does not merely try to build up the League, but also the Church. All incidental organizations should seek to strengthen and make prosperous the one great institution around which they are clustered. We never like to see a League advertising its own meetings, and saying nothing of the preaching services conducted by the pastor. Be a worker for your Church.

How about the Ten-Cent Assessment? It is needed at headquarters. Send it in at the earliest day possible, if you have not already done so.

Rev. A. I. Townsley has organized a Junior Epworth League with thirty members at Arcadia, La.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

On a recent Sunday Rev. W. H. Ledbetter organized a class of young people in his Sunday school at Colfax and set them to work as an organized unit, and within a week the class of six who were present at organization had pledged a class of fifteen.

A Murrah Men's Bible Class was organized at Arcadia on Sunday, January 8, with twelve members.

BROTHER LOWREY COMMENDED.

Rev. P. O. Lowrey, our Sunday school missionary, was with me the first Sunday in January. The weather was very inclement, yet he did us much good. I predict this will prove a seasonable and happy appointment.

Brother Lowrey has the educational and experimental qualifications. He also loves hard work. Then his very characteristics seem to fit him for the place. Let the Sunday schools that need reorganizing, or grading, or are on the drag be sure to secure his assistance.

H. W. Ledbetter.
Colfax, La.

A PARENTS' DEPARTMENT.

In the January 1911 issue of the Magazine, the Sunday School Board announces the addition of a Parents' Department to the general work of our Sunday schools on an equality with the other regular departments. It differs from the Home Department in that it works as a regular class in the Sunday school rather than with the shut-ins, and aims to help the parents of growing children. The first month's work deals with the vital question of punishing children, the subjects for the five Sundays being "The Relation of Punishment to Moral Education," "The Source of the Parents' Authority," "The Aims of Punishment," "Two Kinds of Punishment" and "The Response to Punishment."

These are the first announced subjects on parents' problems, and are intended to take the place of the regular Bible lessons in the school. This department is conducted by Edward Porter St. John, and he designs that the parents' class shall do for the fathers and mothers what the normal class does for the teacher. The discussions on the present lessons with their suggestions are worth the price of the book. The easy going parent who has allowed his child to run rough-shod over every parental law is rebuked and made to think; and, likewise, the quarrelsome one who has scolded and wounded his child without a cause and for no moral purposes. Vital problems are discussed, suggestive themes proposed and standard books recommended.

There is a ripe field for the "Parents' Class," and we await with interest the announcement that our pastors and superintendents have seized this new instrument of power to bless the mothers and fathers of our children. As the class advances other problems dealing with adolescents, boys, etc., will be taken up in due order.

P. O. LOWREY.

THE POLLOCK SUNDAY SCHOOL MOVES FORWARD.

Rev. P. O. Lowrey, secretary of the Sunday School Board, under the direction of our presiding elder, P. M. Brown, visited our Sunday school at Pollock, La., January 7 to 10. The addresses of Bro. Lowrey at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday, and the round-table council with the pastor and workers Monday night were an inspiration to better methods, equipment and greater interest in our school. A few of the results in detail are the inauguration of the Home Department, the Cradle Roll and plans for grading the school. We hope soon to have each department fully organized, equipped and at work. Through the efficient leadership of Brothers Brown and Wallis, our school is fast coming to rank among the first of its size. The Christmas program (of which I enclose a copy) was indeed well prepared and effectively rendered.

In my humble opinion the Board made no mistake in selecting so efficient a worker as P. O. Lowrey in this, the greatest of all works, the work of the Sunday school.

A. Rufus Hoffpauir.

January 11.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

The Adult Bible Class movement is the most philanthropic, altruistic and beautifully spiritual movement of the years and we must not lose our place in this great militant army, or break ranks by desertion, futile excuse or indolence.

A busy, keen-eyed man of the world says the splendid manliness, the genuine sociability and warm hearted brotherhood of the men's classes all over the country kept many a lonely fellow straight during Christmas.

The "absent fellows" of one big men's class each in his far-away place, hunted up a poor joyless, toyless child and filled the stocking, and its little heart with the Christ-child glow.

Mrs. Victoria T. Hoyle of Tupelo has a splendid mixed class and they have the honor of being Wesley Class, No. 1, of Dr. Bulla's fine Wesley Class Department.

Mrs. Mollie Allen of Booneville presides over a class of strong, fine business men who have built for themselves a commodious room and are doing a great work.

Have the members of the A. B. C. Department destroyed their "Excuse Calendars" for 1910. Let us hope so. How many beautiful lessons are all unlearned, how many kind deeds are still undone, how many out-stretched needy hands are still uplifted because you would sleep over late on a Sunday morning, or forsooth you worked over hard at your week-day business and must needs neglect that of the King, or the thousand and one excuses which left your chair vacant in your classroom the very day and hour when you were most needed! Oh, that the "Excuse Calendar" should go quite out of fashion!

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney has a fine class of Boy Scouts. This new movement delights boyish hearts and is a magnificent foundation for strong, ready and alert men.

Two towns in Kentucky have been indulging in a friendly contest as to new Sunday school pupils, attendance and collections, and everybody has gotten interested and the schools and their treasures are overflowing.

One big men's class in the State with red and white carnations for a class flower, will inaugurate a contest between the Reds and Whites next Sunday, choosing captains like an old-fashioned spelling bee and keeping full account on special red and white cards of attendance, new members and collections—and on May 1 the losing side will either give the winners a fish fry, or picnic, or $25 in gold, to keep the work going.

All to keep sweet, all to catch step and all to make the class, the Sunday school and the entire town a better place for their having lived the year of 1911, should be the motto of every A. B. C. for the coming months.

SEVENTEEN RULES FOR WORKING THE BOY PROBLEM.

By Marion Lawrence.

1. Go after them personally, systematically, persistently. Never give up.
2. Believe in boys. Don't call a boy a "bad boy."
3. Be interested in what they are interested in, whether it be baseball, pigeons or electricity.
4. Give them something to do. Let

Doctor's Prescription Failed—The Great Kidney Remedy Proves Its Merit.

It gives me great pleasure to say a good word for Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root because it has cured me of a severe case of Kidney Trouble. I had suffered for some five years with this trouble, and more especially for the first three months of 1909.

Physicians prescribed for me but without much success, and any relief obtained was only temporary. I had severe pains in my back and at the time was free of pain. When I stooped down it was with some difficulty that I could straighten my body again. I could not lift any weight of consequence without great pain. I would be compelled to arise and give the bladder relief. A friend of mine advised me to take Swamp-Root, whereupon I wrote to Dr. Kilmer for a sample bottle which so benefited me that I was led to believe it would be a great help to me. Accordingly I purchased two bottles of Swamp-Root from Mr. A. P. Perry, my Druggist, and the effect has been truly marvelous.

I feel like a new man and have every reason to believe that I am cured, and that no other medicine could have accomplished so much. Now I can raise a heavy load, can bend my back over my desk all day, and feel none the worse for it. In view of the foregoing facts, I sincerely trust that this testimonial may reach some of those who are suffering after the manner before described and that it may convince them that the merit of this great medicine should be given a fair trial in their case.

Very truly yours,

B. A. WILSON, Agt.,
Pac. and Wells Fargo Ex. Co.,

them know the requirements. Every member present every day on time with his Bible, a studied lesson and a mind to learn. Organize the class.

5. Know them by name. Get acquainted with them, but don't nickname them.

6. Don't "Don't" the boys. Teach positively instead of negatively. If he thinks he isn't wanted, he will go to the back-yard and take a short cut to the devil. If the house is too good for your boy it should burn.

7. Don't treat all boys alike. Study them as a farmer does his soil.

8. Allow for animal spirits. Don't cram a four-quart boy into a pint cup. Direct his activity in proper channels.

9. Be tactful with the boys. It is an art worth cultivating.

10. Keep close to them. Meet them during the week; invite them to your home.

11. Give them men teachers, but the right kind.

12. Sympathize with them. They need it and miss it when it is withheld.

13. Love your boys. Dr. Sheldon says: "There is nothing in this world but that will yield if you put love enough into it." Get into their hearts and natures through the door of love.

14. Trust the boys. Judge Lindsay has proven the wisdom of this.

15. Be happy with your boys. Smile. There's no religion in whine.

16. Confide in them, advise them, but don't scold.

17. In teaching, arouse interest and curiosity to gain attention and don't wait to apply lesson till the close of class period.—The World Evangel.

X-Ray Incubators in Big Demand.

The readers of this paper have no doubt noticed with interest, the advertisements of the X-Ray Incubator Co., of very different from others. The advantages of this style of incubator are shown by the fact that last year they doubled their business and found their factory far too small to meet the demand for X-Ray incubators. This year, however, they have built a big modern factory—have doubled their capacity again—and reports from them indicate that they will be kept running at top speed in order to meet the sales promptly. Mr. J. H. Kate, president of the company, has written an interesting catalog which he will be glad to mail to any of our readers. Address him personally in care of X-Ray Incubator Co., Wayne, Nebraska, asking for free catalog No. 65.

Editorial

Envy of another's gifts is an admission of inferiority. The great are willing to concede greatness to others, and rejoice that they have it.

War is on the retreat, and peace is advancing with her white banners streaming high. But this does not mean that man will not hereafter have his victories. Far nobler than any triumphs achieved in the clash of battle, will be those won upon "the bloodless fields of thought" and in the lowly places where love stoops to minister to the needy and the fallen. The rule of might is giving way to the reign of right, and more and more the millions of the race are becoming a world brotherhood.

Some one has made the pertinent observation that "we are commanded to let our lights shine, not to shine them." A piety that aspires to go on dress parade is in a fair way to be spooled, if it is not already so. Beauty in love with itself has lost its chiefest charm. This is as true of soul beauty as of physical beauty. One who was an authority on the subject said, "Love vaunteth not itself," or more literally, does not show itself off. Modesty is one of the marks of Christian perfection.

A case of remarkably sudden conversion, is reported in one of our Ontario exchanges. A colored Baptist preacher took charge of a certain church a few weeks ago, and a few hours after his arrival in town he declared himself an adherent of the "grand and noble" temperance cause. But out of fifty colored voters in the town only one votes the "dry" ticket; and inside of a few days the good brother saw fit to write a letter to the local paper declaring that he was opposed to local option. Are there not also white preachers who can make just as quick a turn as this colored brother?—The Christian Guardian

Verily, this is an age of many inventions and devices. Not only is this true of the scientific and business world, but also of the religious world. New organizations, new plans, and new movements follow in such quick succession that one is well-nigh bewildered. Not a few seem to think that the way to render effective service is to conjure up some novel scheme, never heard of before. And only he is considered wide awake and progressive who is ready to try these things as fast as they come, as the society woman chases after the changing fashions. We learned long ago that not every new movement is a forward movement. Surely it is time some master-mind were making a plea for the simple religion, as Charles Wagner did for the simple life. It is not more or better machinery that the Church needs, but more spiritual power. Almost any form of church government will answer when the people have Christ in their hearts and are aflame with enthusiasm to give him to others.

ARRESTED GROWTH.

No Christian should be satisfied with present attainments. On the contrary, he should be profoundly concerned unless he is making conscious progress in the spiritual life. The divine plan for the production of saints is that of orderly development—"first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." An instantaneous flowering out into full perfection is no more possible in the spiritual than in the physical realm. Only long days of golden sunshine and seasons of refreshing can bring the grain to a rich maturity, ready for the garner. The majestic oak that pillars its head against the sky and bids defiance to the storm is the product of decades, or perhaps centuries. But from the moment that the seed-corn and the acorn were quickened into life by the moisture of the soil and the warmth streaming down from the sun there was a steady going forward toward full fruition. Every day that passed witnessed advancement toward the divinely-fixed goal. So it should be in the Christian life. Every fleeting hour should enlarge and enrich it, and no year should be allowed to go by without finding it farther on the way toward fulfillment and completion.

Continuity of development is a matter of the utmost importance. Grave, indeed, are the perils of arrested growth. Death or dwarfhood is its almost inevitable consequence. Grain that unfavorable seasons and lack of cultivation have kept at one stage too long seldom yields a satisfactory harvest. Who has not seen such corn tasseling when a little more than knee-high, its very attempt to flower and fruit speaking pathetically of opportunities irretrievably gone, and attesting the truth that there is no escape from the penalty of standing still instead of going steadily forward as God intended? The Creator has placed a time limit on all things terrestrial. This limit is not only upon the length of existence, but also upon the possibilities of each of the periods of which it is composed. Youth wasted is irrecoverably lost. If its precious hours are not used to lay the foundation of worthy character, it is doubtful if it can be as well and strongly laid in the after years. The value of correct teaching and training in the beginning of life cannot be overestimated. The men who have wrought most mightily for the moral betterment of mankind have been those who in childhood breathed a pure and wholesome religious atmosphere. So true is this that some one has said, "The history of great men is the history of great mothers." He who starts right, continues right, and so acts that each to-morrow shall find him stronger and better than to-day, is pursuing the only course that leads to majestic and full-orbed manhood. But if one has been denied the blessing of Christian parentage and has come to know Christ late in life, there is all the more reason why he should be anxious to have his spiritual development go continuously on, without hindrance or interruption. With too much time already lost, he can ill afford to lose more.

But is there really such a thing as arrested spiritual growth? Most assuredly there is. Paul expressly so states in the fifth chapter of his epistle to the Hebrews: "For when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God; and have become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food. For every one that partaketh of milk is without experience of the word of righteousness; for he is a babe. But solid food is for full-grown men, even those who by reason of use have exercised their senses to discern good and evil." Long enough in the kingdom to have become teachers, yet remaining babes and still needing to be taught the first principles—what is this but religious dwarfhood? And does it not abound in our churches to-day? Are there not in nearly every congregation those who have been professing to be Christians for ten, or twenty, or thirty years, and who yet are mere weaklings, needing to be nursed and coddled with unceasing care? The seasons have come and gone, but no advancement have they made in the divine life. The path to perfection still stretches far away in the distance, and there is less time to climb to the shining summit where it leads.

Spiritual dwarfhood is an injustice to all concerned. The man who fails to grow is himself defrauded. The rich experiences of grace in waiting, he fails to reach and claim. He gropes in the dim twilight when he might walk in the luster of the full-born day. His heart is a battleground where good and evil forces contend for the mastery, when it should be a fortress with Satan shut out and Christ securely enthroned within. And by not going forward he subtracts from the glory of his future destiny and lessens his reward in eternity.

Nor is this all. But his failure to progress religiously also deprives God and humanity of that to which they are entitled. Having bought every disciple with a price, the Master has a right to claim for himself and the needy ones for whom he died the best service of which each is capable. Our powers belong to God, and if we fail to develop and use them, we shall be held responsible when we stand before him in the judgment. O the buried talents in the church to-day! They are infinitely richer than all of the treasures that lie hidden beneath the billows of the sea. There are hushed voices that might have prayed down from heaven a hundred times the Pentecostal fire; there are silent lips that might be preaching the gospel with the sevenfold thunders of apostolic power; there are hard and shrunken hearts that might be refreshing barren and desolate lives with the overflowing streams of divinely-implemented love; there are unused social gifts that might turn thousands of feet from the way that leads to destruction into the way that leads to glory and to God. To fail to make the utmost possible of ourselves and to give the whole of our capacity to the work of world redemption, is to fall short of duty. The greatest tragedy conceivable, next to the wreck of the soul itself, is to trifle away life with its golden opportunities. And it should ever be remembered that one must "be" in order "to do"; that the measure of our ability to bless and uplift our fellow men is our own spiritual stature and strength. Only the man who saves himself may hope to be influential in saving others.

BILL OF INJUNCTION FILED BY THE BISHOPS IN THE VANDERBILT CASE.

In the Chancery Court of Davidson County, Tenn.

XVII.

At that time there existed three vacancies in the Board of Trust—one occasioned by the death of Mr. Samuel J. Keith, on July 17, 1909; one by the death of Bishop Seth Ward, and one occasioned by the death of Mr. John B. Ransom—and to fill these vacancies the General Conference elected your relators, V. A. Godbey, of Austin, Texas; N. E. Harris, of Macon, Georgia; and Albert W. Biggs, of Memphis, Tennessee, and their election was duly certified to said Board. All the above parties accepted the election as made by the General Conference, and Messrs. Harris and Godbey in person presented their credentials of election, and at the same time presented the credentials of Mr. Biggs to the Board of Trust at its meeting in June 1910.

XVIII.

1. The Board of Trust at its meeting held on June 11 and 12, 1910, declined to receive said members so elected by the General Conference, and in lieu thereof attempted to elect the following members—to-wit: the defendants Claude Waller, of Nashville, Tennessee; Robert F. Jackson, of Nashville, Tennessee; and James A. Robins, of McKenzie, Tennessee.

2. Immediately upon said attempted election of said members, they and others of said Board of Trust rescinded the by-law adopted in 1898 and assented to by the General Conference in 1898, requiring the confirmation of all selections of members of the Board of Trust by the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the action of the Board of Trust being indicated by the following resolution:

"Whereas the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at its recent session at Asheville, North Carolina, selected three members to act as members of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University; and

"Whereas some of these gentlemen are now present presumably claiming membership in this Board; and

"Whereas it is the duty of the Board itself to determine the question as to the rights of these gentlemen to sit as members; therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Chair appoint a committee of seven to investigate the subject and make its report to-morrow morning at 9:30 o'clock, with recommendations as to the proper mode of procedure."

3. The committee appointed in pursuance of the above resolution made the following report:

"Your committee assembled heard full statements from Messrs. N. E. Harris and V. A. Godbey, and gave a careful consideration to the whole subject. The majority of the committee now report as follows:

"We are of the opinion that the General Conference acted without lawful authority when it undertook to elect members to fill vacancies existing on the Board of Trust.

"We are further of the opinion that it is the duty of the present members of this board by election to fill all vacancies thereon which may now exist, or which are about to occur by the expiration of terms of service; and that the parties so elected, upon acceptance, will thereupon become members of the board without more. We therefore recommend:

"(1) That the by-laws of 1906 concerning the mode of election of trustees and their confirmation be amended so that it shall read as follows:

"All vacancies on the Board of Trust shall be filled by the election of the board. The term of members shall be for eight years, unless sooner removed for cause; but all members shall serve until their successors are elected.

"(2) That the board proceed to elect members to fill the vacancies now existing, and also those which are about to occur by the expiration of the terms of office. Respectfully submitted,

Signed by W. T. Sanders, chairman; W. L. Moose, secretary; Elliott H. Jones, J. C. McReynolds, Chas. N. Burch, W. C. Ratcliffe.

The above was adopted by a rising vote of 19 to 8.

4. In accordance with said action so taken, the said defendants Claude Waller, Robert F. Jackson, and James A. Robins are undertaking to act as and claiming to be members of the Board of Trust of the defendant Vanderbilt University; but, as your relators are informed, their claim is without legal right.

5. In addition to attempting to elect the above members of the Board of Trust, the said Board proceeded also to attempt to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Bishop A. W. Wilson by the election of Bishop W. B. Murrah; and added also to the Board of Trust by the attempted election of Bishop W. R. Lambuth; and relators aver that the said W. B. Murrah and W. R. Lambuth denied the right of said Board of Trust to elect them as members, and have declined to serve as such, and have communicated their said declination to serve to said Board of Trust.

6. The action of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, as above set out was taken by a vote of 19 to 8, and relators aver that the following members of the Board of Trust voted in the affirmative upon said action—to-wit: Bishop E. R. Hendrix, Mr. Allen R. Carter, Judge W. C. Ratcliffe, Mr. Samuel Cripples, Mr. William L. Moose, Mr. W. T. Sanders, Prof. William Hughes, Chancellor J. H. Kirkland, Mr. W. R. Cole, Mr. G. M. Neely, Rev. G. B. Winton, D.D., Hon. Charles N. Burch, Mr. Robert F. Maddux, Rev. C. W. Byrd, D.D., Mr. James C. McReynolds, Mr. Eugene J. Buffington, Mr. Nathaniel Baxter, Col. G. W. Martin, and Mr. Elliott H. Jones. While the following voted "No": Bishop A. W. Wilson, Mr. John R. Pepper, Maj. R. W. Millsaps, Rev. E. B. Chappell, D.D., Rev. W. J. Young, D.D., Rev. R. W. Browder, Rev. W. D. Bradfield, D.D., and Rev. J. H. Dye, D.D.

XIX.

1. In addition to the action as above set out, the Board of Trust at its meeting in Nashville in June, 1910, voted to table the following resolution:

"The right of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to appoint the trustees of this university being denied by this Board of Trustees, great unrest is likely to follow to the damage of the university and the Church. To allay as much as possible this unrest and to guard as far as possible the interests of the university, this Board hereby declares the trust it holds is a trust for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and that Vanderbilt University belongs to said Church."

XX.

After the foregoing action was taken by a majority of the Board of Trust, the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met at Nashville, Tennessee, on the 12th day of July, 1910, meeting as visitors of the University. At that meeting all of the members of the College of Bishops were present except Bishops Kilgo and Lambuth; and considering the action of the Board of Trust in declining to recognize the trustees as elected by the General Conference, and their further action in proceeding to elect members of the Board of Trust without reference to, and independent of, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and of its General Conference, and in tabling the resolutions set out in the preceding paragraph, as a departure by the Board of Trust from the charter, the fundamental law of the University, the said visitors so determined and adopted the following resolution, to-wit:

"In view of the action of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University in refusing to allow three trustees elected by the General Conference to take their seats in the Board, and in view of the further action of said Board in assuming to fill the vacancies in the Board without confirmation by the Board of Education, as ordered by the General Conference; therefore, be it resolved:

"1. That the General Conference has the legal right to elect the trustees of the Vanderbilt University or to determine how they shall be chosen;

"2. That trustees duly elected by the General Conference are entitled to their seats in the Board;

"3. That the eight persons whom the Board of Trust assumed to elect to membership in the Board at its meeting in June last, not having been chosen as the General Conference directed, are not trustees, and cannot lawfully exercise the functions of trustees;

"4. That as the Board of Trust assumed to put into the membership of the Board eight persons who are not legally elected trustees, the Board of Trust as thus constituted is not a lawfully constituted body, and its attempted control and direction of the affairs of the university brings into that body an alien influence, inconsistent with the lawful discharge of the duties of the Board.

"Therefore, the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, acting as a Board of Visitors and as representatives of the General Conference of the Church, refuse to approve the action of the Board of Trustees, and declare it null and void."

XXI.

Relators, the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, now charge that the acts of a majority of the Board of Trust as above set out are ultra vires the power of said Board, and contrary, as they are advised, to the charter and fundamental law of the corporation. They charge that by its action as aforesaid the Board has violated its trust and repudiated the right of the patronizing Conferences as the first members of the corporation, and the right of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as represented by its General Conference, as their successor, and has attempted to set itself up as above the charter and the law. They charge that the Board in assuming the authority to elect its own successors has usurped the right of the General Conference as the member of said corporation, and has assumed the said membership to be in the present trustees, who are now claiming that they are a self-perpetuating body. That by said action in asserting its right to self-perpetuation it has attempted to sever all bonds connecting it with the Church. As visitors, relators declare that the aforesaid action upon the part of the Board of Trust is illegal and that they have so adjudged and declared.

XXII.

1. Relators Harris, Godbey, and Biggs state unto Your Honor that by virtue of the action of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held at Asheville, North Carolina, in May, 1910, they were elected as members of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University; that they accepted the said election; that the defendants, a majority of the Board of Trust hereinafter named, by their said action, taken at Nashville, Tennessee, on the 11th and 12th days of June, 1910, in declining to accept their credentials and permit them to act as members of said Board of Trust illegally deprived your relators, who were vested with the title to said office, from exercising the duties thereof, and thus deprived them of the honors and emoluments of the said office, contrary to the fundamental law of the institution, the statutes of Tennessee, and equity and good conscience.

2. Relators further show that the defendants Waller, Jackson, and Robins are now usurping the offices to which these relators were elected, and these relators by the usurpation of the aforesaid defendants, who, contrary to law and good conscience are usurping the said offices, are deprived of the honors and emoluments of the same to their very great injury and damage.

XXIII.

1. That Vanderbilt University, as appears from the foregoing, was established by and is being maintained and patronized by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as hereinbefore set out, the General Conference of which is the general legislative body of said Church, and that the Church at large is now maintaining and patronizing the said Vanderbilt University, and the General Conference, as the representative governing body of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by virtue of being the member of said corporation, as well as by virtue of the fact that the said Vanderbilt University was established by and is now being maintained and patronized by the said Church, has the power and authority at its option to elect the Board of Trustees and to fill vacancies thereon; and the said General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as such governing body of said Church, did, as herein set out, at its meeting at Asheville, North Carolina, in May, 1910, determine to add and elect the relators Harris, Godbey, and Biggs to fill the vacancies occurring in said Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University by the death of Samuel J. Keith, Bishop Seth Ward, and John B. Ransom.

2. Your relators further state that large sums of money have been donated by Methodists to Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and to Vanderbilt University, because said university was established by and has been maintained by said Church. Among others being the following:

(a) Citizens of Nashville, most of whom were Methodists, in a meeting gotten up by Methodists raised the first money, amounting to about $27,000, which was used to purchase the grounds upon which the university buildings were built and upon which they now stand.

(b) The financial agents of Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, made canvasses of all the patronizing Conferences, visited, and delivered addresses at several of the Annual Conferences of each of said patronizing Conferences, and at most of them received liberal contributions to the university enterprise.

(c) That contributions, as relators are informed, represented by notes amounting to over $100,000, were obtained to Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Practically all of these notes were obtained from Methodists.

(d) The donation made by Commodore Vanderbilt was obtained through the influence of Bishop McTyeire and his wife, Mrs. McTyeire, likewise a Methodist. Mrs. McTyeire was a relative of Mrs. Vanderbilt, a Methodist, and through the combined influence of Bishop and Mrs. McTyeire the interest of Commodore Vanderbilt in the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was enlisted, which, as above stated, resulted in his first donation of $500,000. This was subsequently increased, through Bishop McTyeire's influence, to $600,000.

(e) After the name of the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was changed to Vanderbilt University, two Methodists, Dr. R. A. Young and Dr. A. L. P. Green, continued to act as the Financial Agents of the university, visiting the various Annual Conferences and interesting Methodists throughout the Southern Church in the university, asking and receiving donations from them to Vanderbilt University upon the ground that it was a Methodist university and was the property of and controlled by the several Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

When Dr. Green died, Dr. Young continued as such Financial Agent of Vanderbilt University and continued prosecuting his campaign for funds among Methodists for this Methodist institution.

(l) In 1898 to 1901 the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the various Annual Conferences of that Church originated and carried out a plan for collecting subscriptions to the educational funds of the Church. This plan permitted donors to the fund to direct their gifts to whatsoever educational cause they desired. But in the absence of specific designation, Vanderbilt University was to receive twenty per cent of all sums raised. This twentieth century fund movement was purely a Methodist movement, and resulted in turning over to Vanderbilt University more than $25,000.

(g) Mrs. Sarah Atkinson, of Memphis, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, bequeathed property to Vanderbilt University amounting to $44,290.

(h) Mrs. Mary H. Furman, a member of McKendree Church, Methodist Episcopal, South, of Nashville, Tennessee, bequeathed property to the university which amounted to about $85,000, the sum being invested in Furman Hall, one of the handsomest buildings upon the university campus.

(i) Donation to library by Bishop Tigert's estate, $5,000.

(j) By Mrs. E. W. Nicholson, $15,000.

(k) Former students of the Biblical Department for special chair, $20,000.

(l) In 1905, when the main building of the university was destroyed by fire, a movement was made, largely promoted by Methodists, to raise a fund to restore the building. A public meeting was held in the city of Nashville, at which a Methodist presided, and at which about $30,000 was raised for the university. Some of this was given by persons not Methodists, but the most of it was by members of that Church.

(m) Many other liberal donations were made by Methodists, among them Col. and Mrs. E. W. Cole, over $19,000; Samuel Cripples, over $21,000; R. W. Millsaps, $1,000; J. G. Carter Scholarship, $1,500; W. F. Taylor Scholarship, $1,000; Elliston Scholarship, $1,740; Owen Medal Endowment, $500; Dempsey Weaver Donation, $6,350; Jacob Henry, $5,000; R. T. Moore Annuity, $1,500; W. D. Scott, $10,250; Mrs. Sarah Seabury, $1,337; Mrs. I. J. Edwards, $555; Martha Boddie, $2,500; W. M. Cartmell, $11,018; and others.

(n) The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1906 ordered a collection to be taken annually for the aid of Sunday schools and the advancement of Christian education, and provided that a certain portion of this collection be applied to the endowment of a Chair of Religious Pedagogy and Sunday Schools in the Vanderbilt University, same to be retained by the Treasurer of the General Sunday School Board until fifty thousand dollars are raised.

The collections upon this fund to October 25, 1910, amounted to seventeen thousand one hundred and forty-eight dollars and eighty-seven cents $17,148.87.)

3. The patronage of the university from its opening has been very largely from the Methodist families throughout the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

At nearly every session of the various original patronizing Conferences, and subsequently at the General Conferences, either through direct reports of representatives of the university made to the Conference, or by reports of the Board of Education of such Conferences made to the Conference, attention was called to Vanderbilt University. It was appointed by the Conferences and recommended to the patronage of its people. And in consequence of this, it has from the first been largely patronized by young men from Methodist families.

XXIV.

1. That the Board of Trust as now constituted has, by and through its President, Bishop E. R. Hendrix, and its Secretary, W. R. Cole, called a special meeting of said Board to meet in the parlors of Wesley Hall at the university, in the city of Nashville, Tennessee, on Tuesday, October 25, 1910, at 10 o'clock, a. m., said call being as follows:

"Secretary's Office, Vanderbilt University,
Nashville, Tenn., October 14, 1910.

"My Dear Sir: By order of the President, Bishop E. R. Hendrix, and with the concurrence of the Executive Committee, the Vanderbilt Board of Trust is hereby called to meet in Nashville, Tenn., Tuesday, October 25, 1910, in the parlors of Wesley Hall, at 10 a. m., for the purpose of considering and acting on the proposed affiliation of Vanderbilt University and the George Peabody College for Teachers, said affiliation comprising interchange of work and exchange or sale of real property, and for the consideration of such other matters as may be brought before the Board at said meeting.

"Yours very truly,
W. R. COLE,
Secretary Vanderbilt Board of Trust."

2. As will appear from the above call, it is the purpose of the Board of Trust not only to consider and to act upon a proposed affiliation of Vanderbilt University with the George Peabody College for Teachers, the exact proposal being unknown to your orators, but, as will appear from said call, it embraces not only the interchange of work between the said universities, but also the exchange or sale of real property belonging to the defendant Vanderbilt University, and for the consideration of such other matters as may be brought before said Board at the meeting.

3. Relators charge that the Board of Trust as at present constituted, as claimed by defendants, and to whom said notices were sent, is composed of members not regularly selected, and the said Board proposes to act without notice to and to exclude other members duly and regularly elected as such, and the purpose of said meeting of the Board thus illegally constituted is to sell or to exchange real property impressed with a trust for Vanderbilt University, organized by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as above set out, and now maintained by said Church, and to divert proceeds from the trust purposes impressed upon said property by the donors thereof, as well as by the charter and fundamental law of said corporation.

4. And relators are informed and believe that it is the purpose upon the part of said Board of Trust to remove the Theological Department of said university from its present location upon the campus, where it was established at the opening of said university, and to place the same at some other point or place in the city of Nashville distant from said university, and to convey to the George Peabody College for Teachers a valuable part of the campus now occupied by said university. And relators charge that this action upon the part of the Board of Trust, without the sanction of the College of Bishops as visitors, and without permitting members of said Board of Trust elected by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by and through its General Conference to act therein will do to them great and irreparable harm and injury, and great and irreparable harm, injury, and damage to the rights of relators, as well as to the rights of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and of the said Church in said university.

5. Relators Godbey, Harris, and Biggs aver and charge that they have received no notice of the proposed meeting at which steps fundamental in character and involving great changes in the management of the university are contemplated. That they are entitled, as members elected by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to notice of such meeting, and are entitled to act and participate therein; and that without notice to them of said meeting it is illegal under the by-laws of said university, and the holding of the same will be enjoined by this honorable Court.

6. Relators further charge that the defendants Waller, Jackson, and Robins have been given notice of said meeting, although they are not regularly members of said Board of Trust, and that the defendant members of the Board of Trust will admit said parties above named to said meeting and to the deliberations of said body, and that said defendants above named will participate in the said meetings and in its deliberations; while relators, duly and regularly elected by the governing authority of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will be excluded therefrom, to their great and irreparable harm, injury, and damage.

And relators are advised, and so charge, that the holding of said meeting will be enjoined, and that the defendants above named will be prevented by injunction from participating in said meeting and from acting as trustees therein.

7. Relators further charge that the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as well as the constituent Annual Conferences thereof, including the original patronizing Conferences, are by the action of the Board of Trust as aforesaid, and especially at the meeting which has been called for October 25, 1910, deprived of their rights of representation on said Board of Trust as in law they are entitled to. That the said meeting so called is illegal for the reasons hereinbefore stated, and that the attempted holding of the same will be enjoined, as well as the constituent Annual Conferences thereof, Board of Trust, pending the determination of the present controversy, to sell, transfer, or convey any of the real estate of said corporation to some other corporation, will be enjoined.

8. Relators aver that all of said campus is needed and necessary for the proper use of said university and for the maintenance of its buildings and equipment, and that no part of the same can with justice to said university, be sold, transferred or exchanged; and that the attempt to sell the property of said university and transfer the same, without the consent of the members of the said corporation, to wit, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, or to exchange the same for other real estate without the consent of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by and through its General Conference, is illegal and the same should be enjoined.

9. Relators aver that unless by injunction this honorable Court should prevent the carrying out of the purpose as expressed in the above call, the said

Board of Trust will, as relators are informed and believe, sell, transfer, and convey a portion of said campus to some other corporation, and this will divert corporate property from the purposes for which it was donated and will be a violation of the express trust impressed upon said property by the charter of said corporation, as well as by the conditions annexed to the various donations.

10. Consideration of the Premises, complainant prays:

1. That the parties named in the caption of this bill as defendants be made such by the issuance and service of copy and process as to the resident defendants, and by publication as to the non-resident defendants, upon whom service of process is not had.

2. To the end that all defendants may be required to appear and answer this bill, but not on oath, answer on oath being expressly waived.

3. That it be adjudged and decreed that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by and through its General Conference, is entitled as a member of Vanderbilt University to select, nominate, or confirm, either by itself or through its General Board of Education, members of the Board of Trust of said university; that it be adjudged and decreed that Vanderbilt University was established by the patronizing Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as alleged in the bill, and that it is being maintained and patronized by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and by the General Conference thereof; and that the General Conference as the representative governing body of the said Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has the power and authority and has exercised the option to elect and provide for the election of the members of the Board of Trust and to fill vacancies therein.

4. That the action of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at its meeting in Asheville, North Carolina, in May, 1910, in selecting relators Harris, Godbey, and Biggs as members of the Board of Trust to fill the vacancies then existing upon said Board was a proper exercise of the power and authority of said General Conference as the governing body of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and also as the successor of the patronizing Conferences as the member of said corporation.

5. That by virtue of the action of the General Conference relators became members of said Board of Trust to fill the vacancies therein existing.

6. That the action of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University as taken on the 11th and 12th of June, 1910, as set out in the bill, in refusing to recognize the above-named relators as members of the Board of Trust, was illegal and contrary to the fundamental law of the corporation and ultra vires the authority of the Board of Trust.

7. That their action in attempting to elect members of the Board of Trust in the place of the above-named relators, and in rescinding the by-law requiring the members of the Board of Trust to be confirmed by the General Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in attempting to fill vacancies upon the Board, and to elect members of the Board without confirmation of the General Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was illegal and an attempted usurpation of the rights of the said Board of Trust.

8. That the attempted election by said Board of Trust, and its members, at the said meeting above referred to was, for the reasons set forth in the bill, illegal and conferred no right or authority upon the persons so elected; and that they acquired, by virtue of said election, no right to act as said trustees.

9. That it be further adjudged and decreed that the parties named to-wit, Waller, Jackson, and Robins—be adjudged to have no right or title to said office, and judgment be entered excluding them from the same; and that the relators Harris, Godbey, and Biggs be adjudged to be entitled to exercise the office of members of the Board of Trust in the place of and to fill the vacancies caused by the death of Mr. Samuel J. Keith, Bishop Seth Ward, and Mr. John B. Ransom.

10. That a writ of injunction issue enjoining the defendant Board of Trust from holding or attempting to hold any special or regular meeting of said Board without notice to the relators Harris, Godbey, and Biggs, and without permitting the said relators to participate in said meetings; also

11. That an injunction issue enjoining defendants Waller, Jackson, and Robins from meeting with said Board of Trust or exercising the duties and privileges as members thereof; also

12. That the defendant Board of Trust be enjoined from selling, transferring, or disposing of, or exchanging to George Peabody College for Teachers any part of the real property belonging to the defendant Vanderbilt University.

13. That such other further and general relief be granted as the facts of the case may demand and as to equity and good conscience belong.

This is the first application for issuance of writs of injunction and other extraordinary process.

CHARLES WESLEY CHAMBERS.

Charles Wesley Chambers, octogenarian, died in Baton Rouge, La., December 6, 1910, having been born in Ryde, Isle of Wight, England, September 26, 1830. He was married to Miss Louisa Pallant, in New Church, Isle of Wight, England, April 13, 1852. Soon after their marriage they came to New York City, and thence to Philadelphia, thence to New Jersey, and from there to Baton Rouge, La., where both of them finished their lives. Mrs. Louisa Pallant Chambers dying in this city September 11, 1880. Of this marriage two sons and two daughters survive Brother Chambers, with several grand children, and great grandchildren; and one son deceased, the late Rev. John Wesley Chambers, who died at Ellisville, Miss., April 11, 1908, and who was an honored member of the Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and besides serving with distinction in the pastorate was for several years president of the Whitworth Female College. One grandson, Rev. John C. Chambers, is now a member of the Mississippi Conference.

On November 21, 1881, Brother Chambers was married to Mrs. Josephine Allen, who died May 10, 1902.

Brother Chambers received what was in his day a good elementary education and on coming to Baton Rouge, La., engaged in foundry work and general blacksmithing, keeping up the latter occupation until a few months before his death. In his private life he was one of the purest of men, never in his long life having a single aspersion cast upon his character. He was honored several times by his fellow citizens with the holding of office, having served on the city council and as a director of the school board, always serving the public with zeal and fidelity.

He was life-long Methodist. At first a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in England, and on arrival in Baton Rouge, cast in his lot with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was a true Christian and adorned the teachings of the Master to the end of his life. He was faithful in church attendance, scarcely ever missing a service, especially the morning service. The writer noted his faithful attendance upon the communion services the first Sunday in each month for a number of years.

He was also an ardent member of the Odd Fellows Lodge, and in the absence of his pastor, the writer, together with the members of that order, performed the last rites over his remains, from his residence and the church he loved so well, to the beautiful Magnolia Cemetery in Baton Rouge, where he sleeps as a beloved father in Israel, awaiting the last call of the resurrection morning.

"Servant of God, well done;
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the vict'ry won,
Enter thy Master's joy!"

H. S. JOHNS.

GRENADA COLLEGE.

Dear Dr. Meek: Grenada College is just closing a most prosperous and profitable half-session. Our highest compliment is that notwithstanding many students took their trunks home when leaving for the holidays, they have come back. But one girl dropped out, and she left to resume a position she had held before entering school to make money to finish her education.

The opening of the second term is an especially good time for those to enter who could not come at the beginning of the session, and I shall be glad to correspond with any persons interested.

Fraternally, J. R. COUNTISS, President.

It is small comfort to the citizens of the United States to know that the prices of food in Panama are lower than here. ## Church News

A Protestant Ministers' Association was organized a few days since at Vicksburg, Miss.

The Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church will hold its annual meeting in Chicago on February 8.

A dispatch to the Memphis News Scimitar states that Bishop Hoss preached an able sermon at Conway, Ark., on Sunday, January 15th, and raised $3,000 for Hendrix College.

Mr. T. G. Selby, one of the best known Wesleyan ministers in Great Britain, died recently in the 65th year of his age. Many of his sermons have been published, and widely read on both sides of the Atlantic.

The Texas Christian Advocate reports that Bishop Mouzon preached a great sermon at Travis Park Church, San Antonio, on the first Sunday of the New Year. His text was, "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual."

It is said that over 200,000 copies of "The Pilgrim's Progress" have been sold in England by the Religious Tract Society within the past two years. Thus does Bunyan continue to speak through the printed page, though his voice has long been hushed.

Dr. J. E. Harrison, of the San Antonio Female College, has an interesting lecture on "The Klu Klux As I Knew Them." He will deliver it at a number of places during the months of January, February and March in the interest of the Epworth Encampment at Corpus Christi.

Bishop McCoy attended the Birmingham Preachers' Meeting on Monday, the 16th inst., and delivered a forceful exhortation in behalf of the movement to endow Birmingham College. Wide awake to all of the interests of the Church is this brilliant young chief pastor.

After having been connected with the Aberdeen University, Scotland, for a quarter of a century, Sir W. M. Ramsay has resigned his chair. According to report, the state of his health and a desire to devote more time to archaeological research influenced him to take this action.

The Presbyterian Hospital of New York City has recently received two gifts aggregating $1,600,000. Three hundred thousand of this was given by Mr. Edward F. Harkness; the name of the other donor has not been disclosed. This hospital is closely affiliated with Columbia University.

Bishop Key occupied the pulpit of the Fort Worth College Church on Sunday January 8, and delighted the large throng assembled to hear his message. He is reported to be in excellent health, and quite cheerful and happy. He is held in the highest honor and esteem throughout the Lone Star State.

Bishop Atkins, who was en route to Austin, Texas, spent Sabbath before last (the 15th) in Memphis, being a guest of that prince of Methodist laymen, Mr. J. R. Pepper. The Bishop occupied the pulpit of the First Methodist Church at 11 o'clock, and delivered an impressive discourse to a large audience.

Messrs. Chapman and Alexander are now conducting a meeting in Toronto, Canada. Simultaneous services are being held in twelve centres throughout the city, and the speakers are commanding large audiences. The Christian Guardian thinks the revival has begun well and that the outlook for a great work of grace is encouraging.

William J. Bryan delivered two eloquent and stirring addresses at Travis Park Church, San Antonio, on January 1. His theme at 3:30 in the afternoon was "The Prince of Peace," and at the evening hour his subject was "Christianity Compared with Other Religions." The audiences that assembled to hear the great orator overflowed the spacious building.

The Montgomery Advertiser, of which Mr. D. R. Barbee is the capable editor, states that good progress is being made in establishing the Methodist Chautauqua authorized by the last General Conference. One thousand acres of land have been purchased near Waynesville, N. C., and plans have been formulated to develop the property, which is admirably located in every respect. The incorporators of the Assembly have elected the following officers: president, Bishop James Atkins; vice-president, John R. Pepper, Memphis, Tenn.; secretary, S. C. Satterthwait, Waynesville, N. C.; treasurer, B. J. Sloan, Waynesville; general superintendent, Dr.

James Cannon, Blackstone, Va.; superintendent of Bible conference, Dr. W. F. Tillett, Vanderbilt University; superintendent evangelistic work, Dr. George R. Stuart, Cleveland, Tenn.; superintendent missionary training school, Rev. J. E. McCulloch, Nashville, Tenn.

Misses Watkins of Mississippi and Siler of Georgia sailed from San Francisco, the former for China, the latter for Japan, Monday, the 9th inst., on the good ship Mongolia. They were to sail Saturday, as announced in the Advocate of last week, but the Mongolia did not sail till the 9th. Charming spirits they are. They worshipped at Berkeley Sunday morning, and cheered and enlivened the home of the editor by their presence at our Sunday dinner. May bon voyage be theirs crossing the high seas to their far-off post of duty, whither they go with a glad heart and willing mind.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

It is said that a series of missionary expositions will be held in cities of the United States within the next twelve months. The first is scheduled for Boston in the month of April, and according to Mr. Henry Wade Hicks, one will likely be held in Nashville some time during the year. The purpose of them is to awaken an interest by presenting an object lesson showing the true situation in pagan lands. Oriental villages and streets, quaint huts and houses, and the natives themselves will form a large part of these exhibitions. They have been a great stimulus to missions in Europe, and will probably awaken a renewed interest in them throughout the cities of America where they are held.

The sub-committee of the Commission appointed to consider the question of the relation of the two Episcopal Methodisms and the Methodist Protestant Church in the United States, met in Chattanooga on January 18. The results of their deliberations were not made public. The following are the representatives of the three denominations on this committee: Bishop Cranston, of Washington, D. C.; Bishop Walden and Dr. R. T. Miller, of Cincinnati, representing the Methodist Episcopal Church; Bishop E. E. Hoss, of Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. F. M. Thomas, of Louisville; and Judge M. L. Walton, of Woodstock, Va., of the Methodist Church, South, and President T. H. Lewis, of Westminster, Md.; Dr. M. L. Jennings, of Pittsburg, and F. L. Harris, of Henderson, N. C., of the Protestant Methodist Church.

The Educational Commission of the Texas Conferences held an interesting meeting at Austin last week. This Commission is composed of four representatives from each of the Annual Conferences of that commonwealth, except the German Mission which had adjourned before the movement to constitute such a body had been started, but which is expected to name its representatives later. There are now twenty members of the Commission, and it has been vested with power to formulate and put into effect such plans as it may deem wise to strengthen our educational forces in the State, and to relate properly to one another the several institutions of learning under the control of the Church. What conclusions were reached by the Commission, we are not informed at this writing. Both Bishop Atkins and Bishop Murrah attended the meeting of the Commissioners.

To Mr. George C. Tenney, the secretary of the gathering, we are indebted for the following information: "The recent Medical Missionary Conference held at the Sanitarium in Battle Creek, Mich., was brought to a close on the 8th of January, and was universally pronounced the most successful meeting of the kind yet held. One hundred and fifty missionaries, representing nearly all the missionary boards and secretaries, and practically the entire mission field, were present. Fully two-thirds of the members were medical men and women. The session was presided over by Rev. Chas. C. Creagan, D.D., for many years district secretary on the American Board, now president of Fargo College. The vice-presidents were Bishop J. M. Thoburn, Robt. M. Nassau, M.D., D.D., and Chas. E. Stewart, M.D. The schedule included many missionary doctors of note in their respective fields, among them being Doctors Wanless, Scudder, Mary Noble, and Smith of India; Tucker, Mrs. Marian Headland, Whitney, and Lowry of China; Shepard of Turkey; and Nassau and Thompson of Africa. The next Conference was appointed for the same place and time next year."

IN MEMORIAM.

Mother and Son.

TILGHMAN NEELY died June 12, 1910, aged twenty-five years. He had been expressman on the I. C. R. R. from seventeen years of age till death. He was express inspector a number of years. He was known by railroad men as "the Christian young man."

The shafts of temptation, even when Satan's emissaries in the form of beautiful women wielded them, fell powerless against the armor in which he always seemed to be encased. He said there was far more Christianity among railroad men than the world gave them credit for. That he had seen engineers kneel at their engines and pray before starting on a perilous trip. Could this be said of all our public men, all railroad officials, all politicians, all doctors, all lawyers, all statesmen, all teachers, even all preachers, all editors, that they never undertake a responsibility without first sincerely seeking guidance from above, what a hastening of the millennium there would be!

Tilghman's life, so pure, so gentle, so Joseph and Daniel-like, so faithful to every duty, must have been to his companions an irresistible example whose influence, eternity alone can tell.

He was the personification of gentlemanliness, of loving unselfishness, of sweet consideration for others. Nothing little or mean in his nature. The only child of loving parents, but not in the least spoiled by the wealth of love lavished upon him by his parents, relatives and friends. Earth misses him, but heaven is richer.

His broken-hearted mother, Lula Tilghman Neely, followed him to her eternal home, December 8, 1910, not quite six months after her son went. She had spent fifty years on earth.

She and her twin sister were left fatherless by our cruel Civil War. Their widowed mother moved to Blue Mountain, Miss., when these girls, her only earthly treasure, were fifteen years old. The mother and orphans struggled against all the odds that that war left for its helpless poor. But the mother was blessed in having two daughters who developed into perfectly noble womanhood. Lula married B. H. Neely of Holly Springs, Miss., in 1884. Her married life was a happy one. When she left this world her neighbors said one of their very best women had gone, one who did more good, helped more who needed her than the world would ever know of. The beggar was never turned from the door unfed. The widow and orphan were often supplied from her larder and garden. Her friends found around her fireside, a cheer, a hospitality, a hallowed peace, that the world in this rushing age is too much a stranger to. Her physicians and her pastors were very dear friends to her. In a word, genuine love—"the greatest thing in the world"—ruled and guided her. She never failed to minister to even the negroes about her when it was in her power to do so. Not in material things alone, would she help them, but she would let them know she was interested in their spiritual welfare and would plead with them to love and serve the Savior, who had died for them. Some of the most touching scenes of her's and Tilghman's last illness were in the manifestations of grief from negroes who loved them, because of the blessing they had been to them.

In her last illness she spoke often of going to her darling boy. Death had no terrors for her. On the contrary, she would become shouting happy, sometimes, in talking of it. She seemed to have direct answers to prayers for comfort while on her death bed, one especially for which she was so grateful. She had begged the Lord to give her a vision of Tilghman in heaven. This was granted her in all of its satisfying power a few days before her departure.

To the grief-stricken husband and father, to the twin sister and aunt, and to all who mourn their loss, we would say, "How sweet to die such deaths as these. Heaven comes down such souls to greet, and takes them to be forever blessed."

"Two less at home!

A sense of loss that meets us at the gate;
Within, two places unfilled and desolate;
And far away, our coming to wait.

Two more in heaven.

Two more at home!

That home where separation cannot be;
That home whence none is missed eternally!
Lord Jesus grant us all a place with thee,
At home in heaven."

One who loved them, MAGGIE TATE.

SEMICENTENIAL REMINISCENCES.

Read before the North Mississippi Conference Historical Society in session at Sardis, Miss., Nov. 29, 1910, by Rev. G. W. Bachman.

It is with heartfelt appreciation of the privilege that I appear on this occasion by request of those in authority to give some reminiscences of fifty years in the itinerant ministry of our great Church.

This I do not for vain glory, but in the name and to the praise of our Lord Jesus Christ who called me by His Spirit in early life to this gospel ministry, and who hath during all these years sustained and blessed me in fulfilling the divine commission. It is not my purpose to attempt anything like a full narrative of the life work of a half century, but to note a few events and observations that may be of some interest to the present generation and of use to the future historian of the Church.

I was licensed to preach March 31, 1860, by a Quarterly Conference held at Pittsburg, for Calhoun Circuit, Grenada District, with John Moss presiding elder and Elias Carter, preacher in charge.

This was a large circuit, as most of them were in those days. It embraced all of Calhoun county south of Loosascoona river, with fourteen churches, 540 members, and seven local preachers. With preaching at each church once in four weeks, one-half or more of them were served on week days.

I was admitted on trial into the traveling connection by the Memphis Conference—which then included a large portion of North Mississippi—held at Aberdeen, November 7 to 13, 1860, Bishop George F. Pierce presiding.

There were seventeen in the class admitted, only four of whom I know to be yet living, viz.: R. H. Mahon of the Memphis Conference, Isham L. Burrow, superannuate in the Arkansas Conference and J. W. Poston and myself of this Conference. Of 164 preachers then connected with the Conference I know of but sixteen who are now living, three of whom are in active service.

This, my first Conference, will ever be specially memorable in my mind for several reasons. It was there that I first saw a Bishop, and many of the distinguished preachers of whom I had heard and read much. Bishop Pierce was in the prime of life, and being a man of fine physique, graceful manner, eloquent speech and mental ability, he was attractive and forceful, both in the chair and in the pulpit. His sermon on Sunday morning from the text, "And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us (and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth," (St. John 1:14), was grand in delivery and powerful in effect. Of visiting connectional men Dr. J. B. McFerrin, book agent, was most prominent as a man of affairs and speaker. He had a reputation as the "money raiser" of the Church, and when present where a collection was to be taken, he was generally put forward in the business.

Of recognized leaders in the Conference there were Thomas L. Boswell, father of our Dr. Boswell; Joseph H. Brooks, father of our Joseph J. Brooks; John Moss, father of our Charles P. Moss; Michael J. Blackwell, William McMahon, Gullford Jones, Geo. W. D. Harris and others who are as worthy of mention, but of whom we have not now time to speak. These were representative men, great preachers, wise counselors and safe leaders in the Church of their day. May the sons upon whom their fathers' mantles have fallen, evermore wear them worthily, and may their generations never cease!

A notable feature of this Conference was its executive sessions. Then the law for the examination of the character of preachers required that "none be present except members of the Conference, and others who may be in attendance on Conference business, unless the Conference by vote shall order otherwise."

And when charges were preferred against a preacher, the trial was before the whole Conference and not by a committee as now.

So, according to rule, much of the time was given to executive proceedings, there being three preachers on trial under charges.

The routine business of an Annual Conference was not near as much then as now; the disciplinary questions were fewer by more than one-half. There were but few boards or committees, hence most of the business was considered in detail by the body as a whole. This was a tedious process, consuming as much or more time than is now required to transact probably three times the amount of business.

My first appointment was to Lagrange Circuit as junior preacher, with James N. Temple, preacher in charge. We were in the Somerville District, with Lorenzo D. Mullins as presiding elder. Our territory was about forty miles in length and thirty miles in width, embracing the western half of Hardeman and eastern portions of Fayette and Haywood counties in West Tennessee.

We had sixteen churches, including three railroad towns, viz.: Grand Junction, Saulsbury and Middleburg; and two interior villages, viz.: New Castle and Whiteville. It was what was known as a four weeks' circuit. We preached alternately at each church every two weeks, each one making his round in four weeks. Of course, many of our appointments had to be filled on week days, but they were usually well attended and with good interest. We often held class meeting following the sermon, which generally proved to be of great spiritual benefit to both preachers and people in binding more strongly the ties of Christian love and fellowship. It is a fact to be deplored by the people called Methodist that the class meeting is scarcely known among us now, and that the old-fashioned love feast is fast passing out. "Give me the old time religion, it is good enough for me."

In that day many of the circuits were large and had two preachers—one of them usually being a young and single man. An unordained preacher was seldom placed in charge of a work except as an assistant. This was a wise plan that in most cases proved best for both preacher and the work, and might yet be at times used to good advantage.

While there was no specific law against a young preacher marrying, yet he was not expected to marry until he completed the course of study and received elder's orders, and to do so would subject him to censure and sometimes to discontinuance or location. Men already married and with families were occasionally admitted into the Conference, but such cases were rare.

The support of the ministry, including Bishops, connectional officers, presiding elders, pastors, supernumeraries and superannuates all alike was fixed by law as follows: "The allowance of the preachers respectively shall be only $150 for a single man; $300 for a married man; for preacher's children under seven years of age, $25; for children of seven and under sixteen years of age, $40. The amount estimated over and above the foregoing allowances shall be for family and traveling expenses."

I received for this, my first year's service, $105; this being my pro rata of money raised on the circuit for the support of the ministry. My second appointment was Concordia Circuit, Mississippi Bottom District, William McMahon, presiding elder. J. C. Lowe was sent with me as assistant preacher, but early in the year he accepted a chaplaincy in the Confederate army and left me alone on the work. The principal churches were Concordia (now Gunnison), Holmes Lake (now Shelby), Australia, and Brown's Chapel, for the white people. We preached also on many plantations for the negro slaves. The next year, 1863, I served Friar's Point Circuit, which embraced the territory from the Mississippi river east to Coldwater river and south of the Yazoo Pass to Mount Moriah Church, now Clarksdale, also down the river below Friar's Point, twenty miles to Robson's Landing.

The two following years, 1864-65, my charge was Richland Circuit, which extended from Cherry Hill Church, along Hobson and Cassada Bayous and Tallahatchie river to where Minter City is now located.

In the three charges thus named, there were ten churches for the white people, with 210 members. In the same territory there are now eleven pastoral charges, thirty-three churches and 1234 members. In all the region then known as "the swamp" and "the bottoms," now as "the delta," the settlements were sparse, chiefly large plantations located along the water courses and on the lakes and worked by negro slaves, to whom much attention was given in our ministry. The greater part of the country was a wilderness, inhabited alone by game and ferocious animals and scarcely ever penetrated by man, except for hunting or fishing. Roads were few and poorly kept and during the winter season almost impassable in many places. Hence the mode of travel was mainly on horseback. Overflows were frequent, when water-crafts had to be used.

Because of the prevalent malaria, together with the isolation and privations peculiar to the country, it was considered as perilous and a great hardship for a preacher to go there in those days. Therefore it usually fell to the lot of young men, or those without families, to go to that field, and not often did one remain longer than one or two years. I think I was the second preacher that remained four years, Brother A. P. Sage being the first.

These first five years of my ministry embraced the war period, when the whole country was in a state of confusion and distress, consequent upon the carnage and disasters of the cruel and bitter strife between the two sections,—North and South—of the United States.

In this conflict the Church lost greatly in property and membership. Many of the preachers went into the army, most of them as chaplains, but some as soldiers. But enough of us stayed with our charges to care for the souls left at home, and to keep the work somewhat in order.

After the close of the war much had to be done to reorganize, readjust and strengthen the things that remained of the Church and to build up the waste places of our Zion. In this difficult and trying work, I endeavored to do my part while serving Charleston, Harmony (now Longtown), Rock Spring and Purdy charges, the two latter being in West Tennessee. While I was on the last named circuit in 1870, the General Conference formed the North Mississippi Conference of territory taken from the Memphis, Mississippi and Mobile Conferences.

Though my charge was in the Memphis Conference, I chose to adhere to the new one to which I immediately transferred.

The first session of the North Mississippi Conference convened at Water Valley, November 30, 1870, with Bishop D. S. Doggett presiding. Rev. John Barcroft was elected secretary, in which capacity he served well and worthily until his death in 1890.

Of the 124 preachers—including twenty-one on trial—which composed that body, thirty-one are known to be yet living, fourteen of whom are now members of this Conference, twelve of other Conferences, and five are local.

Of the thirty lay members, three are now living, viz.: J. B. Streater, F. A. Howell and Rev. W. H. Eagles.

Then there were nine districts, ninety-three pastoral charges, 190 local preachers, 21,757 members. Now we have eight districts, 161 pastoral charges, 177 traveling preachers, 95 local preachers, 54,292 members.

Fifty years ago there were in our connection twenty-four Annual Conferences, six Bishops, 2784 traveling preachers, 5353 local preachers, 457,598 members, besides 171,557 colored members. Now there are forty-seven Conferences, fifteen Bishops (14 others have been elected that have died), 7618 traveling preachers, 4952 local preachers, 1,834,972 members.

I rejoice to have lived in this, as yet, the best period of the world's history; to have witnessed the marvelous achievements of Christianity, and the wonderful growth and prosperity of our own great Church, and to have had some part in the same.

To God be all the praise and dominion and power and glory for evermore. Amen.

"Jesus the name high over all,
In hell or earth or sky,
Angels and men before it fall,
And devils fear and fly.

His only righteousness I show,
His saving truth proclaim;
Tis all my business here below,
To cry 'Behold the Lamb.'

Happy, if with my latest breath,
I may but gasp His name;
Preach Him to all and cry in death
'Behold, behold the Lamb.'

BOB'S GIVE-AWAY DAY.

By Emma F. Bush.

Bob sat looking at the big heap of toys on the playroom floor. There were certainly a lot of them—picture books, story books, puzzles, games, a battered fire engine, a little steam launch, and lots of other things.

"What shall we do with them, mamma?" he asked at last. "Where shall we pack them?"

"I wonder," said mamma, soberly, "if my little boy would feel very much disappointed if I said we could not pack them at all. I do not mean the few you like so well, but all your toys. You see, dear, we are going to father, way across the big ocean to the Philippines, and perhaps we will only be there a few months, when orders may come from the government at Washington to go somewhere else; and it's a light knapsack and marching orders, my boy."

She snatched him up with a hurried kiss, as she cried out, joyfully: "But isn't being with papa worth leaving a few old things behind, Bobby boy? Just think! We haven't seen him for three years, and you were only four when we came to live with grandpa while he went way, way off, on duty for his country."

"Course not," said Bob, struggling down from her arms to look at the pile of toys. "Course I don't care for toys when I can have father. But what shall we do with them, mamma? I want some one to have them that will like them as I did."

"I'll tell you," said mamma, brightly. "Why not give them away yourself, Bobby boy? We will put them all together and take them to the Orphans' Home. There you can give them to whatever boys you wish, and you will know that while you are sailing over the ocean to papa, the poor little orphan boys will have a good time playing with them."

It did not take long to get ready, and almost before he realized it, Bobby and mamma were whirling toward the Asylum in a taxicab, and in almost no time they were at the Asylum door.

A few words with the matron, and she led mamma and Bobby into a big room filled with boys and girls playing games, looking over some old books, etc.

"This is the play hour," said the matron. "You can go among them and talk to them as you wish."

Bobby had his eye on a little boy about his own age who was driving a lively tandem across the floor with a string harness upon them, and an imaginary whip in his hand. "I would like to give him something, mamma," he said. "Do you suppose he would like my fire engine?"

"Ask him," answered mamma.

"I know he would," said Bobby, growling suddenly shy, and glad mamma was there. "I think that little boy over by the window would like some of my books, and that boy on the rocking-horse looks as if he could sail my boat. Let's go and get them, mamma, and give them all right away."

In a few minutes the boys were gathered around their new treasures, and Bobby enjoyed watching their delight over them.

Suddenly there was a wall from a little girl who had been watching. "I want something, too," she cried. "I want something of my very own, too."

"Me, too," cried another little one, and two or three more joined in the cry.

Bobby looked ready to cry, too, at the thought that his expected pleasure promised to turn out so badly, but suddenly a bright idea came to him. He drew mamma down and whispered in her ear.

"If you want to," said mamma.

"Will it be enough?" he asked.

"Plenty," answered mamma, "and you shall do as you please."

Bobby turned to the little girl who had first begun to cry, forgetting his shyness.

"Don't cry any more," he said. "I haven't any girl's things, but at home I have the ten-dollar gold piece grandpa gave me. I was going to buy a soldier suit and gun, but I am going where there are real soldier suits and guns; and if you won't cry any more, I'll buy every single girl here a something for their own, and bring it tomorrow."

The little girl stopped her crying and raised her head. "Will it be a doll?" she asked.

"Yes," answered mamma, smiling, "Bobby will be glad to buy you a doll. Suppose," and she turned to the matron, "suppose you let us take them all in a taxicab and choose their own dolls. We will bring them safely home again."

The matron was willing, for she knew Bobby's mamma well and the many nice things she had done for the children; and soon Bobby found himself with mamma and the ten little girls on their way to a big department store.

Mamma led the way to the doll counter, and Bobby felt well repaid as he heard the squeals of delight with which they looked at the dolls the saleswoman took out for them; and each girl chose her own doll, light or dark hair, blue eyes or brown, just as she wished.

"It is so nice," sighed one of the girls, contentedly, as they started for the Asylum again, "it is so nice to pick out your own child. Every time I've had a doll, I never had one I chose myself," and she gave a sigh of rapture as she held closer the baby doll with golden hair and brown eyes she had selected for her own special choice.

"Mamma," said Bobby, as they whirled toward home again, "I think that was a lovely idea, and I'm glad I gave them all away."

"All?" asked mamma, smiling, "soldier suit and all?"

"Yes," answered Bobby, sturdily, "I am, mamma. The soldier suit and my toys would soon be worn out or lost where we are going so far; but I shall never, never forget how glad the boys were to have my toys, nor how happy the girls were choosing their dolls. And I am going where there are really soldiers, mamma."

"Yes," said mamma, smiling again, "and you are really going as soldiers go, Bobby. Nothing more than they need, everything else cheerfully left behind because their country calls them. It's a great thing to serve your country, Bobby, and the day may come when you will be a colonel in her great army, like papa; but remember, now, that it is as great a thing to give pleasure and happiness to others."—Zion's Herald.

PORT GIBSON AND HER COLLEGE.

By Rev. H. Walter Featherstun, D. D.

In 1873 a boy preacher sat silent and observant at a District Conference held in Port Gibson, and subsequently attended two sessions of the Mississippi Conference held there; but last Friday he went there as presiding elder of the Port Gibson District.

The Districts Stewards—that is, five of them with sundry clerical proxies—met there that day, set the salary of the presiding elder and passed the following resolutions:

"Resolved, First, That the Conference Assessments be distributed upon the basis of assessments made by the charges for support of the pastor;

"Second, That the secretary notify the pastors of the adoption of this resolution and request them to furnish the secretary, not later than February 15, 1911, with the assessment made by his charge for the support of the pastor. In the event the pastors are unable to furnish this information by the 15th of February the secretary is instructed to make the distribution upon the best information available to him."

The Quarterly Conference was held on Saturday, and I believe it was the best I ever held so early in the Conference year. The salary was fixed promptly with no suggestion of reduction. Some boards of stewards "now-a-days" get into a sort of spasm of economy and proceed at once to compel the preacher to economize. The preacher takes up the burden of trying to make ends meet, and I watch the process, but observe that the stewards smoke just as many fine cigars and their wives wear just as costly hats as if no program of retrenchment had been been adopted. I see that the preacher does all the retrenching. The true and faithful stewards at Port Gibson have adopted no program of retrenchment for their preacher.

On Sunday fine audiences listened attentively to the new presiding elder. In the afternoon I talked to the girls at the college, and found sympathetic hearers as I pleaded that in everything, especially in all matters religious, they be not satisfied with anything less than the very best. This college has a live Epworth League; hence the girls are eminently religious. There is this told: A Jewess graduated there sometime ago and went out to teach a public school; and she always opens her school with reading the Scriptures and prayer. She learned that in Port Gibson Female College. They tell me there that President Hawkins has a remarkable faculty for leading his girls to be religious.

Dr. Holloman, the new preacher in charge, was happy and hopeful; and so were the people. The outlook at Port Gibson is altogether roseate.

Editorial.

ANENT THE ADVOCATE.

Many pastors have sent in renewals from their charges during the past week, but there are scores of others in which the subscriptions of clubs sent in last year are expiring. We appeal to our friends to make a faithful effort in behalf of the Advocate in every community now. This is the most favorable season of the year for pressing the claims of the Conference organ.

A correspondent recently sent in a subscription and added, "This is for a new convert." A most suggestive statement! If the church paper were placed in the hands of every new member, would he not be apt to count for more as a worker in the years to come?

Again it is necessary to call attention to our rules concerning obituaries. We publish two hundred words free, and all over that number must be paid for at the rate of one cent a word. Please, brethren, do not ask us to vary from this rule because the deceased has been prominent and useful. We should like to oblige you, but our space is limited and it is impossible. We must be impartial. So hereafter all obituaries (except those of preachers and members of their families) above the allowed length will be abridged to two hundred words unless paid for.

Our "Honor Roll," made up of the charges in which all of the official members take their Conference organ, is lengthened this week by one additional church, Seventh Avenue, Meridian. It now stands as follows: Mansfield, La., Rev. A. W. Turner, pastor; Bogalusa, La., Rev. J. M. Alford, pastor; Tunica, Miss., Rev. J. W. Honnoll, pastor; Lumberton, Miss., Rev. T. W. Adams, pastor; Ruleville, Miss., Rev. O. L. Savage, pastor; Homewood, Miss., Rev. W. W. Graves, pastor; Houston, Miss., Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor; Seventh Avenue, Meridian, Miss., Rev. J. A. Wells, pastor.

MINISTERIAL ETHICS.

A fine illustration of a minister showing a proper regard for his successor was recently brought to our attention. The preacher referred to had served a charge for a quadrennium with great acceptability and was on the eve of departing for his new field. The people, who love and admire him, gathered about him at the conclusion of the farewell service, and began to try to make engagements with him to return at certain dates to officiate on special occasions for which they assured him he was their preference. But instead of acceding to their wishes, the brother told them that he held them in affectionate regard and would always cherish the memory of their many kindnesses, but that he was no longer in charge of their work and that to render the service which they had requested would scarcely be courteous to their new pastor. His friends readily perceived the impropriety which he pointed out and loyally acquiesced in his decision.

The course pursued by this minister merits the most hearty commendation. It is a regrettable fact that brethren in the itinerancy are not always as considerate of one another as they should be. We have known preachers by correspondence and otherwise to keep in close touch with former congregations after they had been appointed to other pastorate and to journey back every now and then to officiate at a wedding, or funeral, or baptize the children in some home. There may be a few special cases where this is proper and allowable, but they are rare. Generally it is wise to decline such invitations. If our people do not know what is due their pastors, we should count it our province to teach them. There is no excuse for one trying to hold on to a flock to which the appointing power has given another shepherd. Bishop Galloway was wont to say to the members of the Conferences over which he presided with the remarkable impressiveness that was characteristic of him: "When you have been sent to another field, go; and when you have gone, stay. Give the man who comes after you a chance." Rich in wisdom are these words from the lips of the Chrysostom of Southern Methodism.

To a very large extent ministers are the custodians of each other's characters. When one is leaving a charge he can by an imprudent or injudicious remark injure his successor and create against him a stubborn prejudice exceedingly difficult to overcome. Or when one is entering upon a new pastorate, by disparaging the methods or the work of the man who has gone before him, he can lower him in the esteem of the public and do him a grave injustice. Above all others, one who is called of God to preach the gospel and direct the affairs of the Church should be a man of guarded speech. Any kind of a gossip is bad enough, but a clerical tattler is the worst of all. A preacher should allow no person to beguile him into talking critically of his brethren. Those who seek to seduce one into this will usually depreciate him just as readily in his absence. The Methodist itinerancy ought to be in the highest and best sense a brotherhood. As one in it would have the others treat him, so should he treat them. If the clergy do not live according to the "Golden Rule," how can they expect to influence the laity to do so? Striking straight at selfishness, the religion of Christ, from the very nature of it should tend to produce gentlemen. It should enable one to see more clearly the rights of others and dispose him duly to regard them. The man who wants everything to come his way is manifestly not overburdened with piety.

SOME ADVOCATES OF CHURCH UNION.

The talk of church union is to-day heard on every side. Both the secular and religious press are devoting not a little space to the subject, and scarcely any ecclesiastical assembly can meet and adjourn without having the question presented in some form for consideration. And, as is usually the case, the sects which are most sectarian are the loudest in their insistence that the followers of Christ of every name shall ignore their differences of opinion and come together in one great fold. Thus the Episcopalians and Campbellites have constituted committees to work for the cause of church union, though the only terms of consolidation they would be likely to accept would be for the other denominations to surrender their own views and adopt those to which they so tenaciously adhere. Not less in favor of this kind of union are the Baptists, though, be it said to their credit, they are more disingenuous and outspoken, as is evidenced by the following statement from Dr. R. S. McArthur, of New York, one of their ablest and most trusted leaders: "If ever there is organic union, it will begin at the baptistry. Every denomination of Protestant Christendom, and also the Roman and Greek Churches can agree upon baptism; that is immersion, as taught by our Lord and his apostles." In other words, the distinguished divine favors only such union as can be brought about by the people of every other faith becoming Baptists.

It is needless to say that such advocates of church union are not contributing to the spirit of fraternity which is manifestly increasing among the religious denominations. Apparently, they are only seeking to take advantage of this growing goodwill to promote sectarian ends. These sects have long been noted for their intolerance of all teaching different from their own, and their proclamation that they would be pleased to have all Christians come together on their platform is nothing new. We think it is far from conclusive that the massing of the several branches of Protestantism in one huge organization would be beneficial to the cause of Christ. However, if this should ever come to pass it will not be by a surrender of breadth to narrowness, but by ignoring non-essentials, and centering upon the great cardinal truths of Christianity. The golden age of bigotry is in the past, and it will become more and more an anachronism as the disciples of Jesus grow in likeness to their Lord and in reach of vision.

CO-OPERATION NEEDED.

The January number of The Conflict, the official organ of the Anti-Saloon League of Louisiana, contains the salutatory of Dr. S. A. Smith, its editor and the superintendent of the organization in whose interest it is published. Its concluding sentences are as follows: "I have no underhanded methods to use against the friends of the liquor traffic, liquor laws and liquor men for office. I shall always fight in the open. I have no tricks to try nor deceit to practice. The God of our fathers is with us and we shall surely win. If those who stand for decency and purity among our people will rally with me, I shall be here until the last saloon shall be driven from the soil of the State of Louisiana."

We like the ring of these words. Their note is courageous and optimistic. They evidence a purpose to press the battle against the rum traffic and a faith in the power of truth and right to conquer. We rejoice to see the fight against this gigantic evil beginning, and we pledge our hearty co-operation. In this impending struggle, the place for Methodists is in the forefront. Our past record in this warfare is unsurpassed, and we cannot afford now to let others take our crown. The ablest champion of prohibition that the South has ever had was our lamented Galloway. And though his eloquent voice no longer thunders against the iniquity of the saloon, let us remember the lessons that he taught and rally to the support of the cause for which he struck so many sturdy blows.

The campaign before us must be one of education. It will require money and necessitate united and continuous effort. Let every man, every woman, and every child who would like to see the State redeemed from this terrible curse, get into line and give Dr. Smith the utmost assistance in their power. In union there is strength. Working energetically together we may hope to triumph; with only a few enlisted we shall surely fail.

A TRUE AND TIMELY UTTERANCE.

Bishop John C. Kilgo concluded an earnest "Plea for a Revival" in the last issue of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate in the following eloquent and timely words:

"The needs of a religious awakening require no arguments to prove them. They are all about us, in signs too plain to mislead us. Only one thing should be done, and that is, return to God with all our hearts and hopes and faiths. The way to have a great revival is not to discuss methods and organize campaigns, but to go at the work with the fire of a prophet and the zeal of an apostle. Let the pulpit become once more the blazing summit of Sinai from which the voice of God speaks to the people in the terms of law and eternal authority. 'Preach the Word.' Give it a chance. Preach it as it was delivered unto holy men of old and not as it has been tampered with and heclouded and revised by unholy men of modern times. The Holy Spirit will accompany the truth as he inspired it at the beginning and no other form of it will he respect. What if this does sound antiquated? What if scholars will deride it as 'traditionalism,' 'conservatism,' or 'orthodoxy'? Is this not the ancient trick of infidelity and conceit and idolatry? The world hated Christ and he was careful to assure his Church that it would hate them, and shall there be a pleading for quarters at its doors of revelry? God give us a host of preachers who are neither ashamed nor afraid to believe and preach the Word of God as it is written in Holy Scripture, and let the hosts of sin scoff."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Louisiana State Sunday School Convention will be held at Monroe, March 15-17. Let all lend a hand in making the occasion a memorable one.

The Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America met in annual session in Washington City Tuesday of this week.

Rev. John G. Sloane writes us encouraging words concerning the Advocate, for which we thank him. We appreciate the friendly expressions of our brethren.

Brother J. C. Long, of Philadelphia, Miss., has favored us with a list of subscribers, with the promise of another list soon. We thank him most sincerely for his interest in the Advocate.

The Hospital Commission of the Mississippi, North Mississippi, White River, and Memphis Conferences will meet in the First Methodist Church of Memphis on Tuesday, February 7th, at 9:30 a. m.

We learn that Brother A. J. Cohurn is beginning a good year at Farmerville, La. He is in good spirits, and so are the people, and that makes a combination that is sure to win success.

Rev. A. W. Turner is held in high esteem by the members of his congregation at Mansfield, La. They recently presented him with a fine gold-handled umbrella as a mark of their appreciation.

Rev. T. D. Lipscomb has resigned the superintendency of the Orphans' Home at Ruston, and Rev. R. W. Vaughan is again both manager and agent. This excellent institution is doing a great work.

Things are moving along nicely with Rev. G. P. McKeown at Edwards, Miss. He serves a fine people, and the people have a fine preacher, and we are not surprised to learn that the cause is advancing in those parts.

Rev. W. J. Ferguson is beginning his third year on the Brooklyn charge with a hopeful outlook. We thank him for substantial favors in the way of a fine list of renewals, and pray that this may be a happy and successful year in his ministry.

Rev. J. E. Williams is happily situated in his new charge at Mendenhall, Miss. He is praying for, and expecting, a great revival this year. May his prayers be abundantly answered! He has our thanks for a number of new subscribers and renewals.

We learn that the Toccopola charge, in the North Mississippi Conference, is beginning a good year under the leadership of Rev. J. G. Johnson. May rich blessings be given to preacher and people!

Bishop E. D. Mouzon is expected to preach in the Methodist Church at Mansfield, La., on the first Sunday in March. It goes without saying that a rich treat is in store for the people of that favored city.

Rev. W. H. Lane, of Rose Hill, Miss., is another good friend of the paper who has shown his interest by sending a club of five subscribers. We pray that the Advocate may be a real help to him and his people in their work for the Church.

Mrs. J. T. Kidd of Lenoir, La., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, says she cannot get along without the paper. We thank her for her kind words, and for a contribution to the fund for sending the Advocate to some unfortunate ones.

Brother W. E. Dickens, of Pelahatchie, Miss., has our thanks for a club of seven subscribers, with the promise to do all he can in behalf of the Advocate. He begins the year's work with bright prospects. We pray that great success may attend his labors.

Brother E. D. Harris of Simsport, La., has been a subscriber to the Advocate since 1865, with the exception of a short interval. He is now past 86 years of age, and because of failing sight, is no longer able to read. We pray that his spiritual vision may never grow dim.

Rev. B. P. Fullilove finds cause for encouragement on the Booneville Circuit. His Quarterly Conference has been twice rained out, occasioning some confusion, but, notwithstanding, things are moving on well. He expresses a desire to have his charge on the "Honor Roll."

We note with sorrow the death of Brother John E. Hanna, more than 40 years a member of our church in Monroe, La., and a much-beloved citizen of that city. He died on Sunday, Jan. 15, in peace and triumph. We extend our heartfelt sympathy to those who have been bereaved.

The Epworth League of the Louisiana Avenue Church gave a surprise party last Friday evening to their new pastor, Rev. H. T. Carley, and his family. Each Leaguer carried something for the parsonage pantry. A delightful social evening was spent, and delicious refreshments were served.

Alice, the little daughter of Captain and Mrs. G. T. Fitzhugh, of Memphis, Tenn., died at their home in that city on Sunday, January 15th. The stricken parents have the sympathy and prayers of many friends in Mississippi, Tennessee, and elsewhere in their sore bereavement.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the New Orleans District will hold their annual meeting in Rayne Memorial Church, this city, on Friday, Jan. 27th, beginning at 11 a.m. We thank Mrs. J. Munford, the District Home Mission secretary, for an invitation to be present.

Doctor S. H. Werlein, on the first Sunday of 1911, preached two great sermons, one of which was reproduced in full by the New Orleans Times-Democrat and the other was reproduced in full by the New Orleans Picayune. Something quite remarkable for any pastor in any city.—St. Louis Advocate.

Rev. K. P. Foust is finishing a nice new church at Sherman, Miss., and is planning to begin the construction of a parsonage at the same place. He has been energetically at work ever since Conference, and is much pleased with the prospect. We thank him for being mindful of the Advocate in his rounds.

Mrs. M. F. Cowan, of Vicksburg, Miss., in remitting for the renewal of her subscription adds $2, with instructions to place it to the credit of our "Help Fund." We are grateful for this contribution, which will send the Advocate for a year into two needy homes into which it would not otherwise go.

Dr. S. A. Steel lectured on "The Circuit Rider" at the First Methodist Church of Jackson, Miss., last Sunday evening. That he paid a glowing tribute to the historic "man of the saddle-bags," scarcely needs to be said. As a brilliant platform speaker, Dr. Steel is facile princeps in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The Fernwood correspondent of the McComb City Enterprise says in the issue of that paper appearing on January 12: "Rev. D. Scarborough preached a very forcible sermon here Sunday morning from the text, 'Who is on the Lord's side,' which, we are sure, made a deep impression on the minds and hearts of the hearers."

A postal card from Dr. I. W. Cooper, president of Whitworth College, who left some days ago to accompany Bishop Candler to Cuba, brings news of the safe arrival of the party at Havana. The Doctor promises to tell the readers of the Advocate later something of his trip and the work of Methodism in that great field.

"We have had a royal reception from the good people of this splendid charge, and they have made us feel quite at home from the very beginning." So writes Rev. J. H. Bass from Brooksville, Miss. We have never known a pastor to serve this flock who did not fall in love with those who compose it, and speak of them in terms of praise.

Rev. W. N. Duncan, of Batesville, Miss., favored us with a list of 12 subscribers a few days since. Not only is he one of the strong preachers of the North Mississippi Conference, but he is also a painstaking pastor, who leaves no interest of the Church neglected. The future has much in store for this capable and growing young minister.

The first number of "The Missionary Voice" has made its appearance. It is attractive in form and contains a feast of good things. The editors are Dr. W. W. Pinson and Mrs. A. L. Marshall. Now the only exclusively missionary publication in the Church, this monthly should have a circulation reaching into the hundreds of thousands.

Rev. J. B. King, of Meadville, Miss., under date of Jan. 19, writes as follows: "We are moving on nicely at Meadville, and expect to do a great work here in the name of the Lord. We are expecting the greatest revival ever held in this place." May his expectations be fully met! We thank him for a list of renewals and new subscribers.

As a result of the good work of Dr. H. G. Henderson, the pastor, and the official board of which Dr. J. W. Lipscomb is president, the First Methodist Church of Columbus, Miss., has wiped out a debt of $600, and entered upon the new year with a clean balance sheet. The Columbus Dispatch speaks in terms most commendatory of Dr. Henderson's preaching and labors among the people of that city.

Writing under date of January 19th, Mrs. Pauline G. Randle says: "My husband, Rev. Robert Randle, was sent to Cotton Valley Circuit this year. The people at all of the appointments have received him kindly, and he feels much encouraged. We like the work." We are grateful to Sister Randle for her commendation of the Advocate and expression of interest in its success.

Rev. J. W. Ward is happy in his work at Madison Station, Miss. The people of that delightful town gave him a most cordial welcome for his third year as pastor there. The High School marched in a body to the parsonage to show their pleasure at his return. Only faithful service wins such recognition. We congratulate the people of Madison on their good fortune in being served by so capable a man.

The Advocate acknowledges a pleasant call from Rev. A. J. Gearheard, our popular pastor at Gueydan, La. Brother Gearheard has entirely recovered from the injuries he recently received in a stove explosion. He was in the city with his wife who had undergone an operation at the Presbyterian Hospital. We are glad to know that the operation was entirely successful, and that Sister Gearheard is improving rapidly in health.

It was our great pleasure to have as a caller last Friday morning Bishop W. B. Murrah, who was passing through the city on his way home from the meeting of the Texas Educational Commission at Austin. We never saw him looking better. He continues to be enthusiastic over the work in Texas—the big State where the Methodists are a mighty host and are given to doing big things. The Bishop has also lately been in Nashville and Memphis.

Miss Martha Nicolaisen, a sister of Mrs. Jacob Cohen of the Carrollton Avenue Church, this city, and for eleven years a missionary of the M. E. Church in China, gave a very interesting account of the work at her station in an address last Sunday evening to the Carrollton Avenue congregation. The results that have been accomplished in that difficult field are an inspiring refutation of the charge that foreign missions are a failure.

In sending a list of subscribers, for which we thank him, Rev. C. C. Evans of Decatur, Miss., takes occasion to state that he has had a most cordial reception at that place, and that the outlook is most hopeful. The congregation at Union on his charge, is just finishing a splendid new church, for which much of the credit is due Rev. H. E. Carter, according to Brother Evans. We congratulate all concerned on the progress that is being made in that charge.

The Board of Trustees of Mansfield College are seeking for a suitable man to canvass the state in the interest of that institution. If anybody has a suggestion to make in this connection, let him write to Mr. D. G. Petty, president of the Board, Mansfield, La. It will be of interest to the friends of the college to know that the president of the State Board of Health, who has recently made a tour of the State, reports that the sanitary condition of the college is perfect.

Mr. Robert Ringer, secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of New Orleans, occupied the pulpit of Parker Memorial Church of this city last Sabbath morning at 11 o'clock, and delivered an interesting address. It is expected that the furnishing of this church, including the seats and organ, will be completed in the near future, and that it will be formally opened in April. Bishop Murrah has been extended an invitation to conduct the service on that occasion.

Rev. J. W. Dorman has been heartily welcomed at Ittabena, Miss., and expresses himself as delighted with that growing charge. The parsonage is comfortable and well situated; the salary has been fixed at $1,500, and the stewards have assumed the task of raising all the collections, leaving the pastor free to address himself to the work of preaching and visiting the people. We thank Brother Dorman for an invitation "to come up and preach, and try the gentle art of angling."

The Carrollton Avenue congregation gave a reception to their new pastor, Rev. J. G. Snelling, and his family, last week. Many of the members and friends of the church were present, and the occasion was a very happy one. Short addresses were made by C. O. Chalmers, S. A. Montgomery, Rev. B. H. Leesman, and Rev. C. D. Atkinson. Brother and Sister Snelling replied to the cordial welcome thus given, and an enjoyable social evening was spent. Delightful refreshments were served.

We regretted to note in a Jackson dispatch to the Times-Democrat on the 22d inst. that Judge A. G. Norrell had been stricken with a slight attack of paralysis, and would not be able to meet this week with the committee appointed to select a site for the monument to the Mothers of the Confederacy on the Mississippi capitol grounds, of which he is a member. We hope that his illness will be of brief duration. Judge Norrell is active in church work, and was a delegate to the last General Conference.

An appreciated note from that noble veteran and our long-time friend, Rev. R. M. Davis, of Byhalia, Miss., was received a few days ago. Among other things he said: "I am in the enjoyment of good health, and my only regret is that I cannot be at the front with my brethren." No preacher in North Mississippi is more universally loved than Brother Davis, who combines strength of intellect with gentleness of manner, and who has a kind word for every one. We greatly missed him at the last Conference.

Sister S. D. Dove, of Shelby, Miss., referring to the Advocate, writes: "I dearly love its coming, and feel that I could not be satisfied without it, as it has been coming so faithfully since its first issue, more than fifty years ago." We count it an honor to number among our readers this elect woman whose consecrated life is a blessing to the community in which she lives, and her testimony that the Advocate has been, and is, a help to her encourages us. To make our paper genuinely serviceable to the disciples of the Master, is what we fain would do.

In a personal note to the editor that worthy layman, Brother F. E. Ray, says: "Our new pastor, Rev. J. D. Boggs, came in just after Christmas, and the people gave him a good pounding. All seem to like him, and I think he is the right man in the right place and that he will do a good work. We want to do our level best this year and make the Corinth District the biggest thing in the Conference, and Jonesboro the best circuit in the district." This is a laudable ambition and we trust that progress may be made toward its realization.

In a communication ordering the renewal of her subscription, Mrs. M. R. Pickens, of Lexington, Miss., adds: "The Advocate has been a household friend ever since it was established, coming first to my father's and mother's home—Rev. James Walton and wife at Richland, Miss.—and afterwards to my own home at Richland, Goodman, and Lexington. I enjoy reading it every week and then pass it on to a busy, needy neighbor for Sunday reading." These true and tested friends of years are among the Advocate's best assets, and we pray that God may bless them, each and all.

PEN POINTS.

By Rev. L. C. Calhoun.

There is a sort of an aristocracy in every community; there is an aristocracy of education, of finance, of blood, and so on, but all must have the one and the same Savior. The thought is in this Scripture: "There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek."

Family government has frequently failed, no doubt, because of the too free use of the "you shall," and the "you shall not." The child must first be taught to fear God, the medium through which wisdom, "the principal thing," comes; and when that is attained, he only needs guidance by those who are better informed and are wiser; he then prefers the right.

"Did you read that book that you borrowed from me?" "Yes, I read it." "How did you like it?" "I have this to say, I had in reading it to wade through a great deal of chaff to get a little wheat." Using another figure, in reading books the reader will frequently be brought face to face with this: A profusion of words and paucity of ideas. There are books and books.

MRS. ALICE PAXTON, on Jan. 11, 1911, after a long spell of sickness and much suffering. Interment was in Coushatta (or Springville) cemetery. May God bless the bereaved ones.
R. A. Davis, Pastor.

BAXTER M. SMITH of Una, Miss., died at Roswell, New Mexico, August 13, 1910. He was converted at an early age, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Una, Miss. He was a consistent and faithful member. About two months before his death, upon the advice of his physician, he went to Roswell, New Mexico, for his health. He endured his illness with much patience and fortitude, but the "white plague" had securely fastened its fangs upon his mortal body. His remains were interred at Soule's Chapel cemetery, near his home. His life was an example of upright Christian manhood. He was an official member in the church and Sunday school for a number of years. In his death the church has lost one of its most consecrated young members—one who was willing at all times to do what he could. He is survived by one brother. May God be a comfort to him and other sorrowing relatives and the memory of their dear one guide them to heaven. A FRIEND.

On Jan. 3 "Uncle" SAM NELSON, who lived with his son near Longtown, Miss., was called to his reward. He was born April 5, 1829, and had been an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, since 1865. He was also a member of the Masonic Lodge since about the same date. During his life, long from a human viewpoint, he was an optimist, always speaking words of cheer and comfort and doing deeds of charity. His home was one of old-fashioned Southern hospitality, with special care given to Methodist preachers. He is survived by three broad-shouldered, honorable sons and their families, each of whom holds his memory dear, because of his godly counsels, emphasized by an upright life. He will be missed by his church, his lodge, his family and his many friends, all of whom have our sincere sympathy and prayers. After funeral services, conducted by the writer in the church at Longtown, his remains were consigned to the tomb, there to await the resurrection morning. Let us meet him "up yonder."
A. G. HALL.

Crenshaw, Miss., Jan. 9, 1911.

Brother J. W. JONES was born in Gibson county, Tennessee, Nov. 30, 1843, and died at his home in Panola county, Mississippi, December 20, 1910. His father moved to Mississippi in the early fifties, and settled in Panola county, where he reared his family. Brother J. W. Jones had lived in this community to the day of his death. He joined the army in the beginning of the great Civil War and remained in it to the end. In the year '68 he professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He served the church as class leader, steward and district steward and superintendent of the Sunday school. He had been recording steward for more than thirty years. In the year 1865, on the twenty-seventh day of August, he was married to Miss Hester Ann Green. Of this union six children were born, five girls and one son. The son and two daughters had preceded him to the spirit world; the good wife and three daughters mourn their loss. Brother Jones was one of the best men of our time. He never failed in any duty laid upon him by his church. He was always at Quarterly Conference and all church services at Mt. Olivet, his own church. His influence will live only for good. He was widely known by old and young and loved and honored by all. The church will feel his loss. May the good Father above keep and sustain his loved ones left behind and bring them in the end to the Father's home on high!

W. M. YOUNG.

JULIA STEELE was born on the tenth day of October, 1881, and died on August 4, 1910. Her parents were E. W. and R. E. Steele. Miss Julia was a devout Christian, having been converted in a protracted meeting in Gloster, Miss., several years ago. Her sweet and charming personality made all who knew her love her, and her life was such that the world recognized her as one who had constant fellowship with Jesus. The writer bears in mind very distinctly his first impression of her when we met for the first time last year. Her radiant face, graceful and pleasing manners, and sprightly and intelligent conversation made me know at once that she was one of God's favored daughters. She was a worthy daughter of a noble Christian family, being the great-niece of the noted Elijah Steele, and numbering amongst her kindred many of the saintliest men and women of early Methodism, she trod the pathway they trod and has gone on to be with them. There was profound sorrow in the little town of Georgetown when she died. Though she had been sick many weary days with typhoid, she seemed fairly on the way to recovery, when suddenly she grew worse, and after a brief time of great suffering, passed peacefully away. Our hearts are yet very tender with the memory of our bereavement. God's blessings on father, mother and loved ones so greatly bereaved. May the memory of her beautiful life make us better and the hope of reunion after awhile be for us all an incentive to holy living. F. L. APPLEWHITE.

SAMANTHA SHEPHERD, daughter of William and Harriett Ingram, was born April 9, 1828, at Germantown, in northeast Kentucky. She became a Methodist when 14 years old, and an orphan by the death of her parents when she was less than 17 years old. She became the wife of Rev. J. W. Cunningham of the Kentucky Conference, September 17, 1846; lived with him in the marriage state in Kentucky and Missouri more than sixty-four years. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, from its organization and was the wife of the first deacon ordained therein. She lived to the age of 82 years and nine months. Her husband survives in the middle of his eighty-seventh year of life. In the last year of her life she was in a state of partial paralysis, but was cheerful and uncomplaining. Then came two weeks of affliction in bed, terminating in death at 2 a. m., January 11, 1911. She was the mother of five sons and two daughters. All are living except the eldest daughter and youngest son. The latter was buried on his thirty-fifth birthday. Four sons were frequent visitors during her fatal illness, and were with her when she peacefully breathed her life away in faith and hope. Fourteen grand and great-grand sons and daughters are living in Missouri, Texas and California. JOHN W. CUNNINGHAM, St. Louis, Mo.

Tidings from the Field

Shannon, Miss.:

Dear Brother Meek:—"The lines have fallen to me in pleasant places." I never had a more cordial reception than was accorded me and mine by the good people of Shannon. Kind words and kind deeds have met us on every hand. Our first quarterly meeting was held last Saturday and Sunday, January 14 and 15. Our presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Felts, was with us in health and good spirits, and besides holding the Quarterly Conference, preached us three sermons. The people were delighted. We thank God and take courage.—J. W. Boswell.

Magnolia, Miss.:

Dear Brother Meek:—To write of Magnolia's kindness to the pastor would be to write all the time, but we can not forbear through the Advocate to express our appreciation of the generous attentions shown us at the Christmas time. It all began with a most lavish pounding by the Woman's Home Mission Society, and has scarcely ended yet. The substantial presents made us at that time not only supplied our utmost need, but made our hearts glad and filled us with a more intense desire to be a blessing here. We have had our first Quarterly Conference. Brother Leggett preached a stirring sermon on Sunday night, and held our Conference Monday night, everything being up-to-date. We attended the District Stewards' meeting of this District in Brookhaven on the 11th instant. The meeting was well attended, and the net increase of $1200 on the assessments was cheerfully received. The year has opened under very favorable auspices. I regret to write that Rev. J. W. Sandell, our beloved superannuate at this place, has been extremely ill. At this time he seems to be improving. We are expecting a visit from our editor during the early part of this year.—H. B. Watkins.

Tunica, Miss.:

Dear Brother Meek:—Our first Quarterly Conference for the Tunica charge was held last Saturday. The reports were very good for this time of the year. Our presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Woollard, was with us. He has his work well in hand. The preachers all seem to be pleased with their work, and the people pleased with their preachers. The district was never in a better condition. Brother Woollard is the right man in the right place. He is not only well posted, but possesses a double portion of that very uncommon thing called common sense, which is a very important possession for a presiding elder. I see the Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference are out, and they are just like Brother Countless does everything else—as near perfection as we could expect from mortal man. Success to you in your great work for our Church.—J. W. Honnoll.

Coldwater and Love's:

Our reception here was everything we could have wished. In addition to a number of the elect ladies of the church being at the parsonage, having everything in perfect order—the house well lighted, warmed up and a warm supper awaiting us, the pantry had just been newly supplied with many groceries for our use. After supper and we had been shown through our new home, it was very gracefully turned over to us for the year. I must not forget to mention the kindness of that prince of laymen, Brother P. T. Cullicott, in meeting us at the train and bringing us up to the parsonage. It is useless for me to say I found everything well organized connected with our church, and running without any friction whatever. You know I am fortunate in having had as my predecessor that consecrated and coming young preacher, Rev. V. C. Curtis. To follow in his wake may well be coveted by any of us young brethren. Our services so far have been good. We are quite hopeful of a good year. Pray for us.—D. W. Babb.

Scotland Circuit:

Some may wonder if "Scotland Circuit" still exists. I finished my first round of the churches Sunday, Jan. 15, and found that it does, and no doubt will for many years to come. I also have found in my short stay over here the tracks of many of my older brethren, these are so deep in the sand of time that it will take many winter and summer rains to erase them. Now, at the beginning of this Conference year it is one of the ambitions of our hearts to endeavor to reap some fruit where these faithful men have sown the seed. I furthermore have found earnest-hearted men all over the work who have impressed me that they will stand by their pastor and "hold up his hands" until the victory has been won. You may not hear of "Scotland" this year, but we expect to be busy, "not triflingly employed," trusting ere the year has closed we and our people will be brought closer unto the living God. Many of us young preachers no doubt would write oftener, but we are aware how inexperienced we are with the pen, and at the same time realize that a strong muscle in the heat of battle or the force of a strong Christian life, where some things need to be lived as well as written, proves better. So we may forget to write in our earnest endeavoring to write the better epistle, "known and read of all men." This is the kind the Master prefers. We trust while "the fathers in Israel" are advising us, that they, likewise, pray for us, that we may make no serious errors, but that we may accomplish something for Christ's sake. And the greatest thing that can be said of any year's work is souls were born into the Kingdom of God as a result of the efforts put forth, and I cannot help but believe that God will honor the preacher's labors who looks to him for his appointments rather than try to influence the presiding elders or Bishop. I also would like to mention the new church building at Porter's Chapel, on the Oak Ridge Circuit, which was built last year while we were there. This church was dedicated on the first Sunday in December. It is a nice little church, worth $1000, and was built in the face of seeming impossibilities, but when earnest men, like Brother Ferguson, whom many of the preachers know and love, gets behind a church they do not need the Conference Board of Church Extension to build it for them. This was a small membership, too, about twenty in all. I trust that the building of this church was among the smallest things accomplished on the circuit last year. Am also looking for things to happen on the "Scotland" Circuit this year. May God bless the Advocate and all its readers!—B. E. Meigs.

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES

They Are Closely Observing Public Health Conditions.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that the reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of applicants do not even suspect that they have the disease.

He states that judging from his own experience and reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has probably been more successful in relieving and curing these diseases than any remedy known. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of cures.

We find that Swamp-Root is strictly an herbal compound and we would advise our readers who feel in need of such a remedy to give it a trial. It is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes—fifty-cents and one-dollar.

However, if you wish first to test its wonderful merits, send to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle, absolutely free. When writing be sure and mention the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE VETERAN MINISTERS' ASSOCIATION.

This Association of the North Mississippi Conference was organized December 1, 1910, Thursday afternoon, this being the second day of the late annual session at Sardis, Miss.

The first annual sermon was preached on the afternoon of the preceding day, November 30, by Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan.

The following named persons were elected as permanent officers of the Association:

W. T. J. Sullivan, president; G. W. Bachman, vice-president; T. C. Wier, secretary and treasurer.

All superannuated, and supernumerary preachers and all who have been in the traveling connection fifty or more years are to be declared members; and all who have been traveling preachers forty or more years may become members if they so desire. All sons of deceased ministers, who, if living would be members, are also admitted to membership.

The officers of the Association will constitute an executive committee to arrange a program for the annual meetings.

The meetings are to be held annually in connection with the session of the Annual Conference. The secretary may make his report, and a sermon will be preached, followed by talks, reminiscential or otherwise, by the members. Business meetings may be held later.

The design of the Association is to bring its members into closer touch with each other; to strengthen the bonds of Christian fellowship; to give our retired brethren something to look forward to at the Annual Conference, and induce them to attend its sessions, and that they may engage in any enterprise or work possible to them.

It was suggested that the members of the Association might occasionally, through the Advocate, give some account of themselves and their labors.

It was further suggested that the brethren of the Association should pray for each other daily about the hour of sunset.

The members of the Association may be serviceable to the Mississippi Methodist Historical Society by gathering up items of Methodist history, the history of churches, sketches of pioneers of Mississippi Methodism, and other matters of historical interest. Twenty-eight names are enrolled as charter members.

As none of the Mississippi Conference veterans was present, we could only organize for the North Mississippi Conference. But the way is open and the invitation extended to our Mississippi veterans to co-operate with us whenever it may suit their convenience and pleasure to do so.

T. C. WIER, Secretary.

DISTRICT STEWARDS' MEETING.

The District Stewards of the Jackson District met at First Church, Jackson, on Jan. 11, 1911, at 11:30 a. m. Prayer was offered by Rev. G. H. Galloway and Judge A. G. Norrel. Rev. J. R. Jones, the presiding elder, read and commented on the thirty-third chapter of Exodus, urging upon the laymen and pastors present to seek the leadership of the Spirit and the presence of God with them through the new year.

Fourteen of the twenty-four stewards were present, and all the pastors except five. After the appointment of the committee on apportionment, the laymen and pastors had an interesting discussion of revivals.

By a rising and unanimous vote, the following resolutions offered by T. P. Barr were adopted:

"Whereas special effort is being made by the Laymen's Missionary Movement to evangelize the world in the next generation by preaching the gospel to every people in the uttermost parts of the earth, and as other denominations of the Christian faith are rallying their forces to aid in this great achievement, and as we rejoice in such activity as evidence of a general awakening to a sense of our responsibility as believers in him who said: 'Ye are my witnesses'—'Go, ye therefore, into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature'—'Occupy until I come,' etc.

Therefore, be it resolved, First, That we Methodists should recognize our share and responsibility in this great work by renewed effort and greater zeal.

Second, That it is to be observed that those who live in vital touch with the Master—those who are most thoroughly consecrated to him—are the most interested in the salvation of others, therefore, we devoutly pray for a general awakening and a spiritual revival in the Jackson District, and, looking thereto, we urgently request our pastors to make special effort in the way of revival services during the year.

Third, That we hope the Methodist Church may ever be characterized as 'Christianity in earnest,' and as a Church of revivals, and, to this end, we reconsecrate our lives."

These ringing resolutions seem to express what lies heavy upon the hearts of all. It was good to be there.

J. W. WARD, Secretary
Madison Station, Miss.

THE WINONA DISTRICT.

Dear Brother Meek: Our work has opened very auspiciously. The preachers are all in place and have been for some time. The spirit of hopefulness pervades the entire district, and for the most part preachers and people have set themselves earnestly to the tasks before them. Our Sunday school interest was never better; the spirit of advancement, material and otherwise, is abroad in the land. Two new churches are ready for dedication, the foundation of another has been laid and plans have been matured for four others. A meeting of the congregation was held at Eupora a few days ago and a committee appointed to solicit funds for a church there to cost $10,000 or $12,000. The Home Mission Society offered $1,500 to start the subscription. They expect to push the enterprise to an early completion. Some other items of interest are the increased assessments made for the support of the ministry. Winona and Ita Bena will each pay this year a salary of $1,500. Moorhead pays $930, and Carrollton $840—the best assessment for years. Schlater made the largest payment on the pastor's salary it has made for many a year at so early a date. The presiding elder is arranging to hold two missionary institutes in the district about the first of March, one at Kilmichael and the other at Sunflower. Programs will be issued in due time.

E. S. LEWIS.

The National Mutual Church Insurance Co. of Chicago—The Methodist Mutual

No assessments. All that you have guessed about mutual insurance may be wrong. If you want to know, write for information to HENRY P. MAGILL, Sec'y & Mgr., 1841 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. MRS. ALICE HARGROVE BARCLAY, Agent, Mc. E. Church South, South Brook 1116, Louisville, Kentucky.

TO be healthy, is to be happy; to be strong is to be admired, and to be vigorous is to be successful. No one can be healthy, strong and vigorous with bad blood coursing through his veins, and here is the reason. The body's sole nourishment is blood. Every particle of food, before being carried from the stomach into the system, must first be made into blood; therefore, unless that blood is rich and pure, with a sufficient quantity of nourishment, the body does not get properly fed, resulting in an impoverished condition of the entire system. Bad blood, then, is primarily the cause of every weakness or disease, and should be corrected, or serious results may follow.

W. H. BULL'S HERBS AND IRON

produces, or rather makes, red blood corpuscles, and cleans out all impurities of the blood. It aids digestion and strengthens heart action; invigorates the nerves and stimulates the liver and kidneys; is laxative in its effects and creates a hearty appetite; greatly relieves rheumatism by eliminating uric acid, and restores all organs to normal health. Mr. L. H. Jeffers, Ozark, Ark., after being treated by physicians without improvement, writes, "I finally tried using W. H. BULL'S HERBS AND IRON, which helped me right away, and I consider HERBS AND IRON the best medicine ever made to build up a weak, run-down constitution." Take care of your health by looking after your blood, and take care of your blood by using HERBS AND IRON—it will do everything we claim for it, or it costs you nothing. Your druggist handles it in 50c and $1.00 sizes—get a bottle of the $1.00 size, and if you are not feeling better after using two-thirds of the contents, take the remainder back to him and he will refund your money.

IF YOUR DRUGGIST CAN'T SUPPLY YOU, SEND US HIS NAME AND $1.00 AND WE SEND IT DIRECT, CHARGES PREPAID.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no end of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or, inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

MR. H. F. GILREATHS.

Whereas, God in His all-wise goodness and infinite wisdom, has taken from our midst our friend and Sunday school superintendent, Mr. H. F. Gilreaths, be it Resolved, first That we, as a Sunday School, deeply deplore the loss of such a man, but feel assured that an entrance to the heavenly kingdom has been his, and we thank God for his beautiful life and service in the cause of Christ; that this church and this community have sustained a great loss in his decease and will miss him most when we gather at Church and Sunday school. Second, that while we miss his pleasant face and encouraging words in our Sunday school, we will cherish his memory and strive to emulate his example. Third, that we extend to the dear wife and daughter and many relatives our deepest sympathy in this, their dark hour of bereavement. Fourth, that this tribute to the memory of our deceased brother be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the Houston Post and the Okolona Sun.

EARLY COLLECTIONS NEEDED.

North Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren:—The holiday season is now over and I doubt not but that each of you is planning and working at plans already laid, for the accomplishing of great things during the year. Why should we not plan for the doing of great things? Ours is a great obligation, a great opportunity and we have a great and all powerful Leader. If we fall short of the most sanguine hope and expectations of both ourselves and our friends, as well as our God, we will have no one to censure for that failure save ourselves, unless of course, there should arise some unforeseen disaster.

As Conference Missionary Secretary, I hereby call your attention to the claim that the missionary cause has upon you. Let us get missions upon our hearts, even now, and let us not stop in our efforts to meet our obligations thereto until at least every dollar asked for shall have been paid. The needs of our General Missionary Board are vastly larger than the amount asked for. To hold our own in the missionary territory already occupied, and to make that advance that is necessary that none of the work already done may be lost, as well as to live up to God's expectation of us, demands that we do vastly more than we have done, or are even asked to do by the General Board.

For the next four months there will be more money throughout the country than at any other time of the year until the 1st of December. If we rightly put the claim of missions before our people, they will gladly pay off that obligation during the spring. Let us at least dignify that obligation with an honest trial on our part, and then if we fail the blame will rest on another's shoulders. Let us do our best to pay these obligations by April 1.

Just as soon as I can get the "beloveds" all to classify themselves as passengers, rather than as freight, I hope to get into communication with the District Missionary Secretaries and, through them, organize an active campaign in behalf of missions.

Brethren, I covet your prayers and co-operation in this great work. Let us each get the thought that we are co-laboring with God and he with us, and then I am sure there will not be a single one of us to drag in this glorious work of extending God's kingdom. Yours for service.

JOHN TILLERY LEWIS,
Conference Missionary Secretary.
Clarksdale, Miss.

NEW MISSIONARY POLICY FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Pastors, Superintendents, and Sunday School Workers, Attention!

Would you like to make your Sunday school missionary? Then consider our new Missionary "Policy" for the Sunday School.

Things About the Policy:

(1) This "Policy" was planned by the representatives jointly of the Sunday School and Mission Boards of our Church and these boards are both enthusiastically behind and pushing it.

(2) The "Policy" is a part of our new missionary constitution and will be found prescribed in the new Discipline, paragraph 254.

(3) It provides for a Missionary Committee, and missionary library, special missionary lessons, pictures, charts, maps for the walls, a plan of specials for the offering that connects the school through the board of the living link with the mission field, a quarterly missionary program for the Sunday school—any or all of these features according to the particular situation.

(4) This "Policy" can be applied in the city, in the town, or in the country, and if faithfully applied will make the Sunday school missionary. Of course, good common sense will be exercised in the application and it is understood that a Sunday school will adopt from this "Policy" only such features as its needs may require.

We think, however, that there is hardly a Sunday school in the connection that might not have a missionary committee, get at least a missionary shelf in the library, have missionary pictures on the wall, use a quarterly missionary program, and take an offering. We have in the "Policy" as intimated above, a plan by which any school can take a special from almost any one of our fields and through our department keep in quarterly connection with that field.

We call attention especially to our quarterly programs. The first now ready is a very attractive program on Korea and the second will be a combination Easter and Missionary program and will be ready by the 1st of March.

If you are interested in this "Policy" and plan of offering or our quarterly program, write us and we will send samples free; and also upon application if you are interested we will send all our "helps" explaining the entire "Policy."

We can furnish also a splendid chart in two colors presenting the salient features of this "Policy." This chart can be used as a wall chart or by presiding elders and Sunday school workers in the vivid presentation of the "Policy" to various Sunday schools. That chart can be had for forty cents. Yours for Missions in the Sunday school.

E. H. RAWLINGS,
Educational Secretary Board of Missions.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The officers of the Louisiana Conference Sunday School Board are as follows: Thos. V. Ellzey, chairman, New Orleans, La.; A. M. Mayo, secretary, Lake Charles, La.; Rev. A. G. Shankle, treasurer, New Orleans, La.

WHY ORGANIZE OUR CLASSES?

This is pre-eminently an organized age. People combine to accomplish things. A modern Sunday school is a school of specialists—every man has his work. The brother who proposes to be superintendent, secretary, teacher, organist, usher and sexton can no longer run a Sunday school. He makes a good servant, but is not fit to be a general—this must be a man who can discover buried talent, set others to work and general his forces. The great Sunday schools are thorough organizations with a trained, active force of officers to take care of even minute things. The Adult Bible Class is no exception. The teacher who really teaches is a busy man, and the members must run the business, and this the organized class proposes to do. Besides the regular executive committee of president, secretary and treasurer that belongs to any organization the organized class has:

(1) A devotion committee to look after the spiritual life of its members; (2) A social committee to provide for their pure social needs; and (3) a membership committee to keep up the attendance, adding new members as well as keeping track of those enrolled. This division calls many into work that would never be trained to active service otherwise and besides making the class strong, prepares them for the higher work in the church, as their service is demanded. ORGANIZE YOUR CLASS, and divide the work and responsibility among those who stand ready to lighten the teachers' and superintendent's burdens and to greatly increase the efficiency of the class and of the school.

P. O. LOWREY.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Sunday school architecture is a new and needed department of an age-old subject, and is a pertinent theme in this hour when each class wants and needs a room of its very own. Mr. Marion Lawrence has a splendid new book on the great subject and it would be well to consult it.

Seventy-five per cent of the boys in the teen age are lost to the Sabbath school, and these appalling figures have evolved an attempted solution as to this notable leakage and this has found expression in the International Advanced Movement. David Cook is getting out some fine literature along these lines and a card will bring it to your hand—O needy teacher!

Have you registered your Adult Class with Dr. Bulla? This is a beautiful opportunity to be anchored to that Wesley life and uplift, whose influence is beyond compare.

Have you a class motto, a class pin, a class ideal? And what do you mean to accomplish this good coming year?

The good king Asa lifted his hands to the great Jehovah and prayed and believed and won victory and shall we these 3000 years later, years of life and help, be less believing?

Rev. B. P. Patterson, has a splendid school at Mathiston, classes organized, teachers' meeting, and a new and commodious Sunday school room in view. His teachers are enthusiastic, capable and consecrated and their work for several years has been followed by astonishing results. Brother Patterson's letter of enthusiasm, helpfulness and real desire to evangelize his entire community was filled with a spirit that cast a glow over the office and heart of the Field Secretary.

Enjora, Miss., has a fine Men's Class, with Miss Elie Willingham as teacher. They have many plans on foot, and we shall all hope to reap the benefit of them by and by.

The Epworth League.

TEST OF A GOOD LEAGUE.

It begins on time, and never drags. It does not close its doors in the summer.

The members tithe, and read their Bibles daily.

The Lookout Committee sees every absentee each week.

The singing is spiritual and in harmony with the subject.

The members all work together in unity; there are no "sets" or cliques.

The pastor finds ready helpers in this League when he calls for them.

There is previous study and thoughtful consideration before each service.

The officers are "every-day Christians," consistent, prayerful and thoughtful.

Each department is wide awake, and has fully-written reports for the business meeting.

All have the true missionary spirit, and are "in love and charity with their neighbors."

There is always a goodly number of members at Sunday school, church and prayer meeting.

The social and literary meetings are of the highest order, instructive, attractive and interesting.

The leader is well prepared. There are short, stirring testimonials from the majority of members present and voluntary prayer when called for.

There is always a bright class of Juniors in training for promotion to the Senior ranks. No League can be a really good and growing society without regular accession to its membership by the advancement in course of the Junior members.—Pittsburg Advocate.

EPWORTH LEAGUE NOTES.

Epworth Church, New Orleans, is a splendid example of what can be done by Leaguers who are wide awake and aggressive. The City Union became interested in that work several years ago as a mission. It has grown from that small beginning until now it is a strong self-supporting church. Under the enthusiastic leadership of Rev. L. A. Sims a splendid building is in process of construction. The February meeting of the Union League will be held there, and the occasion will be in the nature of a celebration of the happy consummation of the League's effort.

The Leaguers of Felicity Street Church prepared fourteen well-filled baskets and distributed them among worthy and deserving families during Christmas. This is one of many ways in which young people can give expression to their Christian life.

The Parker Memorial League holds its devotional meeting at four o'clock Sunday afternoon. The Leaguers like that hour because there is no hurry to get through on account of a succeeding meeting, and it allows some to attend who would not be able to go if it were held at night.

The young people of Rayne Memorial have determined to make their League a success and are putting renewed energy into their work.

LEAGUERS' ARITHMETIC.

1. Am I adding to or subtracting from the efficiency of my church?
  2. Am I adding to my faith, virtue?
  3. Do I multiply the burdens of the pastor by neglect of duty or by non-co-operation?
  4. Has the Word I have received multiplied?
  5. Do I divide the work of the church and do my share without a remainder?
  6. Do I rightly divide the truth?
  7. Do I take away the stones from before dead souls for Jesus?
  8. Are many souls added to Christ's church by my help?
  9. Do I cancel worldly engagements for spiritual ones?
  10. Do I so number my days that I apply my heart to wisdom?
- St. Louis Christian Advocate.

FIRST CHURCH INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

To the Public:

"In June, 1910, as the pastor of First Methodist Church, 1108 St. Charles Avenue, I started a free industrial school in the social hall of the church. All young people, irrespective of creed, who need to qualify themselves for self-support in stenography, typewriting, bookkeeping, dressmaking, millinery and music, piano or violin, were invited to attend the school. About 400 have been enrolled. The results of the six months' work are seen in the following statement: A class of twelve in stenography are now ready for situations; a class of ten in bookkeeping are almost prepared for employment, a number of women are qualified as milliners, and others have been perfected in dressmaking. In addition to this at least fifty others are pursuing preparatory studies in English and taking violin and piano lessons. A class in Spanish has just been started. Prof. Felix Fernandez, teacher of Spanish at Sophie Newcomb, has kindly proffered his services.

"This will be a great opportunity for young people to acquaint themselves with that language. All this instruction is given without charge, and the teachers are glad to impart it to those who would otherwise be handicapped through life. I believe this a benevolence which the people of this city should appreciate. Of course such a school cannot be conducted without expense to somebody. Heretofore it has been met by a few persons.

"To accommodate the many who are applying for entrance, we must increase our facilities. The work being entirely undenominational, although conducted in a Protestant Church, free to all, I think it is to be commended to all benevolently disposed persons. In contributing toward this benevolence you are investing in young men and young women of New Orleans; you are aiding them to prepare themselves for useful and honorable employment; you are encouraging them to become good citizens and to assist in the social and moral betterment of the entire city. The undersigned intends to bring the merits of this benefaction to the attention of the people of New Orleans, and to earnestly solicit the pecuniary assistance of all who are willing to help needy young men and women who are anxious and determined to help themselves. Very respectfully,

For the Good of Suffering Humanity.

It seems to be a true, but sad fact, that the world is growing colder each day in its fellowship with mankind. Acts of charity to relieve suffering humanity are seldom seen and everything is Graft! Graft! Graft! After all, though, there is one great sustaining consolation. Friends may forsake you and leave you to suffer in loneliness, the outlook on life may seem dark and hopeless, but remember this: "Gray's Ointment" will always relieve your suffering; that is, if it is caused from cuts, boils, bruises, burns, poison oak, frost bites, insect bites, felons, old sores or any kind of skin eruption. Get a box of "Gray's Ointment" from your druggist at 25c, or send your name and address to Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 804 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., and they will send you a free sample, postpaid.

This Home-Made Cough Syrup will Surprise You

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly. A Family Supply at Small Cost.

Here is a home-made remedy that takes hold of a cough instantly and will usually cure the most stubborn case in 24 hours. This recipe makes a pint—enough for a whole family. You couldn't buy as much or as good ready-made cough syrup for $2.50. Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water, and stir 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents worth) in a pint bottle, and add the Sugar Syrup. This keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste—children like it. Braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

You probably know the medical value of pine in treating asthma, bronchitis, and other throat troubles, sore lungs, etc. There is nothing better. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaiacol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this inexpensive remedy have made friends for it in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 236 Maine St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Editorial

Some one has suggested that a good way to fill the empty pews of a church is to fill the pulpit.

"Too much foliage and too little wood," was Sir Walter Scott's characterization of Mrs. Hemans' poetry. This criticism would apply with equal aptitude to some sermons that we have heard.

The Mississippi Baptist says: "In the recent election in Great Britain there were twenty-seven Baptist candidates for Parliament and twenty-two won out." We are not sure that this is a thing of which to be proud. Men who are religious seldom make good politicians.

Bishop Candler says: "A demagogue never talks to others what he whispers to himself." Quite true. Demagogy is hypocrisy—nothing more nor less. It is an attempt to make others think one to be what he knows he is not. The first demagogue of which we have any record was the serpent that with oily tongue beguiled Eve in the Garden of Eden. And it is to be feared that we shall never be rid of his hateful progeny until Satan and all who serve him are cast into the "bottomless pit."

Some people condemn in others as odious what is their own most striking fault. We once knew a pastor and a steward each of whom affirmed of the other that his besetting sin was the love of money. So to-day the champions of the new theology are given to denouncing the old theologians for being so dogmatic, while they themselves are demanding that their theories shall be accepted, though backed by nothing except their own oracular affirmations. If one desires to see dogmatism in full flower, he will find it among the "higher critics" and skeptical scientists of the present day. They tell us, for instance, that Adam is a mythical character and the account of Eden and the Fall an allegory. Demand the proof, and not a shred of evidence can they furnish. They fling back in your face the answer, "Scholarship has so declared." Such intellectual (?) autocracy cannot stand in this democratic age of reason. Let these gentlemen who inveigh against dogma, give us the why and wherefore of their teaching and cease to dogmatize.

THE PRESENT STATUS OF THE UNIFICATION MOVEMENT.

Is Methodism again to be one in the United States? This question is under consideration by accredited representatives of the two episcopal Methodisms and the Methodist Protestant Church, and the followers of Wesley in all sections of the Union are awaiting with the deepest interest the announcement of the outcome of their deliberations. For decades the spirit of fraternity has been increasing among the Methodist bodies in the American Republic, and their relations have been becoming appreciably closer and more cordial. The two larger organizations—the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—have for several years had a Joint Commission on Federation which has done much to allay friction between them and guard against a wasteful expenditure of effort in the same fields. The two denominations already have the same order of worship and a common hymnal, and they have also been able in some instances to merge their missionary enterprises with a view to promoting their strength and efficiency.

This growing feeling of brotherhood led at the last General Conferences of the two bodies to the creation of the Federal Council of Methodism, which is composed of eighteen members equally divided between the two Churches, and the membership of which (quadrennially elected by the General Conferences) is constituted as follows: three Bishops, three traveling preachers, and three laymen from each denomination. The jurisdiction of this Council was defined in the measure which our General Conference adopted authorizing it in the following language: "Said Federal Council shall be entrusted with advisory powers in regard to world-wide missions, Christian education, and the evangelization of the unchurched masses, and also shall have power to hear and finally determine, without appeal from its decisions, all cases of conflict or misunderstanding between the two Churches."

This action was a great forward step in the movement to bring the two episcopal Methodisms into fuller accord and co-operation. The authority given the new tribunal is vastly larger than that formerly vested in the Joint Commission on Federation, which it supplanted. But before its adjournment the General Conference still further increased its powers by the adoption of report No. 4 of the Committee on Church Relations, which reads as follows:

"We have had before us several memorials looking to a closer union of the Methodist Churches of the United States and the earnest appeal for union sent by the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church through its honored representative, Dr. T. H. Lewis, whose thrilling message stirred all hearts. We hail with joy the spirit of Christian unity abroad among the spiritual sons of John Wesley, and sincerely desire that it may grow, to the glory of God. We recommend that our representatives in the Federal Council of Methodism be directed to further, as far as is consistent and practicable, a closer relation between ourselves and the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Protestant Church and other Methodist bodies."

The Federal Council of Methodism, constituted as described above, is at present composed of the following members: From the Methodist Episcopal Church—Bishop Earl Cranston, chairman; Mr. Hanford Crawford, secretary; Bishop J. M. Walden, Bishop L. B. Wilson, Rev. J. F. Goucher, D.D., Rev. G. A. Reeder, D.D., Rev. W. W. Evans, D.D., Mr. R. T. Miller, and Mr. J. A. Patten. From the M. E. Church, South—Bishop A. W. Wilson, chairman; Rev. F. M. Thomas, D.D., secretary; Bishop E. E. Hoss, Bishop Collins Denny, Rev. W. J. Young, D.D., Rev. C. M. Bishop, D.D., Mr. M. L. Walton, President R. S. Hyer, and Mr. W. B. Stubbs. Conferring with the Federal Council of Methodism in its efforts to effect a closer relation between the several Methodist bodies of the nation, is the following committee from the Methodist Protestant Church: Rev. T. H. Lewis, D.D., chairman; Mr. W. N. Swift, secretary; Rev. M. L. Jennings, D.D., Rev. George Shaffer, D.D., Rev. G. D. Hemlick, D.D., Rev. C. D. Sinkinson, D.D., Mr. S. R. Harris, and Mr. J. E. Peterson. These twenty-seven men met in Baltimore in the early part of last December, and after counseling together decided to appoint a sub-committee of nine—three from each Church—with instructions to "consider the causes which produce friction and waste, and injure rather than promote the common cause—namely, the spreading of scriptural holiness through these and other lands, and, if found practicable, to bring to the Joint Commission a plan for submission to the General Conferences and people of the respective Churches, and plan to provide for such unification through reorganization of the Methodist Churches concerned as shall insure unity of purpose, administration, evangelistic effort, and all other functions for which our Methodism has stood from the beginning."

This sub-committee is composed of Bishops Cranston and Walden and Mr. R. T. Miller, of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Bishop Hoss, Dr. Thomas and Judge Walton, of the M. E. Church, South; and Dr. T. H. Lewis, Dr. M. L. Jennings and Mr. S. R. Harris of the Methodist Protestant Church. These gentlemen met at Chattanooga on January 18, but did not give out an account of their proceedings any further than to state that an agreement was reached which they "believe will furnish the Joint Commission when it meets in Chattanooga in May with a practicable working basis for the unification of the Churches through reorganization."

We have gone carefully over these matters because we desire to give our readers who did not keep up with the proceedings of the General Conference at Asheville a clear and accurate understanding of the negotiations now pending. There is no occasion for the slightest uneasiness upon the part of the Methodists of the South that hasty action will be taken by their representatives, or that anything will be done to discredit the principles for which our fathers stood in the past. Our interests are in safe hands. Abler men than those who are acting for us on the Federation Council of Methodism can nowhere be found, and they are thoroughly loyal to the Southern Church and everything that is distinctive in its teaching and polity. Moreover, their powers are merely advisory and suggestive. They have authority to commit us finally to nothing in the way of union. Any plan agreed upon will at last have to come before the General and Annual Conferences. No scheme of unification can be carried into effect which does not command the approval of the masses of Methodism in both the North and South. Let us not be in a hurry to reach a decision as to the wisdom of entering into organic relations with our fellow Methodists of other folds. The more becoming thing to do is to pray that the Commissioners may have divine guidance, and await further developments. When they have laid before us the results of their labors, we will be in a position to discuss the subject more intelligently, and all will have ample time for the expression of their sentiments.

THE LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT.

By Mr. F. E. Ray, Lay Leader of the Corinth District.

The Laymen's Movement under grace,
When rightly manned in every place
Will lift the Church to higher planes,
And bring to her substantial gains.

Her courts neglected, banner furled,
Her men conforming to the world,
Beclows her wheels and reefs her sail,
And lets the gates of hell prevail.

But when we rally round the Cross,
And count all earthly gain but loss,
Then will salvation's currents roll,
Make glad the heart of every soul.

When from our high estate we fell,
Down into death, the grave and hell,
Christ conquered death, hell and the grave,
And died himself, our souls to save.

Could we but count the awful cost,
That bought us back when we were lost,
We'd give him all, sacrifice,
To compensate the sacred price.

If we be loyal to our Lord,
Trust in his grace, believe his word,
He will lighten our every task,
And give us all things that we ask.

Let men who know their sins forgiven,
Have in their souls the hope of heaven,
Bestir themselves with greater zeal,
Work for Christ and the common weal.

Let no man now his duty shirk,
Throw down his cross, refuse to work,
But rally to the flag unfurled,
Till Christ shall conquer all the world.

And then when Christ shall come at last,
And all our toils on earth are past,
He'll take us to his own sweet rest,
To be with him forever blest.

TWO KINDS OF REVIVAL.

The Superficial and the Genuine—How the Latter Starts and Works—May Be Duplicated in Thousands of Churches.

By Bishop Berry.

There are revivals and revivals.

Some revivals, so-called, do no good. They are "gotten up." Machinery abounds. Committees are numerous. Sensational advertising brings a crowd. The papers are full of it. The big chorus choir is the chief inspiration. If the leader is original, unique, grotesque, so much the better for the crowd and the success of the effort. Popular platitudes are preached. The truth is veneered. The thunders of the law do not echo through the church. The way out of sin is made easy. Sinners are not greatly disturbed. Tears of penitence do not stain many cheeks. No bending under the weight of conscious guilt. No heart-cries for pardon. No glorious translation out of darkness into light. But "converts" are enrolled by the hundred. The meetings close, and the wonderful results are told in the news column. Six months pass. Where are the results of the revival? Alas, not many are to be found. The revival is talked about as a great local event, the revivalist is referred to as an extraordinary man, but the community has lapsed into the former state of worldliness and indifference. And the churches have gathered little real strength.

But there is another kind.

It is usually born in the heart of the minister. The Holy Spirit makes clear to him his own spiritual poverty and that of his church. Upon his knees, with open Book before him, he dedicates himself anew to his Master. In the "upper room" he tarries as did the disciples years ago. The pentecostal anointing comes. He is filled and thrilled. His lips are touched with the burning coal.

On the next Sunday morning he goes to his pulpit with swelling heart. He can hardly wait for the moment to come when he may deliver his new message. How strangely the words tremble upon his lips! What an unwonted mellowness has taken possession of his voice! What is that new light which sparkles in his eye? These things the people have noted during the opening devotions, and when he rises to preach they listen with wide open eyes and ears. The sermon has no rhetorical frills. It is a plain, direct, searching message. It cuts like a blade. The whole counsel of God is declared by a man who utters it with some strange new authority. But the declaration is full of tenderness. It awakens but wins. A hush falls upon the people as they see themselves in the gospel mirror which is held before them, and when they are dismissed, many move out of the church silently with the burden of a deep conviction upon their souls.

A week of eager pastoral visiting follows. The awakened minister talks to his people face to face and together they ask God for help. In the course of his visits he finds a saint or two to whom his awakening is no surprise. For weeks they have been praying for the minister and for a revival.

On Saturday evening the official board is called to meet the minister in his study. He tells his brethren plainly of the burden that is upon his soul, and of his anxiety to have his official men lead in a crusade for the lost. A season of prayer and of heart-searching follows. And when the brethren leave, arate tears glisten in eyes unaccustomed to weep.

Sunday comes again. What a day—a bit of pentecost on the fringe of the twentieth century. Congregation, Sunday school and League meeting are in a flutter of expectation, for there are signs of the coming glory.

But the break does not come until the evening hour. Then the Spirit comes upon the congregation. Attention is eager. Reverence is deep. Solemnity is almost painful. People look at each other and wonder what it can mean. But they know that the pulpit before them is aflame, and that the message to which they are listening has found their inmost souls. Conviction comes first upon the church. How dwarfed and faithless the people seem as they look at themselves in the glare of the white light now shining upon them, and a real prayer trembles on lips whose praying has been lifeless and formal. Conviction comes also upon the unsaved. Men struggle to repress a cry of agony and fear. As the minister ends his sermon a wave of holy emotion sweeps through the church and saint and sinner are alike melted by its power. Finally, when the invitation is given to burdened souls to bow at the altar of penitence and consecration, how they come crowding up! Jesus is passing by and the divine touch brings healing to sin-sick souls.

The revival is now here. Extra meetings are a necessity. No need now for elaborate plans, nor numberless committees, nor chorus choirs, nor wide advertising. The people will come. You cannot keep them away.

The work goes forward. What preaching the people hear! Sin is rebuked, repentance enforced, regeneration emphasized, and the witness of the Spirit insisted upon as the divine attestation of the new birth. Christ is lifted up as Savior and Lord until his cross becomes a magnet too powerful to resist. How gladly the moralist, the indifferent, the outcast sinner come to him as their only hope. Some seekers struggle for a time before they "get through," but when they do get through the translation is all the more glorious. Then they go out to tell the good news to others. The town is soon alive with walking evangelists. Up and down the streets they go, and into homes, offices, shops, factories, each impelled by a new yearning to win some friend to the joy and peace which has come to him.

No wonder the revival goes from house to house and from street to street, burning its way to the uttermost limits of the community, and that brands are then carried to nearby towns to light new fires there.

May God save us from the former "revival" and give us thousands upon thousands of the latter. Central Christian Advocate.

A PLEA FOR TIMOTHY.

A Little Sermon to the Pew.

By Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.

In the assignment of the preachers to the work of the present year many changes have been made. Many congregations have new preachers and many preachers have new charges. These changes always produce hardships and the new adjustment cannot be made without friction somewhere. The broadest earthly wisdom of Bishops and presiding elders is not broad enough to mitigate the hardships nor to avert the friction. After things have somewhat settled down, then comes the work for both preacher and congregation. The work of the preacher is simply to give the congregation the best service possible. The work of the congregation is simply to do the best possible for the preacher. These statements apply to preachers of every age and congregations everywhere.

My sermon today is in behalf of the young preachers. I find from reading Paul's Epistles that he was very solicitous about the reception the young preachers met with from the congregations. In his Second Epistle to the Church at Corinth he gives this exhortation: "Now when Timothy comes, see that he be with you without fear." And that is "my text on the present occasion."

The relation of pastor and people creates obligation on both sides. If the preacher is to do his best for the Church, then the Church must do its best for the preacher. One of the first fears that comes into Timothy's heart is the fear that an adequate support may not be given. It is the duty of the Church to eliminate this fear by making ample provision for his support and to do this promptly, willingly and generously. Nothing encourages a preacher more than to know at the very beginning of the year, that his people appreciate the situation and have made liberal provision for him. That takes away immediately his most tormenting fear. I was in a Church recently, when the treasurer of the Board of Stewards announced to the congregation that the board had resolved to pay the pastor his salary every month—that he had only to draw his check on the bank the first of every month and get his money. I looked over to Timothy and saw satisfaction gleaming on his face. The fear of non-support was gone.

Another fear that often troubles Timothy is as to the position he occupies in the esteem of his people. The human heart hungers for confidence and affection and Timothy's heart is human. He wants to know that he has favor in the eyes of his people and is planted deeply in their affections and they ought not to leave him in doubt as to this matter. By all means let him know that you receive him as from God and honor and love him as the messenger of the Lord. This will free Timothy's heart from another fear.

Often in my pastoral life I was troubled with the fear that my people were not praying for me. No man can tell how far the influence of prayer goes, but Timothy has read enough of the Bible to know that his success in the ministry of the gospel depends largely upon "the effectual fervent prayers" of his people in his behalf. A Dutch dominie down East has coined an alliterative aphorism which fits the truth on this point. "The preaching pulpit's power is proportionate to the praying pew's persistence." Paul never let the Church forget that he needed its prayers. He was constantly exhorting the people of God, "Brethren, pray for us." If Timothy is assured that you are praying for him a distressing fear is taken out of his heart and in its place comes a great boldness in pastoral and pulpit work.

There are other things I might bring to your notice, but I think if you will attend faithfully and religiously to the three mentioned you will soon see a very decided change in Timothy's preaching and in his pastoral work and the reflex influence of your work will show itself in a stronger faith and a deeper love and a brighter hope in your own hearts.

I said above that the pastoral relation created a mutual obligation upon pastor and people, and so to even up the matter my next sermon will be to Timothy.

BETTER ENFORCEMENT OF THE LAW NEEDED.

Dear Brother Meek: The following clipping from a recent issue of the Vicksburg Herald is of great interest:

"A great host of accomplished European anarchists and criminals is soon coming to this country to join the thugs, yeggmen and blackhanders who already enjoy American hospitality, according to Andrew D. White, former president of Cornell University and ex-minister to Russia and Germany. In a statement to the press, Dr. White urges the immediate passage of laws to bar from the shores of the United States a flood of undesirables who, he declares, will hasten hither as soon as England expels them. He says:

"The assassin and anarchist whom London plans to be well rid of soon, have an admirable refuge in the United States—a country lying wide open to them, in which they will find more companions, sympathizers and effective helpers than in any other. Our nation affords them the happiest of happy hunting grounds. Events in New York, in Los Angeles, in Chicago, and other cities prove this. This nation with its carelessness in admitting foreign criminals, its ineffective ways of dealing with them and its facilities for clearing them of guilt is becoming more and more attractive for them every day.

"In the United States the number of murders during the year just closed was 8,975, an increase of 900 over the year preceding. Only one murderer in eighty-six was given capital punishment. The number of murders in the United States is to the number in England as 114 to 6. In sundry murder trials the statement was frequently made that our administration of criminal justice as regards murder has become a farce. These trials were by most of those who conducted them and, indeed, by the public at large, evidently considered not as efforts to secure justice, but simply as games, and mostly between pettifoggers; the judges appearing much like umpires at games of football. The men whom we glorify in our courts are the men who can clear murderers in spite of undoubted evidence of guilt. The prosecuting attorneys are largely chosen from among those of least experience in the legal profession and are in many ways absurdly handicapped. Naturally then, the criminal class is becoming in many parts of our country a body somewhat favored by politicians.

"Another thing is the fact that our government really seems to make no serious effort to stop their coming here. No examination of doubtful characters made in our own ports can be effective. The examinations should be made at our consulates abroad, where police records can be obtained and where testimony of value can be taken."

This statement of Dr. White deals with a subject of vast importance, and I think it is time for the molders of public sentiment to cry out and keep on crying out until something is done. It has been a question in my mind for some time whether there is much difference as a menace to society in the man who harbors a criminal in his own house, the one who swears a lie to clear him, and the lawyer or judge who through a mere technicality turns one loose on society.

In the case where the criminal is harbored, he is still a criminal and the one harboring becomes involved in the crime; but in the latter case he is exonerated by a farcical process at law, the judge is considered wise, and the defending lawyer is a hero. This is the disgrace to our civilization.

Any man who has lived for ten years and observed the courts of Mississippi—both circuit and supreme—can call up cases of the most criminal type where justice was defeated by a mere technicality and the whole aim of the law frustrated. These judges are held up as models and urged for positions of the highest honor. When will the time come when justice will unveil her face and the law-abiding and law-loving citizen can feel secure in the protection of those into whose hands the enforcement of the law is placed? Too much of the law-making is put into the hands of little pettifogging lawyers. Some people think when the time comes for the judges to be elected by the people that we will see things change, but I am of the opinion that things will be even worse than now as the way will be opened for the little pettifogging politician to gain the support of the criminal class and ride into office.

Too many of our governors, in appointing the officers to run the administration of the highest office within the gift of a great State, are known to use their power to build political fences, pay political debts, and even to punish political opponents. Strong and aggressive judges have been turned down by governors just because they were politically opposed to them and had rendered themselves unpopular with a larger part of the bar in the district, for the reason they could not be used as tools and would not allow the courts to be administered to suit certain influential men.

When the United States becomes a country of many great cities like England, and these cities are filled with the lawless classes from everywhere, and the reign of the pettifogger and demagogue increases as it has within the last few years, the good people will have to go out of the government business.

No, this state of things is not going to be; for the people see the hand-writing on the wall and are going to demand that our laws be respected and enforced, and these men will ultimately find their proper place.

Some of the greatest and best men I know are lawyers and they are worthy of all honor and praise. The value of the good patriotic lawyer to society cannot be overestimated, and when he fills his place rightly, his calling and trust are as sacred as the teacher's or the preacher's. All power is from above and in the true sense law is power. Our teachers, preachers and editors and all the other molders of public sentiment should take up the cry and keep the cry going until law becomes sacred. All governments should be constructed and run so as to make it as easy as possible for one to keep the law, and give the surest protection to those who do keep it; and, at the same time, make it sure that all violators of it shall suffer the prescribed penalty.

W. H. SAUNDERS.

"REASONS WHY."

Views of Our Leaders on Our National Enterprise.

In a general sense the Church understands that an effort is being made to erect, in Washington City, a building worthy of the great Church to which we belong.

While we are loyal Methodists and undertake to do that which the General Conference declares ought to be done, the reason for doing it may not always be fully understood. That all might be thoroughly informed a number of our leaders have been asked to state in a concise form just why the Church at large should do this work.

The reasons given are strong and when carefully considered ought to move men to give liberally to this worthy enterprise.—Rev. G. S. Sexton, D. D.

Washington is the capital of all the people of the United States. The Methodists are the most numerous, and possibly the most wealthy, of any Protestant denomination in our great country. The South, where our Church is so largely represented, is the most prosperous section of the Union. The people of the South love the government as ardently as any people ever loved their government; they are more purely American than the people of any other section, and are the most orthodox people on the continent. We should, as a denomination, therefore, be represented in the capital city by a great church building, the most notable in the capital, and thus show to all the world the high esteem in which we hold our religious opportunities.—Hon. Asa C. Candler.

Among the many enterprises that our Church now has in hand, few, if any, are more important than the building of a new and stately house of worship for our chief congregation in Washington City. That we ought to have such a house in the capital of the nation, is not open to doubt. Without it we cannot take the rank to which we are entitled among the other denominations that are at work there. There comes a time when a Church that is able to meet a call of this sort, and fails to do it, is doomed to retrograde in spirit and in influence. With the humblest and lowliest chapel that was ever erected, God is well pleased, if it is the best that his people can do; but not, if they can do a great deal better. Our ability is beyond question. Many of our people are rich, and vast numbers of them are well to do. If they only will, they can promptly and easily answer the call of the General Conference, and rear a temple of which no Southern Methodist need be ashamed.

There is good reason why the whole burden of this enterprise, instead of being put upon the shoulders of the local congregation, should be distributed throughout the entire connection. The congregation, while loyal, active and liberal, is limited in its financial resources, being made up largely of men and women who make a bare living and no more. Then, besides, Washington is a representative city. It belongs to the whole country. People from every section flock thither. More and more the Southern states are furnishing their full quota to the great army of government employees, who make it their home. Strangers from abroad visit it in droves, and note with deep curiosity the signs and tokens of religious life, which they find on exhibition. Our status in the eyes of the world at large is determined very largely by what they see of us at this meeting place of the nations. On every ground, the whole Church is bound to assume a large responsibility, and to discharge it in a broad and liberal spirit. It is my earnest hope that wherever Dr. Sexton goes he may meet with the most cordial reception. Let nobody turn him the cold shoulder. His task is a heavy one, and he needs all the assistance and support that can be given him.—Bishop E. E. Hoss, D. D.

THE WOMAN'S JUBILEE.

By Mrs. J. B. Cobb.

The newest movement in the Church is the Woman's National Foreign Missionary Jubilee, which has been sweeping across the continent from the Pacific toward the Atlantic, and will reach its climax in New York in April.

From the first, the meetings have been powerful beyond anticipation. The following features were deeply impressed upon all those who attended the series:

First. The missionary appeal was sufficient to draw crowded audiences in every city. The largest churches were filled session after session, and in some cases overflow meetings held for those unable to gain admission. At the luncheons from eight to fifteen hundred women paid for the privilege of attending. Cincinnati held the largest number, 1,525, with Indianapolis a close second, 1,500, and Denver, Seattle, Kansas City, Chicago and Detroit with a thousand or more.

Second. The audiences were not only large, but also deeply moved by the missionary appeal. A new world vision seemed to sway them; a new response to the fact that missions are not a product, reflex, or side vision of Christianity, but are Christianity itself—its very essence.

Third. The place and influence of the drawing room as a factor in great movements received fresh testimony. Wherever a woman has put herself back of her house in invitations to drawingroom meetings, there it was possible to gather together large numbers of the women not often found in the missionary societies.

Fourth. The emphasis laid on the study class as a means of missionary propaganda resulted in the formation of many classes in churches, Sunday schools, and homes for the study of the present textbook, "Western Women in Eastern Lands." In one church twenty groups of women were organized to meet weekly for prayer and study.

Fifth. In every convention stress was put on the comparatively small number of women already enlisted in missionary endeavor, and the obligation of active propaganda which this lays upon missionary women. In some of the church rallies, the women, by a rising vote, pledged each to secure another member of the society.

Sixth. While the raising of money was in no sense the prime object of the conventions, the supreme object of sacrificial money moving was steadily presented. When in the various church rallies, the opportunity was given for jubilee thank offerings, the response was significant. Over three hundred thousand dollars was given in buildings and endowments. In Indianapolis $85,000 was pledged; in Kansas City $54,000; in Chicago $36,000. Many women who had never given more than fifty dollars to missions, gave the salary of a missionary, or the equipment of a hospital. It was realized as never before that the standards of giving which were right and just for our mothers are not adequate for their daughters. Two cents a week might be noble in the days of poverty, and absolutely ignoble in the days of plenty.

Seventh. The note of prayer was everywhere the deepest undertone of the meetings—wherever prayer had abounded, there a strong sense of the spiritual was present. Speaker after speaker emphasized the fact that women's missionary work was born in prayer and urged the privilege of definite, specific, intercessory prayer as the secret of success at home and abroad.

Eighth. The most triumphant note of the meetings was that of unity. The local committees of from one to two hundred women rejoiced in a new consciousness of their oneness in Christ. The great audiences were one heart, one soul, as they listened to the story of the slow-rising empire of Christ in the Far East.

Livingstone's great word to Stanley, "The end of the exploration is the beginning of the undertaking," in the form in which it has been paraphrased at Edinburgh, "The end of the convention is the beginning of the campaign," was adopted as a slogan of the Jubilee. Word that comes from every city shows that as never before women are bending themselves to the carrying out of the three-fold purpose of the jubilee meetings: to gain a better conception of the opportunity confronting the Christian Church in unevangelized lands, to deepen the prayer life, to enlarge the sense of obligation and contributions of Christian women.

Jubilees will be held in Louisville, January 26 and 27, and Nashville, January 30 and 31; Washington, February 2 and 3, and Baltimore, February 7 and 8. Will not the women all over Southern Methodism pray daily that thousands of our indifferent women may be enlisted in this great cause, and that the whole Church may be drawn nearer to Christ?

A FULL-FLEDGED PREACHER.

Dear Dr. Meek:—In the Advocate of January 12 a brother who announces himself "as just out of college and ready for work," also announces that he is "a full-fledged holiness preacher, and will not compromise an inch."

What does the brother mean by "full-fledged"? I do not know unless he intends to say that he is about grown and prepared to give the Church, not only the best, but the last word. It would strain the most of us to put forth such a claim, for we have but little more than sprouted our pin feathers. But, perhaps, it is not immoderate in one who has spent twelve months in one college and thirty-six in another to make such a boast. I have yet to meet the first graduate of Millsaps or Vanderbilt who claims to be full-fledged. The great Bishop Galloway after he had been preaching two or three years told me that he was a "fledgeling."

What does the brother mean by "holiness preacher"? Does he mean that he is a new kind of a preacher turned out of a college with a new gospel, or that he is in a class by himself? And what object did he have in view in thus announcing himself? It reminds me of a statement I saw in one of our church papers many years ago. A preacher belonging to an Eastern Conference was called to conduct a meeting in Memphis. He wrote a series of letters to his home paper about the meeting. The opening sentence of his first letter was: "God is come to Memphis." The inference was that God had never before been in Memphis. The point is easily seen.

Our young brother just out of two colleges, full grown and equipped, evidently desires to go a gunning. When he reaches the hunting grounds and finds a Wesleyan Methodist who does not believe in Scriptural holiness and does not preach it, my advice is: Shoot him on the spot.

JOHN W. BOSWELL.

Shannon, Miss.

A layman criticized his pastor because when he entered the pulpit the pastor did not kneel but simply bowed his head. The pastor replied: "Do you, when you enter your pew, even bow your head?" No, that layman lived in a glass house and yet he threw stones.—Central Christian Advocate.

According to the Montgomery Advertiser, Methodist celebrities have lately been plentiful in the capital city of Alabama. At a Laymen's banquet there on the evening of January 23, Bishop Denny, Mr. J. The birthplace of Abner Judson, in Malden, Mass., has come into the possession of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society and will be used as a home for foreign missionaries returned to America for rest and recuperation. It was constructed as a parsonage for the Congregational Church in that city when William Emerson, father of Ralph Waldo Emerson, was pastor.

Bishop Denny spent January 22d at Opelika, Ala., where he preached to the great delight of the people. The next day he delivered his great address on Robert E. Referring to the present religious situation in Korea, the Central Christian Advocate of Kansas City says: "There are eight denominations at work in Korea, two Anglican and six American. These denominations are in love and harmony with each other, dividing the land between themselves for gospel evangelism. Writing from Oxford, Miss., under date of the 25th ult., Rev. J. C. Park, pastor of the M. E. Church, South, in that city says: "We have had Bishop Quayle of the Methodist Episcopal Church with us for the past week, the occasion being the meeting of the Upper Mississippi Conference. He is truly a great man, measured by any standard. On the platform he is irrefragable. In the pulpit his eloquence is torrential, a veritable Niagara. The warm personal friend of Bishop Galloway, he is his successor in American Methodism in feeling and platform power. He preached at our Church Sunday night to a packed house."

Trinity Church, in New York, the richest in America, and one of the richest in the world, and which has for many years been accused of owning the worst tenements in the city, has, in a statement recently published, declared that in the past eighteen months it has demolished one hundred and fifty-three tenements, causing twenty-two hundred and ninety-five persons to seek new and doubtless better homes. In the future it will build business blocks only, and this policy will soon dispose of the charge, whether deserved or not, that it was a bad landlord.—Western Christian Advocate.

The fourth Ecumenical Methodist Conference, as our readers have already been advised, is announced to meet in Toronto, Ontario, October 4-17 of this year. The three hundred delegates of the Western section will include upwards of forty Bishops and general superintendents, and will represent not only the United States and its possessions and the broad provinces of Canada, but many foreign fields, and practically all the continents.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

CHURCH EXTENSION AID.

By Rev. W. F. McMurtry, D. D.

The annual meeting of the Board of Church Extension will soon be held, and at that time all applications for aid will be considered that come before the board in the regular way. It is important that all who are interested should know just how to proceed.

1. All applications must be made upon the printed form provided by the board for that purpose. New blanks have been prepared, and are of four kinds: Church, general board; parsonage, general board; church, Conference board; parsonage, Conference board. The names of these blanks signify their respective purposes. Use the right form, one form must not be substituted for another. These blanks may be had gratis from this office. The Conference Board secretaries also have a supply of the last two (Conference Board) forms.

2. After the application paper is properly filled out with all desired information, it should at once go to the Conference Board in accord with the following rule:

"Every application for consideration at the hands of the General Board must first receive the approval of the Board of Church Extension of the Conference from which it comes, and said approval must be given at the regular meeting of said board or of its executive committee held in the month of March. Said boards or committees shall consider all the applications from their respective Conferences, and forward such as they approve so as to reach the Board's office at Louisville, Ky., by April 1 of each year. Each application so approved must have the action of the Conference Board written therein, certified by the president and secretary, and all the applications from a given Conference must be by the Conference Board grade, and marked in the order of their relative importance, and the secretary is hereby directed not to put on the calendar any application not in conformity with this rule."

At the last meeting of the Board Bishop Wilson called especial attention to this rule and the confusion arising from the presentation of applications other than those reaching the docket in the regular way, and offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"That hereafter no application be allowed consideration at the hands of the Board, except in case of manifestly providential disaster, except such as reach the Board in the regular way."

3. Especial attention is called to the fact that the various Conference Boards hold their executive committee meetings in March. It is required that every application shall go before the Conference Board or its executive committee for consideration, approval and grading. Therefore, do not fail to have your application in the hands of your Conference Board secretary by March 1.

4. For the past three years the rule with regard to personal representation in the annual meeting of the board has not been strictly enforced. Consequently, at the last annual meeting Bishop Hoss called attention to the growing confusion and unfairness resulting from the presence of individual representatives of applications. The matter was discussed by several of the brethren, and Bishop Candler presented the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the secretary of this board be instructed, in his correspondence with those making applications for aid, to call their attention to the rule of the board, and to say to them that in view of the damage to the work of the board hitherto, henceforward this rule will be strictly enforced."

The rule of the board to which reference is made is as follows:

"The board has not time to hear oral arguments or statements in behalf of applicants, and, while considering applications for aid, its doors are closed. Representations other than those contained in the application can be made in writing or through members of the board. A different rule would be obviously unfair to applicants too far away or too poor to send representatives."

5. The demands upon the board have been increasing from year to year, and the increase in demands has so far exceeded the increase in receipts that it is hoped, except in cases of extreme need, no call will be made from communities that are established and can possibly meet their own needs. The board, in its generosity, has made appropriations in excess of its receipts from year to year, until it is doubtful if the approaching annual meeting will find the board in position to appropriate as large a sum as it has for the past two or three years.

6. New fields at home and in foreign lands are calling loudly for help, and in the undeveloped territory the necessities are imperative. Let the brethren of the older Conferences remember that it is our duty to enter the doors that have opened wide to us, and help make possible the establishment of our Church in these fields by refraining from asking help where it is possible to get along without it.

"MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE."

By Rev. W. G. Harbin.

Rev. M. M. Black, one of the strongest preachers of the Mississippi Conference, says:

"MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE," is one of the most helpful and stimulating books on the devotional line that I have read in many a day, and is worthy of a wide circulation among both preachers and laymen. The vital theme treated of in this meritorious little volume, not, however, in a controversial, or theological, but in a practical way, is the work of the Holy Spirit, whose divine office and mission are, alas, too often lost sight of, or minimized in this day of multiplied ecclesiastical machinery and dependence upon organized effort.

I have seen some larger and far more pretentious volumes on the doctrine of the Holy Spirit that are not half so illuminating and desirable as this booklet, which is a gem of its kind.

"The earnest reading of this little book will in many cases mark an epoch in the life of him who reads it."

A PLEA FOR CAMELS IN THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

The following address was delivered in the United States Senate on March 3d, 1851, by the Hon. Jefferson Davis, then Senator from Mississippi, in advocacy of a measure appropriating $30,000 for the purchase and introduction of 50 camels into the army, and for the employment 10 Arabs for one year to show how to care for and use them. This speech was read in the House of Representatives by Congressman Olmsted, of Pennsylvania, as if it were his own while the Army Appropriation Bill was under consideration a few days since, and when, having finished, he announced the name of the distinguished author it created not a little interest and amusement. We reproduce it because every thing connected with the illustrious President of the Confederacy is of interest to the people of the South. (Editor.)

"This animal, though associated with man from his earliest history, so far back that we can not tell when the camel existed in the wild state, is little known in our country. It has even been a matter of dispute among anatomists as to its anatomical organization. But I think if Senators were aware of the extent to which this animal is used they would be seriously inclined to adopt this proposition. It is truly, as figuratively, the 'ship of the desert.' It now conveys a great trade between China and St. Petersburg and Moscow. It is kept in Circassia. It is used by the English army in the East Indies in transportation, and even carrying light guns on their backs. It was used by Napoleon in his Egyptian campaign; he understood the value of a dromedary corps in dealing with the race to which the wild Apaches and Comanches bear a close resemblance. If gentlemen knew how great is the embarrassment, especially in a cavalry corps, in waiting for a great train of mules to draw the guns with which they are incumbered, I do not think the proposition would excite a laugh, nor would gentlemen smile at the proposed introduction of camels if they knew how essential they were in the pursuit of wild Indians who now escape from our cavalry in nearly every pursuit which is made. But recently from an officer who has been well tried as a commander, a band of Apaches came upon his soldiers, dashed through his camp, got some seven or eight horses, loosened his horse from the picket, and ran off with them. In a still more striking case, as some soldiers were playing cards upon a blanket, seeing the Apaches coming, they sprang to their feet. An Apache caught the blanket upon his lance and galloped off with it. Pursuit was made, but it was unavailing. These dromedaries, who before they start drink enough water to last a hundred miles, traveling continually without rest at the rate of 15 or 20 miles an hour, would overtake these bands of Indians. This the cavalry can not do. They would have the advantage of generally being able to capture them in one day. They would certainly overtake them very soon.

"There is another advantage. A man who rides a dromedary can take an infantryman behind him and carry him to the place to which he is to go. The weight is scarcely felt. Small cannon, if necessary, can be mounted upon them and carried over mountains and deserts and plains where horses can not draw them. The efficiency of these dromedaries and camels is so great that if they will bear our climate and the food of our country I believe that it will be the greatest stroke of economy which has ever been made in regard to transportation. This is an experiment which ought to be tried, but when we remember that they are used in the same parallel of latitude and are accustomed to eat the hardest shrubs, to drink the same brackish water which is said to exist in some portions of our western desert, we may expect they will soon be capable of doing here all that they are capable of doing in the East.

"The appropriation is to cover the extent of the selection of the best animals of the various breeds. It is not like going into the market at Alexandria and purchasing such camels as may be offered, but we propose to go to the desert and get all the varieties of breeds, and then into the mountain districts and collect others, to constitute a single group of 50. In that way it is evident that the expense must be greatly increased beyond what it would be to purchase all of any one kind of camels, two-humped, one-humped, or even the fleet dromedaries, and buying them all in one place and bringing them to the nearest port and shipping them. They certainly would cost less than the kind it is proposed to bring here. Besides, it is proposed to bring equipment and men who understand them, dromedary saddles, bridles, and drivers, in order that the experiment, if attempted at all, may be attempted upon something like a sound basis."

LIGHT THROUGH THE STORM.

A very beautiful story is told in a recent publication of a boat out at sea carrying in it a father and his little daughter. As they were steering for the shore they were overtaken by a violent storm, which threatened to destroy them. The coast was dangerous.

The mother, looking out anxiously into the storm from the safe shelter of their shore home, finally lighted a lamp and started up the worn stairway to the attic window.

"It won't do any good, mother," the son called out after her.

But the mother went up, put the light in the window, knelt beside it and prayed.

Out in the storm the daughter saw a glimmer of gold on the water's edge.

"Steer for that," the father said. Slowly but steadily they came toward the light, and at last were anchored in the little sheltered harbor by the cottage.

"Thank God!" cried the mother, as she heard their glad voices and came down the stairway with a lamp in her hand. "How did you get here?" she said.

"We steered by mother's light," answered the daughter, "although we did not know what it was out there."

"Ah!" thought the boy, a wayward lad, "it is time I was steering by my mother's light." And ere he slept he surrendered himself to God and asked Him to guide him over life's rough sea.

Months went by, and disease smote him. "He can't live long," was the verdict of the doctor; and one stormy night he lay dying.

"Do not be afraid for me," he said as they wept; "I shall make the harbor, for I am steering by my mother's light."—Western Christian Advocate.

WAITING FOR ME.

There is a form of a girlish mold
Under the spread of the branches old
At the well-known beechen tree,
With the sunset lighting her tresses of gold,
Waiting for me.

There is a sweet voice, with cadence deep,
Of one that singeth our babe to sleep
And often turns to see
If the stars through the lattice begin to peep,
And watches the lazy dial creep—
Waiting for me.

Long since those locks are laid in the clay,
Long since the voice has passed away,
On earth no more to be;
But still in the spirit land afar
She is yet the dearest of those that are Waiting for me.

C. A. McNEIL—A LOVING TRIBUTE.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

In the year 1857 Conference met in the town of Brandon, Miss., Bishop Early presiding. There were admitted on trial that year seventeen. Among the number was one Charles A. McNeil, of Wilkinson county. He was a large, fine looking man, about 35 years of age and seemed to be in excellent health. He had a wife and one step-son, Fred Davis. Brother McNeil's wife was a Widow Davis when he married her. Her maiden name was Huff. She had a brother, Newton L. Huff, who was a local preacher in our Church. Mrs. McNeil was in some respects a superior woman—educated, refined, intelligent and a good Church worker.

Brother McNeil had been, in the early part of his young manhood, a drunkard and perhaps a gambler, besides having other bad habits. Just who was instrumental in bringing him into fellowship with the people of God, I do not know. But one thing certain, he was genuinely converted, and no mistake about it. The work was deep and thorough. In a short while he began exercising his gifts and graces in various ways. He could sing, pray and exhort, and do it successfully. He had no education, having never gone to school; but he had religion and good common sense and ability to learn. His first year in the Conference he served what was then called Buffalo Circuit, in Wilkinson county, Natchez District, and did a fine year's work. Many were awakened, converted and joined the Church. The year following, he was junior preacher on Fayette Circuit with H. F. Johnson, preacher in charge. In 1860 he served Meadville Circuit, and at Conference that year he reported 166 additions to the Church. A good work. The year following he received ninety-three new members on the same work. In 1862-63 he served Amite Circuit. In 1864 he, with many others, was left without an appointment. After this, for two of three years, he was put in charge of colored missions.

At Conference in Brookhaven in 1866, charges of drunkenness were preferred against him. He stood on the Conference floor and pleaded guilty of the charge, wept bitterly, begged the Conference to have compassion on him and forgive him, with a promise that he would do so no more. Some plead for him. Among the number, if I mistake not, was Dr. William H. Watkins, John G. Jones and others. He was suspended from the functions of the ministry for six months, and of course, left without work. He was one of those peculiarly constructed men that could not be idle and steer clear of sin. He bore up nobly for a while, taking no part in divine worship, thinking that the penalty inflicted on him forbade his taking part even in prayer meeting. The devil, of course, took every advantage of the situation, tempting him on every side and in every way he could till he, assisted by a bad woman, ruined him.

I have often thought if Bro. McNeil had been fully understood by his brethren and had been dealt with gently, patiently, etc., he could have been saved to the Church. I spent a night with him just before, and another just after, the Conference of 1876, in Natchez, Miss., expelled him from the Church and ministry. He talked freely to me about the matter. He said he was guilty of both charges, viz., drunkenness and adultery, and knew the Conference would have to expel him. At the same time, said he had repented of the awful crimes, and felt God had forgiven him.

He afterwards moved to Natchez, went into the mercantile business and died of yellow fever in 1868 or '69. While in Natchez, in a conversation with some who scoffed at religion, he said in a positive tone, "Gentlemen, say what you please, I know there is a reality in the religion of Jesus, for I have experienced it, and I will tell the devil so, if necessary."

It was in November, 1858, I met for the first time Brother McNeil. He was my first wife's uncle, and had been her guardian for some time, providing her with a good home. She was perfectly devoted to her uncle and loved him like a father. It was at this same time that I met for the first time my first wife. One year afterward we were married in his home. He proved always a true friend and brother. I soon learned to love him like a brother.

How he died, I have never heard. Whether he in his last moments returned to the Lord I never heard, but trust he did. How tenderly we ought to deal with erring brethren! In 1865-66 I worked faithfully with a blackslidden preacher for twenty months, and was amply rewarded. He was wonderfully reclaimed in September 1866, and as long as he lived proved faithful and true.

BILL OF INJUNCTION FILED BY THE BISHOPS IN THE VANDERBILT CASE.

INJUNCTION GRANTED BY THE COURT ON OCTOBER 25, 1910.

The State of Tennessee, Ex. Rel., A. W. Wilson, et al.
vs.
The Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, et al.
This cause came on to be heard before the Honorable John Allison, Chancellor, etc., upon the motion of complainants for an injunction as prayed in the bill; and notice having been given to the defendants, the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, and Vanderbilt University, and both complainants and defendants having appeared by counsel, and some of the complainants and some of the defendants in person, it appearing to the Court from the bill and statements made by counsel both for complainants and defendants, that a meeting of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University has been called for this day, Tuesday, October 25, 1910, in the parlors of Wesley Hall at 10 a. m., for the purpose of considering and acting upon a proposed affiliation of Vanderbilt University and the George Peabody College for Teachers, said affiliation comprising the interchange of work and the exchange or sale of real property; and it further appearing to the Court that members of the Board of Trust are present in the city from several States, and the complainants not asking for any injunction against said meeting:

It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that an injunction issue enjoining the Board of Trust and the Executive Committee thereof, and the executive officers of Vanderbilt University, and Vanderbilt University, from executing or delivering and consummating any sale or exchange of real estate or contracts between the said universities; but no injunction is issued against the holding of said meeting and action by the Board of Trust upon said matters. But only the consummation of the said transactions is enjoined.

It is further ordered by the Court that an injunction issue enjoining the defendants R. F. Jackson, Claude Waller, and J. A. Robins from acting or participating in the meeting of the Board of Trust called for this day or acting as members of said Board of Trust until the further orders of this Court.

It is further ordered that the said injunction issue upon the complainants giving an injunction bond as required by law in the sum of $5,000.

The foregoing is a correct copy of the order and decree of the Court, on the application of the complainants for an injunction.

JOHN ALLISON, Chancellor.

APPENDIX.

Document 1. No. 7631. Exhibit A. Petition. Filed April 23, 1873. (Enrolled in Book 3, page 469.) The Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Ex Parte.

To the Hon. W. F. Cooper, Chancellor, etc.
The petition of the Central University of the M. E. Church, South, a corporation chartered heretofore by the Chancery Court at Nashville.

Petitioner would state to Your Honor that heretofore, by a decree of record in this Court, it was chartered as a university of learning, a certified copy of its charter is here filed, marked "Exhibit B," and made a part of this petition. Since it has obtained its charter its condition is so altered that it now desires to have an amendment to its said charter, which amendments are as follows:

It having been thought politic to limit the number of the Board of Trust to two from each co-operating Conference, the names of Jordan Stokes and Robert A. Young be dropped from the list. Some Conferences not having co-operated in the purposes of said institution, it is now desirable to omit from the list of trustees the names of the persons heretofore incorporated and who represented said Conferences, as follows—viz.: Christopher D. Oliver, William Dickson, of the North Alabama Conference; Edward Wadsworth and W. W. Byrd, of the Alabama Conference; W. L. C. Huntcutt and Thomas Christian, of the Mississippi Conference; and James L. Borden and William H. Foster, of the Louisiana Conference.

A large donation having been made to petitioner by C. Vanderbilt, of New York, of not less than $500,000, as set out in "Exhibit C," herewith filed and made a part of this petition, petitioner prays that its name and style be changed to that of "The Vanderbilt University," and that the terms and conditions of said gift be incorporated as a part of said charter.

Petitioner also prays that the words, "or the resolutions of the convention at Memphis set out herein, which resolutions are hereby adopted as a part of this charter," on page 12 of the printed charter here filed, be stricken out and omitted, and that said charter may be so altered and amended so as to read as set out in "Exhibit D" here filed and made a part of this petition. Petitioner asks that this be done in order that the ends of its creation may be the more readily attained.

Petitioner prays general and full relief in the premises.

EDWARD H. EAST, Solicitor.

EXHIBIT "B."

Exhibit B. Amended Charter. Decree entered June 16, 1873. (Minute Book X, page 309.) Central University of Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Ex Parte.

This matter came on this day to be heard before the Chancellor upon the petition heretofore filed, and publication of the matter thereof having heretofore been made according to the statutes in such cases made and provided, the Court is pleased to order and decree that the name and style of the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a corporation heretofore chartered under the constitution and laws of this State as a university, of learning, and with all the powers, rights, and privileges of such corporations as are now given and conferred by the laws of the State of Tennessee, or may hereafter be given and conferred, be changed to the name and style of The Vanderbilt University, by which name it shall hereafter be known and sue and be sued, hold and receive property, confer degrees, and do any and all things which, by the present and future laws of Tennessee, it may be empowered to do.

It is further decreed that all the rights of property, powers to contract, privileges, immunities, and franchises which heretofore by law, under the decree of this Court, were conferred upon the said corporation under the name and style of the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the property or rights thereof which have heretofore been secured to said corporation pass to The Vanderbilt University, and its assigns and successors, forever, for the purposes of said corporation. ## DOCUMENT 2.

Copy of Resolution Passed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Held at Louisville in 1874. Minutes, Page 577.

The following resolution was then offered, read, and adopted by a rising vote:

RESOLUTION ON THE VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

Whereas we regard the establishment and endowment of institutions of learning under the control of the Church as of vital importance to the welfare of our people, and that these objects address themselves to our convictions and appeal to every principle of humanity and religion and call for the most liberal devising, and for the most generous and complete consecration; and whereas the example of the wealthy in the bestowal of their means for the promotion of a liberal culture and for the support of educational institutions of a high grade is worthy of imitation and hearty commendation; and whereas we have heard with pleasure of the munificent gift of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, of New York, of over half a million of dollars to build and endow a university under the control of the M. E. Church, South; therefore be it

Resolved, That we are thankful to God, from whom is every good gift and every perfect gift, for this instance of enlarged beneficence; that we tender to Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt the expression of our appreciation of his noble generosity; and that we will ever pray that the richest blessing of heaven may rest upon him.

DOLLY MADISON AND ANNE ROYALL.

Old, queer, sharp-tongued Anne Royall—traveler, editor and interviewer—was for many years a familiar figure in the streets of Washington, trotting indomitably about her business, very poor, very persistent, often troublesome, often rebuffed, but with qualities of honesty and courage to be respected.

There is given, in the recent story of her life, by Sarah Harvey Porter, a delightful glimpse of her visit to ex-President Madison and his wife. The contrast between the gracious, mature beauty of charming Dolly Madison, elegant in her rustling black silk, and the funny little limping, shabby figure in antiquated skirts and ridiculous wadded bonnet, could scarcely have been enhanced.

As usual, old Anne Royall had tramped to save carriage hire; as usual, her errand, probably none too welcome to her hosts, was to secure an interview and use a descriptive background. But Dolly Madison saw in the absurd, inquisitive, bespattered person before her neither the reporter nor the guy; only an aged and weary woman, who was her guest. She hurried to bring her a glass of water; then, quite simply, stooped and retied her loosened shoe laces and wiped the Virginia mud from the tired old feet.

It is small wonder that Mrs. Royall's clothes were queer. She was scarcely of a bent of mind frivolously to pursue the fashions had she had the time and money; but she had neither. Her paper, The Huntress, of which she was owner, editor and chief reporter, once published conspicuously on the editorial page a notice which is, perhaps, unique in journalism:

"No paper will be issued from this office this week. We really must take one week once in ten years to fix up our wardrobe, which is getting shabby. Our next issue will welcome Congress."—The Youth's Companion.

VALUE OF A GOOD REPUTATION.

Susie Burke came in from the garden one warm summer afternoon with her little scissors in one hand and a lot of paper dolls and dolls' clothes in the other.

"Why, Susie!" exclaimed mother. "What in the world have you been doing to yourself?"

"Susie Burke, whatever possessed you to cut your hair like that?" exclaimed Helen, her eldest sister.

"O-o-h! What will papa say? He just hates bangs!" put in Harry Burke, Susie's brother.

"How could you do such a thing my child?" asked Susie's mother, with looks of mingled astonishment and displeasure.

Susie's face grew red and she looked ready to cry. She put her hand uneasily to her forehead, across which the soft dark hair which was usually combed smoothly back, fell in a very irregular line. It was easy to see that the "banging" had been done by no practiced hand.

"I didn't do it, mamma," said Susie.

"You didn't do it? Who did, then?"

"I don't know, truly, mamma."

"Why, Susie, how can that be possible?" said mamma.

"Why, Susie Burke, what a story!" exclaimed Harry.

"Hush, Harry! Don't accuse your little sister of telling what isn't true. Where have you been all the time since lunch, Susie?"

"In the arbor in the garden, cutting out dresses for my dollies," said Susie, holding up what she had in her hand as evidence of the truth of her words.

"All the time?" queried mamma.

"Yes, all the time. I haven't been anywhere else."

"And you didn't cut any of your hair—not the least little lock?"

"No, not the least little bit. I knew papa wouldn't like it."

"Did anyone come into the garden while you were there?"

"I didn't see anybody, mamma."

"Well, if that isn't a mystery!" exclaimed Mrs. Burke.

"It's awful hard to believe, I think," said Helen.

"We must believe it. Little Susie has never been known to tell a lie. Whatever any of my children tell me, I shall believe is true till they have clearly proved their words untrustworthy," said mamma, firmly.

"But how could such a thing be?" argued Helen.

"Her hair is cut all jagged, exactly as a child would do if she tried to cut it herself; and yet she didn't do it, and doesn't know who did."

"And she asked papa the other day if she might have her hair cut just like Nellie Eastman's," said Harry.

"I didn't do it, truly, truly, mamma," was all poor Susie could urge, while she nestled closer within the encircling arm whose close clasp seemed to assure her of defence against the displeasure and distrust of all the world.

"We shall have to wait and see what papa will say," said Mrs. Burke, after a moment of perplexed thought.

"Will he be very angry?" asked Susie. "Will you tell him I didn't do it?"

"Or consent to its being done?" cross-questioned Helen.

"I didn't even know it was done till just as I got up to come in," Susie declared. "I thought something felt odd, and I put my hand up; and it was all cut, so."

This was a mystery, indeed. Nor could papa solve it, though he questioned his little daughter even more closely than her mother and sister had done.

"We must believe that she speaks the truth," he said at last. "I should be sadly disappointed and grieved if I found I couldn't depend on the word of a child of mine. Go to mamma, and let her make the cutting even, Susie. Since I must submit to seeing you with your hair short, it must be done in better style than that."

"I'm sorry, papa, since you don't like it. Will you kiss me?" said Susie, lifting her shorn head timidly.

Her father stooped and kissed her. "You needn't feel bad when you are not to blame, my child. I believe you, though it's the most incomprehensible thing!"

It remained the most incomprehensible thing for a week or more. Then, one morning soon after breakfast, they had a caller—two callers, in fact—Mrs. Lake, their nearest neighbor, and Rollie, her youngest son, a merry rogue of ten or eleven years.

The boy looked shy and shamefaced, and kept out of sight behind his mother as much as possible, while she explained the reason of her call.

"I have just found out that this boy of mine has been guilty of a very naughty trick," said Mrs. Lake.

"I thought you ought to know, as Susie might be blamed unjustly. I brought him here that he might confess. Now, Rollie, tell Mrs. Burke."

"I cut Susie's hair," Rollie blurted out, with his eyes fastened to the floor.

"But how! It has been the greatest mystery to us! How could you do it and Susie not know it?"

"Oh, she was asleep!" said Rollie. "I found her there in the arbor, leaning back, with a paper doll in one hand and the scissors just dropped on her lap from the other, and so I thought I'd bang her hair. I'm ever so sorry, and I won't never do so again," said Rollie, penitently.

"Did she get much blame for it?" inquired Mrs. Lake.

"I couldn't think how you could help believing she did it, however she might deny it."

"We couldn't understand it at all," said Mrs. Burke, "but we believed Susie, though everything seemed against her, because the child never yet told us a lie."—Zion's Herald.

THE MISSIONARY VOICE.

The missionary magazine of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, The Missionary Voice, has just reached my table. It is a neat sheet of sixty-four pages, full to overflowing with matter of the greatest possible interest to all who are interested in advancing the kingdom of Christ.

As Dr. Plinson has very happily expressed it, "There is the life blood of three periodicals—Go Forward, the Woman's Missionary Advocate and our Homes—flowing through its veins." Each of the periodicals referred to was ably edited; hence we must conclude that The Missionary Voice, having such splendid blood coursing throughout its veins, cannot but be one of the very best magazines of its kind published. Of this there is not the least doubt, as the present issue will prove to those who will take the pains to examine it.

The Missionary Voice should be in the home of every Methodist that lays any serious claim to being either a Christian, or a follower of John Wesley. Both our Lord, who laid the foundation of redemption, and John Wesley, who through Christ, laid the foundation of Methodism, were aflame with the missionary spirit. Inspiration comes first through information. What our Church needs is information as to the awakening condition of the heathen world. Then, with that knowledge, and the abiding presence of the Holy Spirit, there can be but one result: an active interest in the "salvation of the world in this day and generation."

We can confidently look to no man to put The Missionary Voice into the hands of the people save the pastor. Well do I know of the thousands of things that are dependent upon the activity of the pastor, and well do I know that time and again we labor with but little visible result; but, brother, results are not ours to care for. It is our business to bring inspiration to our people through the knowledge and the presence of Christ. Let us then make a canvass reaching every member in behalf of The Missionary Voice, and by that means bring to our parishioners the consciousness of the "Macedonian cry" that is today audible to every soul that lives in close proximity to God, and uses his God-bestowed endowments to discover when and where he can best serve the interest of the Almighty. The price of the magazine is 50 cents a year.

Conference Missionary Secretary.

LIFE.

By Rev. E. Nash Broyles.

In Christ man finds the fountain head of life and the direction in which he is to go. Emerson says, "Man is a stream whose source is hidden"; but the source of true life is not so much hidden. True life is as a stream which has its issue from the fountain of faith. It courses through the channel of hope by the gravitation of love and mingles its waters with the great deep of eternity, which bathes the shores of Paradise.

Thus man gets his direction, and, as the "Great Father of Waters" unites with contributing streams and bears upon its mighty bosom to the commerce of the ages, launching them into the expansive gulf, so does the life of man unite with those about it and grow and grow and grow, when he finds himself unavoidably linked with all human destiny and himself an unsuspecting pensioner on the waters of human love.

We cannot free ourselves from this human dependence if we would, and we wouldn't if we could. When Christ said, "Love one another," he foresaw that human society must base its hopes on the harmony of individual efforts; that the stream of human life must gain volume and momentum as it mingles with added tributaries and gives freely of its bosom for the barks of human sympathy. The ideal society is one in which worthy human beings unite for mutual love and service, as a little band of friends, or as one great family under the sun.

Editorial.

AN ILLOGICAL PROTEST.

A writer, signing himself "An Insider," contributed an article to Zion's Herald of January 18, under the caption, "Shall the Methodist Episcopal Church Be Dismembered," in which earnest protest is made against the "unification of American Methodism through reorganization." The points that he attempts to make in the course of his discussion may be summed up as follows: (1) The scheme of having four divisions of Methodism in the United States—three white and one colored—with a General Council over the whole, would tend to divide rather than to unify; (2) that it would set the negro adrift; (3) that it would result in the Methodist Episcopal Church having to turn over its property interests and work in the South to the Southern Methodists.

Without desiring to be understood as committing ourselves to the proposal to effect a consolidation of Methodism in the United States through reorganization before the terms of the suggested union are disclosed, we do not hesitate to say that the arguments advanced against the plan by "Insider," are weak and calculated to exert but little obstructive force.

In the first place, his statement that each division of the newly organized Church "would be legislative for itself," and that the General Council would meet at long intervals, have no legislative authority, and sustain much the same relation to the four General Conferences as the Ecumenical gathering of Methodism does to the Methodist bodies of the world, is purely a gratuitous assumption upon his part. It does not at all follow because some measure of autonomy would be left each division under the new arrangement that it would be wholly independent, and that the General Council would have vested in it little or no authority. Each State in the American Union has its reserved rights which cannot be invaded, but the Federal Government is far from being destitute of power in the administration of our national affairs. Indeed, the American Republic, with its governmental functions divided between Congress, on the one hand, and the Legislatures of the States, on the other, is the wonder and admiration of the world. Is it impracticable to construct a church government upon the same principle? If so, why so? It seems to us that to entrust the common and larger interests of American Methodism to a great federal body, and leave the local and smaller matters to each division might be wise and promotive of the general good. It would certainly allow flexibility in legislation and make it possible to take into consideration the peculiar needs of the Church in the different sections of the country. The trend of government everywhere is toward "home rule." Germany has lately granted it to Alsace-Lorraine, and the ablest of English statesmen are proposing to accord it to Ireland and other provinces of the British Isles. Why should this democratic principle be ignored in the reorganization of Methodism in the United States, where the very atmosphere is charged with the spirit of freedom?

"Insider's" second objection, that "the negro would be set adrift," will carry but little weight with people who think. As we have lately had occasion to observe in the columns of the Advocate, the negro Methodists have achieved their largest success in the independent bodies. The African Methodist Episcopal Church has far outstripped the negro wing of the Methodist Episcopal Church both in numbers and in the amount of property owned. A perpetual wardship does not tend to develop self-reliance and strength. Moreover, it should be remembered that we would be sufficiently in touch with the negroes to counsel with them and aid in the proper development of their work.

But what about "Insider's" complaint that their property and work in the South would pass into Southern hands? Would not our property and work in the West pass into the hands of a body overwhelmingly dominated by former members of the Methodist Episcopal Church? Suppose it does not equal in value the property that the Southern branch would acquire through this arrangement; could not the matter be referred to a board of arbitrators and satisfactorily adjusted? We apprehend that but little difficulty would be encountered at this point. There may be insurmountable barriers in the way of a union of the Methodist Churches of the United States, but, if there are, "Insider" has not, in our opinion, brought them forward in his discussion. As we see it, he will have to find stronger reasons than he has yet advanced to stay the rising tide of fraternity among the followers of Wesley in this great Western Republic.

TOO MANY BOOKS.

The mere collecting of books has never made a scholar. It is the mastery of them that gives strength and vigor to the mind and stores it with useful information. We have seen more than one preacher with full library shelves and an empty head. A wise discretion needs to be exercised in buying books, and even greater wisdom in the use of the time we have to give to reading. To try to give attention to all of the fotsam and jetsam of theological literature, to say nothing of the other kinds, is to make of the cranium a sort of curiosity shop where all varieties of queer things in tangled confusion may be found. A bonfire of books helped the moral status of some of the citizens of Ephesus in the days ago; and it might help the pulpit efficiency of some ministers in this latter time. Bishop McTyeire said that one of the greatest things about John Wesley was he knew what to get rid of. The following from the address to the class admitted into full connection at the last session of the North Alabama Conference by "the grand old man" of Southern Methodism, Bishop A. W. Wilson, bears pertinently on this point:

"Many of us have too many books. We have gotten into a loose way of rambling around among the theologies, furnishing us with a lot of terms and expressions, and causing us to console ourselves that we know a great deal. We have too much light reading. Our fathers read solid books and many biographies. I would not give those old men who were in earnest, not writing for the trade, and those old books that wrought most in the lives of men, for all the later output."

A FORWARD MOVEMENT.

The Louisiana Conference took a forward step at its last session in placing a Sunday school missionary in the field. As has been already announced in our columns, Rev. P. O. Lowrey was chosen for this new position and has entered actively upon the discharge of its duties. The plan of work mapped out for him is thus stated by Mr. T. V. Ellzey, the efficient chairman of the Conference Sunday School Board: "He is to work under the direction of the Board and the presiding elder into whose territory he enters, and is expected to give to each district from one to two months. He is to organize a Methodist Sunday school in every congregation where none exists, and to organize missionary Sunday schools wherever it seems practicable. He is to give his time chiefly to rural communities. He is to help strengthen the weak schools by developing their workers, and assist in every other way possible in quickening the interest in the study and teaching of the Divine Word. I am sure that there is need for this missionary work in Louisiana, and I hope that the whole Conference will lend a hand in bringing things to pass during the year now beginning."

We shall be surprised if this aggressive movement does not yield substantial results. The tide of immigration to this State is increasing, and the field in Louisiana is a developing one. New doors are opening, which need to be quickly entered. Opportunity challenges us on every side. No other agency contributes so much to the upbuilding of the Church as the Sunday school. From it comes by far the larger percentage of our membership. The best soil in which to sow the seeds of gospel truth is the youthful heart. The denomination that plants Sunday schools everywhere will soon have churches everywhere.

BROTHER LAKE DEAD.

The press dispatches report the death of Captain Levin Lake, which occurred at his home in Grenada the latter part of last week. This announcement will carry sorrow into every part of Mississippi, and there is scarcely a preacher in the North Mississippi Conference whom it will not touch with grief. Brother Lake was born in Dorchester County, Md., Sept. 17, 1817, and was in his ninety-fourth year when the summons came. Nearly all of his life he resided either in Grenada or Oxford, Miss., where he was universally esteemed and loved. He began his career as a merchant and continued in that vocation until 1868, when he accepted a position with the Armour Packing Company, which he held until his retirement from the road in 1907. He enjoyed the perfect confidence of his employers, who held him in high regard and delighted to show him special attention whenever he visited Chicago. Brother Lake became an active Christian in his early years, and was an ardent and devout Methodist. Perhaps no man in Mississippi knew more about the beginning of Methodism in that commonwealth than did he, and he delighted to tell of the noble men who labored to establish it in the days ago. Until his waning strength forbade Brother Lake was a regular attendant upon the sessions of the Annual Conference, and to hear him testify in the Sunday morning love feast was a blessing and inspiration. No one who ever saw and listened to him on such an occasion can forget him. With face aglow, eyes bedewed with tears, and feeling so deep and overpowering that at times he seemed almost choking for utterance, he would tell of the joy of his salvation and his confident hope for the future, and exhort his brethren to holiness and fidelity. His life was above reproach. Nothing in it needs defense or apology. His character towered like a mountain peak. One of his most beautiful traits was his optimism. He always insisted that the Methodism of to-day is better than that of the past, and that its golden age is yet to be. Worthily he wrought, nobly achieved, and we doubt not that he has entered upon a rich reward. The Church is safe so long as she can produce such men. They attest the transforming power of the gospel, and demonstrate the reality of the Christian religion.

DISTRICT WOMAN'S MEETING.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the New Orleans District held their annual meeting jointly at Rayne Memorial Church on Friday, January 28, from 11 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m. The sessions were presided over by Mrs. D. C. Worrell, district secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, and Mrs. J. L. Munford, secretary of the Home Mission Society. The attendance was good and much interest was taken in the exercises. The morning hour was devoted to the receiving of reports from the several auxiliaries, which proved the work to be in a healthful condition. The summary of Mrs. Munford, secretary of the Home Mission Society, showed that the district has 15 auxiliaries with a membership of 381; number of subscriptions to "The Voice," 116; visits to sick and strangers, 2,296; visits made to institutions, 358; cottage prayer meetings, 80; garments distributed, 3,000; needy helped, 31. There are two city missionaries, Miss Baker of St. Mark's, and Miss Franklin of Rayne. The amount of money sent to the conference treasurer amounted to $474.41; expended on local work, $2,733.80; to the City Mission Board, $492.36; boxes to orphanage, $10.05; collected during week of prayer, $89.97; thanksgiving offering, $75. The report of the district secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, Mrs. D. C. Worrell, showed the number of members enrolled in the 8 auxiliaries to amount to 229; subscriptions to Woman's Advocate, 63; scholarships, 5; Bible women, 3; total amount sent to conference treasurer, $1,139.63.

Particularly interesting were the accounts given of their work by Mrs. Lily Meekins of the Mary Werlein Mission, and Miss Baker of St. Mark's Hall. An interesting discussion took place concerning the question of a general merging of the two societies, which finally resulted in the adoption of a memorial to the Conference organizations to unite according to the plan outlined by the General Board of Missions.

At 1 o'clock a delightful luncheon was served by the ladies of Rayne Memorial Church. During the afternoon instructive addresses were delivered by Miss Martha Nicolaisen, one of the missionary workers of the Methodist Episcopal Church in China, Mrs. Henry W. Castle, the wife of a missionary of the Protestant Episcopal Church in China, and Rev. A. G. Shankle, pastor of Rayne Memorial Church. It was decided to hold the next annual meeting at First Church. The meeting adjourned with the benediction by Rev. N. E. Joyner.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mrs. Joe Bailey, of Connehatta, Miss., has brought us under obligation by sending us a list of subscribers. We thank her for appreciative words.

Dr. J. M. Henry has taken vigorous hold of affairs in the New Orleans District, and the work is progressing finely under his capable leadership.

We are happy to state that Rev. M. L. Burton continues to make steady progress toward recovery. He has been able to walk a little, and hopes soon to be able to leave the infirmary.

Rev. Jasper L. Smith, under date of Jan. 25, writes that he is most pleasantly situated on the Bayou Pierre charge, where he received a cordial welcome, and where the outlook for the year is encouraging.

Rev. Thos. L. Porter, of the Mar's Hill charge, North Mississippi Conference, has sent us a list of subscribers for which he has our sincere thanks. We trust the Advocate will be a help to him in his work.

Brother F. A. Howell, of Durant, Miss., has favored us with a fine list of new subscribers and renewals, for which we thank him. We pray that the Advocate may be a blessing to every home into which it goes.

Rev. M. L. Ward, of Dumas, Miss., in sending a splendid list of subscribers to the Advocate, says he feels that he has an assistant pastor in every home where he places the paper. We pray that he may find it so.

We thank Rev. C. A. Northington, of Bellefontaine, Miss., for a good list of subscribers, with a promise to send more. We appreciate the efforts of our friends in putting the Advocate into the hands of our people.

The work has opened well at Moorhead, Miss., where Rev. W. V. Shearer is in charge. He is making an effort to place the Advocate in the homes of all his officials, and hopes soon to have his work upon our "Honor Roll."

Rev. N. E. Joyner delivered a stereopticon lecture on Mexico at the Social Hall of the First Methodist Church, this city, last Monday evening. Brother Joyner was formerly a missionary to Mexico, and his talk was highly entertaining and instructive.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb is having fine congregations at Lexington, Miss., and his work is progressing favorably. Mrs. Sam Gwin of that city has recently made the Methodists there "a present of an elegant new pulpit Bible upon which the name of the church, her name, and the date are beautifully inscribed."

In a note to the editor, Rev. T. W. Lewis, pastor of the First Methodist Church, of Memphis, Tenn., states that if the members of the Hospital Commission, which is to meet in that city on February 7th, will send him their names, he will take pleasure in arranging for their entertainment.

Rev. Thos. L. Porter, of Sweatman, Miss., is delightfully situated, has a splendid people to serve, and is encouraged with the outlook for the year. We sincerely thank him for his kind words, and pray that God's blessing may be his constant portion.

Mr. J. W. Broom has been selected to represent Millsaps College in the State oratorical contest, and has chosen as his theme, "The Modern Sir Galahad." The speaking will take place on the 8th of May, but the place where it will occur has not yet been determined.

Rev. J. B. Williams, of Lisbon, La., has very kindly kept the Advocate in mind in his work and has sent us a good list of renewals and new subscribers, for which we thank him sincerely. He is accustomed to look well after all the interests of the Church.

Rev. W. J. Wood, of Pott's Camp, Miss., in sending a list of subscribers to the Advocate, takes occasion to remark that he is "perfectly delighted" with his new work. And we dare say the people of that favored community entertain the same feeling concerning their new pastor.

We acknowledge the reception of an invitation to the formal opening of the Presbyterian Hospital of this city which will take place next Saturday afternoon at half-past two o'clock. This institution is both a credit and tower of strength to the Presbyterian Church in New Orleans.

Mrs. C. L. Graham, of Love, Miss., writes: "Brother Babb has made a fine impression on the people both here and at Coldwater, and seems to be the right man to follow our beloved Brother Curtiss." This does not surprise us, since it is Brother Babb's habit to win his way into all hearts wherever he goes.

Rev. G. W. Strickland, of McCool, Miss., in sending a list of nine subscribers to the Advocate, speaks of the value of church literature in developing the interest of the church membership. He finds that those who read the church papers are generally loyal and true Methodists. We are sure that others also have found it to be true.

Rev. A. S. Brisco has our thanks for looking after the interests of the Advocate in his charge. His efforts resulted in a fine club, recently sent in.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., who spent four successful years at Pearl Street, Natchez, Miss., writes that he is at work in his new field at Montrose, Miss., where he finds a fine body of people to work with. Brother Lewis gives full proof of his ministry in the results that follow his labors.

The Mid-Year meeting of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions will be held at Alexandria, Tuesday and Wednesday, February 7-8. We publish elsewhere the program which has been arranged for the occasion. Dr. J. M. Moore, general missionary secretary for the home field, is expected to be present and take part in the exercises.

In remitting for a list of subscribers, Rev. S. M. Thames, of Carrollton, Miss., incidentally adds: "Everything is moving on nicely. My health was never better, and the prospects are bright for a good year." Brother Thames is a strong preacher, and has behind him a record of service in North Mississippi of which any man might be proud.

In a letter to the publisher a few days ago, Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan took occasion to commend the Advocate in terms far higher than we think it deserves. It is a genuine pleasure, however, to have the approbation and encouragement of this scholarly Christian gentleman, than whom none truer or worthier ever served in the ranks of the itinerancy.

Rev. Jas. M. Lewis, of the Vancleave charge, Mississippi Conference, writes that he has just finished the first round of appointments and has found a most hopeful condition of affairs. There seems to be a general desire for a revival on the charge. That is one of the surest signs that it is coming. May the heart of this faithful pastor be cheered by great success in his ministry!

Mr. D. R. Barbee, of the Montgomery Advertiser, calls attention to the fact that we erred in referring to him as the editor of that journal. That position has been filled with distinction by Captain W. W. Screws for more than forty years. Mr. Barbee is the managing editor. Well, at any rate, the Advertiser is an excellent paper, and there is glory enough for all connected with its publication.

We call attention to the excellent sermon which we publish this week from the gifted pen of Dr. C. W. Carter, one of the honored veterans of the Louisiana Conference. Though brief, it deals with a pertinent theme in a vigorous manner, and is, in our judgment, calculated to accomplish much good. It will be followed in our next issue by a companion discourse setting forth the other side of the matter.

Rev. L. L. Roberts is beginning his third year at Flora, Miss., with every indication pointing toward success. Brother Roberts is in high favor with the excellent people of that thriving little city, as is evidenced by a most generous "pounding" given him recently. A new parsonage has just been completed, which was thoroughly furnished by the ladies of the church. In every way the work prospers in his hands.

We were pleased to have Dr. G. W. Young, of Louisville, Ky., Assistant General Secretary of the Anti-Saloon League of America, call at our office Tuesday of this week. Dr. Young came to New Orleans in the interest of prohibition work, in which he is a strong and resourceful leader. He will return to the city again in a few weeks, and deliver some addresses in behalf of the great cause which he represents.

The Anti-Saloon League of Tennessee held its annual session in Nashville on January 25. Professor H. B. Carre, of Vanderbilt University, was chosen president—a splendid selection. One of the most interesting features of the convention was an address by Hon. Luke Lea, United States Senator-elect, who emphatically denied any change in his temperance views, and declared that it will be his purpose in the Senate to do all in his power to further the cause of prohibition.

The present matron of the Louisiana Orphans' Home, at Ruston, is Miss Estelle Wasson, of Ethel, Miss. She is a graduate of the Scarritt Bible and Training School at Kansas City, and is splendidly equipped for the position which she holds. One of her brothers, Rev. L. P. Wasson, is a prominent minister in the North Mississippi Conference, and another has lately finished his course at Millsaps College and become a Student Volunteer. She also has a sister who is a missionary in China.

Rev. L. W. Cain has found a choice people at Gun town, Miss., and is pleased with the outlook for a good year. The assessment for the pastor's support has been increased from $1,200 to $1,350. Brother Cain has been afflicted with a caruncle on his neck for a month, but has managed to meet all of his appointments. We thank him for the assurance that he will look after the interests of the Advocate, though that was scarcely necessary. His past record is a guaranty that we can depend upon him, no matter where he labors.

The Aherdeen and Corinth Districts are having a joint meeting of the district stewards and other interested workers at Tupelo this week. Among the distinguished speakers booked to be present are Bishop McCoy, Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, and Mr. Pearce, of Chicago, the noted Bible teacher. Having had two such energetic and aggressive leaders as Brothers Felts and Jacob to work it up, we feel sure that the gathering is having a good attendance and that the occasion will prove a memorable one. Things have to move when these elders hold the reins.

It is announced that Dr. J. H. Jowett, pastor of the Corris Lane Congregational Church at Birmingham, England, has accepted a call to the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York, the richest congregation of that denomination in the United States. Dr. Jowett is regarded by many as the leading non-conformist clergyman in Great Britain, and has been called the Henry Ward Beecher of England. He is president of the Free Church Council.

To the Wesleyan Christian Advocate we are indebted for the following church news in Georgia: Dr. DuBose was the orator at the celebration of General Robert E. Lee's birthday in Augusta on January 19. Dr. S. A. Steel delivered an eloquent lecture on "The Herdism of the Women of the South" in Macon a few days since. The Congregational Church of Atlanta has extended a call to Dr. H. S. Bradley, now serving a church of that denomination at Worcester, Mass.

Dr. S. H. Werlein has for the past two or three weeks been preaching an able series of sermons on "The Foes of Christianity." His theme last Sabbath was, "Christian Science—Its Relation to the Church." Some of the followers of Mrs. Eddy have lately sought to take the Doctor to task in the columns of the Picayune for what he has had to say, but they have found him quite able to take care of himself in a newspaper discussion. His discourses on these pertinent subjects are being listened to with much interest by large audiences.

Dr. W. H. Whitsett, the distinguished Baptist minister, died in Richmond, Va., on January 20th. He was born in Nashville, Tenn., on November 25, 1841, and was a gallant Confederate soldier. He succeeded Dr. Broadus as president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., in 1895, and while filling that position contributed to the New York Independent an article concerning Baptist history, which involved him in trouble with his denomination and led to his resignation. Dr. Whitsett held that the English Baptists did not practice immersion prior to 1641, which conflicted with the view commonly held by his brethren, and though he was in every other particular thoroughly loyal to the Baptist Church, many affirmed that he was not a suitable man to be at the head of their leading institution for the training of ministers. At the time of his decease he was the Professor of Moral Philosophy at Richmond College.

ANENT THE ADVOCATE.

The year is passing, and we urge our pastors and friends not to delay in looking after renewals in their charges. This is also the best time to work for new subscribers. Later on money will be scarcer, and they will be more difficult to secure.

We request the pastors, Leaguers, and Sunday school workers to give us information as to what is being done in their communities. We do not desire long and detailed reports, but results briefly stated. Do we not owe it to the Master to tell what is being accomplished in his name? To do so will hearten the discouraged and prove a blessing to many.

"The church paper is a prime factor in the success of the church. It blesses the home and stimulates every form of Christian activity." So writes Bishop Candler in the Texas Christian Advocate. Yet there are prominent Methodists who never see a church organ. They know all about politics and what is going on in society, but know next to nothing about what is being done to save the world. Queer, isn't it?

We add no new name to our "Honor Roll" this week. Nine pastoral charges in Louisiana and Mississippi in which every official takes his Conference organ! Are we satisfied with this showing, or shall we put more "ginger" into the campaign and improve it? There are few things that cannot be done by earnest and persistent effort. The list now stands as follows: Mansfield, La., Rev. A. W. Turner, pastor; Bogalusa, La., Rev. J. M. Alford, pastor; Tunica, Miss., Rev. J. W. Honnoll, pastor; Lumberton, Miss., Rev. T. W. Adams, pastor; Ruleville, Miss., Rev. O. L. Savage, pastor; Homewood, Miss., Rev. W. W. Graves, pastor; Houston, Miss., Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor; Seventh Avenue, Meridian, Miss., Rev. J. A. Wells, pastor.

An old saying concerning the weather is, "Three days of rain will empty any sky." So it generally will. A steady giving out will empty anything, unless at the same time there is a corresponding gathering in. This applies to a preacher's ministrations from the pulpit. He must feed his own mind and heart, if he would feed the minds and hearts of those who sit before him in the pew. The sermons of one mentally too lazy to study are apt soon to become voice and little else.

MISS EMMA DILLON, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dillon of Natchez, Miss., departed from this life December 24, 1910. She was a laborer at Salvo & Berdon's candy factory in the packing room, when her clothing became ignited, and before the flames could be extinguished she was fatally burned. She was conveyed to the Natchez Sanitarium, where she lived only a short time. Her dear mother and father were called to her bedside just before she fell on sleep. It is so sad to have our loved one taken from us, but weep not—your darling has only gone, to be with her Savior. She joined the Baptist Church in childhood and lived a consistent Christian life until her death. Emma was a good girl and was loved by all who knew her. She leaves behind to mourn her departure a dear father, mother, three sisters, one brother and a host of relatives and friends. Weep not, for we shall meet Emma again in heaven. A friend, MYRA B.

On December 14, 1910, at 7 p. m., the spirit of W. R. P. TALLY left us to go to rest with the Father who gave it. He was a man of strong character and uncompromising integrity. He was the son of a Methodist itinerant of the Alabama Conference. He was born in Sumpter county, Alabama, June 27, 1833. He professed religion while young and lived as a consecrated Christian all his days. He believed in his Savior to the extent that he was constantly working for him. His last words were, "Blessed Jesus!" He seemed to be conscious that his time had come when he became confined to his room. He was hurt by his horse, but was about over the bruises when heart trouble caused his death. He was thrice married. The first, March 5, 1855, resulted in the birth of six children, four of whom survive him. The second, December 7, 1871, resulted in the birth of six children, three of whom are still living. His third marriage was in Scott county, Mississippi, November 25, 1888 to Miss C. A. Underwood, who still lives to mourn his departure, with his many friends and loved ones. He was a faithful soldier in the Civil War of the 60's. He was a non-commissioned officer. A good man has left us. "Soldier of Christ well done." We laid him to rest December 15, 1910, at Enterprise.

A. C. FLOWERS.

MRS. BETTIE E. GLOVER, the subject of this sketch, was born in Newton county, Georgia, June 27, 1846, and moved to Union Parish, La., in 1855. Sister Glover's maiden name was Edmunds. She was married to Benjamin Warren Glover, M. D., on Jan. 21, 1869, spending all of her married life in Arcadia, La., and after the death of Dr. Glover, some twenty odd years since, she continued to live among her friends in Arcadia, passing away among those who knew and loved her on December 14, 1910. Her family of five daughters were all with her at the end, closing her eyes as they opened in the eternal world. Sister Glover united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when but a girl and lived a faithful and consistent Christian life to the end. Her regularity at service, her punctuality in the hours of attendance, and her prayerful sympathy were noted by all her pastors, and they soon learned to value her Christian friendship as of great worth to them as they sought to minister in holy things. She was strong in her faith, never harrassed with doubts, simple in the simplicity of her trust and lived quite near the mercy seat. Her life was a life of trustful communion with God. His presence was real to her, and she lived, trusting in his guidance. There are days that test and try one's faith, when it is only by close walking with the Father that the soul is kept sweet and humble. During these days none saw or observed in the life of our sister anything but the noblest purposes, and wondered at her strength of character. Her life, however, had its explanation in the fact that she was like "the tree planted by the river of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season," for her delight had been "in the law of the Lord," and in his law she meditated day and night. The longer the writer lives, the more this thought impresses itself upon him, viz.: that the distinctive feature of all truly great living is its simplicity and childlike confidence in God. The soul that forgets self, losing itself in God is at last the truly great soul, whatever the external environment be. The life now gone was of this order, and simply living, walked in thought with the Master. Her last years were spent in feebleness, and therefore, she was denied the pleasure of sitting with the congregation, but now, no doubt, she is with "the congregation of the righteous," saying, "Worthy is the lamb that was slain to receive power and riches and glory and blessing." A former pastor, JOHN F. FOSTER.

At her home in Jonesville, La., on December 25th, the sweet spirit of our loved friend, JOSEPHINE ELOISE YANCEY, passed from earth to heaven. My pen falters as I attempt to portray the beautiful character of this Christian mother, sister and friend. Her face has gone from earth and the body now rests within the narrow limits of the grave, but the soul, the Christian spirit that sang in the very face of death the sweet hymn, "The Comforter Has Come," is joining in the glad hosannas around the throne of God! Oh death, where is thy sting? Oh grave, where is thy victory? Blessed are they who die in the Lord. What a consolation! What a comfort! Having been since the age of eighteen a member of the M. E. Church, she died as she had lived, a follower of Christ, and is now reunited to her loved husband and dear children who awaited her coming just "Over There." Dear children, you have lost that most precious of all gifts, a mother's love! You may have friends—dear, kind friends—but never will you know the gentle, inexpressible love none but a mother can bestow. You will miss the good-night kiss of peace; you will sigh as long as life lasts for the deep feeling of security you always felt as nestling close to her you listened to her sweet words of counsel. Would you hear them again? Then live as she did, let her example ever be the star to guide you on to a world where there is no more death—no more parting. She has left a vacant place no successor can ever fill and while we shed the tear of sorrow for our loss, we thank God for the life and good example of this dear servant who only waited the summons to come up higher to her rest in him. "O, spread the tidings round, wherever man is found—the Comforter has come!" C. H. D.

Mantachie Charge:

I feel that we are moving off very well on the Mantachie charge. We have a good, open-hearted and generous people here. We had some good services, and our first Quarterly Conference, which met Saturday, was well attended, and prospects for a good year can easily be seen. Already we have fifteen or twenty on the charge getting the Advocate, and am happy to send you eight new subscribers and four renewals. I am sure that others will subscribe when I can see them.—A. S. Brisco.

Buford, Miss.:

I was sent as a supply to the Buford charge by the Annual Conference at Hattiesburg, and, it being my first work as a pastor, when the Bishop read me out for Buford, I felt that to lead a flock was more than I could do. Nevertheless, I told God I would do the best I could in the work to which I had been appointed. I felt heavy at heart until I came here and found that all the good people were not elsewhere; that some lived down on the Buford work, too. I reached my appointment some three weeks ahead of my family and found that I needed no boarding place, for anywhere among my people was home. Then my family came down Thursday, the 19th, and found ready for us some well-filled baskets, and, of course, we feasted and thanked God that we had been sent to serve a people that had some thought for the pastor and his family. May God bless Sisters Sumner and Lea for their great kindness, and feed their souls abundantly. I have found some good men at my appointments. The stewards at Water Hole are especially energetic, and Summer Brothers, at Buford, came immediately to me and did some very kind things for me. Pray for me this year, that I may have success in the Master's work.—W. B. Waldrop, P. C.

Buena Vista, Miss.:

I landed at Buena Vista in time to meet the first appointment after Conference. Brother Armour, my predecessor, got out on Monday following. We set out at once in the work of a pastor, and, to our delight, found a most loyal and excellent people to work with. The good people here have been giving us some heavy poundings, but not of the kind that hurt. We have been given coffees, sugar, rice, canned goods of nearly every kind, hams and sausage. The good women of the charge have presented my wife with a number of nice hens, and therefore eggs are coming our way. Brother Parker had a stove flue built and decorated the cook room with a brand new stove. Brother Tom Owens favored us with a milk cow, and we are living at the top of the pot. We held our first Quarterly Conference the 21st and 22d of January. Every Church was well represented. The people say our congregations are larger than they have been for years here. Brother Felts, our much beloved presiding elder, says he preached to the largest congregation yesterday he ever preached to at this place. His preaching was of that high and forceful type peculiar to great minds and consecrated hearts. The outlook here is very promising. Pray that we may have a great year.—T. J. Durrett, P. C.

DeSoto, Miss.:

We reached our new charge in due time and began work at once. I have preached at all the places except one (State Line). I have seven appointments on the charge, names as follows: DeSoto, Salem, Mannassas, Hopewell, Cooper's Chapel, Theadville and State Line. We found a loyal people at the above-named places. We have seven Sunday schools on the charge, all doing a fine work. One W. H. M. Society, at DeSoto. The good ladies of this place know how to look after the interest of their pastor and his family. We have a membership of 550 members on this charge. Since our arrival here the good people have been bringing in good things to eat from the various places on the charge to help fill the pantry. We have only two churches here in DeSoto—the Methodist and Baptist—and they work well together. I preached my first sermon here in the Baptist Church. I was listened to by a large congregation. We are pleasantly situated in a new parsonage, about two hundred yards from the Mobile and Ohio railroad depot. We buried the oldest man on the charge, on January 18, Brother Edwin Mathis, aged 85 years 3 months and 11 days. Things look hopeful and the new year promises to be a good one. I am praising God for victory.—Hilary Westbrook, P. C.

Clarendon, Ark.:

A number of splendid papers come weekly to me. Among them, I very much appreciate the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Having known a number of the pastors in Louisiana, I take pleasure in renewing my subscription. I desire to add my testimony in appreciation of "Modes of Heavenly Life," by Rev. Walter G. Harbin. The book is helpful to any busy pastor. Condensed, inspiring and well arranged are the sermons. It should find a place in many homes. Since coming here, fifteen months ago, my church has developed along many lines. Especially has there been spiritual advancement. To my mind, that is the most helpful blessing that can come to us as we labor for the cause we have espoused. My observation and experience are that the Church moves up spiritually when the membership feels the need of and reads with care the religious papers—not in a half-hearted way; it is getting at the very root of the matter that stirs the soul and inspires greater sacrifice.—E. C. Cargill, pastor Presbyterian Church, N. S. A.

Rose Hill Circuit:

We were kindly received for the second year on the Rose Hill charge. We are serving some as good people as ever pressed the soil of America. Even the young people are very thoughtful of their preacher and family. As a token of their remembrance, they often load the table with many good things to eat. No one knows how to appreciate such kindness like a preacher and his family. We begin our work with the expectation of accomplishing great things for the Lord this new year. Our first Quarterly Conference convened January 7 and 8, with our beloved presiding elder, Rev. T. J. O'Neill, in the chair. It was indeed a spiritual feast for all who attended. The people of this charge have started out with renewed energy to make this the best year in its history. Pray that we may so administer spiritual food to these good people that they all may become "vessels of honor" and meet for the Master's use.—W. H. Lane, P. C.

The greatest victories and defeats are on the lone arena of the human heart.—Bishop Warren.

Only Christ can influence the world, but all that the world sees of Christ is what it sees of him in the life of his followers.—Henry Drummond.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The League Topic for February 5 is "A Winning Start." (Hebrews xii, 1-2.) The hymns suggested are 396, 425, 416, and the "Aim." To gain appreciation of beginnings.

Rev. L. P. Vasson has organized a Senior League of 35 members at Friar's Point, Miss.

The Leaguers of Texas are reported to be taking an active part in the movement to circulate the Texas Christian Advocate.

Dr. Parker, the General Secretary, in a forceful editorial in the Epworth Era appeals to the League Unions and Leaguers generally to lend a hand in the revival which our Bishops and pastors are seeking to carry forward. Wise advice is this. The ideal Leaguer is a soul-winner.

An exchange suggests that it would be a fine thing if Leagues could be organized at country appointments and influenced to conduct services where preaching is heard only once or twice a month. In England every Wesleyan congregation has a religious service every Sabbath. Why should it not be so in America?

From the Central Christian Advocate, of Kansas City, we take the following statement concerning the League work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India: "The first Epworth League was organized in India in 1889, and at the end of the first decade had 209 chapters and 10,337 members. In the next ten years the membership doubled, numbering now 20,229. Mr. Badley in his 'Bit of Interesting History,' says: 'Can it be doubled again in 1918? If we pay the price it can, but it will cost faith, prayer and zeal. Mighty purposes are born of mighty convictions.'"

The Epworth Era of January 26 pays the following reserved tribute to the work of the former accomplished General Secretary of the League, Dr. H. M. DuBoise: "The Young People's Movement in our Church has been more powerfully affected by Dr. DuBoise than by any other. From the beginning he had his hand upon it, and was General Secretary of the Epworth League and editor of the Epworth Era for twelve years—twelve years of strenuous toil, fervent prayer, and devotion to the highest ideals. As our readers know, he deemed it expedient to ask that his friends should not vote for his reelection last May, as he felt a distinct call to re-enter the pastorate. We quote from a personal letter a few sentences that will be appreciated by Era readers, whose love and interest follow Dr. DuBoise in his present field of work as pastor of St. John's Church, Augusta, Ga. He says: 'I am happy in abundant pastoral labors. I find no leisure; there is none when duty and conscience meet. Our days overflow with sunshine.'"

Let the League chapters send us news as to what they are doing that we may give it to other Leaguers. Your activity may incite others to be more diligent.

A LIVE LEAGUE.

Mr. Editor:—I think the Epworth League of Rankin Street Methodist Church, of Jackson, Miss., deserves honorable mention in the Epworth League column of the Advocate. Every member seems enthused with the League spirit and we are constantly receiving applications for membership. Our Sunday evening devotional meetings are worth attending. The meeting on last Sunday was conducted by Mr. Oliver Felder, of Millsaps College. The subject was "What is the Most Essential Element in Life-Building?" Excellent talks were made. Indeed, scarcely a member refused to speak. The "Literary Socials" are admirably planned by our third vice-president. We are endeavoring, too, to educate our young people along financial lines. The Epworth League is a power for good in the Rankin Street Church.

MRS. J. S. PARKER, President.
January 24.

MY CREED.

I would be true, for there are those who trust me;
I would be pure, for there are those who care;
I would be strong, for there is much to suffer;
I would be brave, for there is much to dare.

I would be friend of all—the foe, the friendless;
I would be giving, and forget the gift;
I would be humble, for I know my weakness;
I would look up, and laugh, and love, and lift.

—Arnold Howard Walters, in Harper's Bazar.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The following resolutions of respect were passed by the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Alexandria, La.:

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father, in his infinite love and wisdom, to remove from our midst our sister and co-laborer, Mrs. Claudine Bowman; therefore be it resolved:

First—That while we bow in reverence and submission to him "who doeth all things well," we desire to express our gratitude to him for her exemplary Christian character, which showed forth in her daily life in cheerfulness under affliction.

Second—That the Society has lost one of its most consecrated, faithful and efficient members, beloved by all who knew her.

Third—That we extend to the bereaved family our tenderest sympathy and love, and commend them to the God of consolation.

Fourth—That we set apart a page in our minutes, inscribed to her memory.

Fifth—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her bereaved family; also to the Town Talk, of Alexandria, and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. C. M. Pulliam, Mrs. Wm. Hill, Mrs. Kate Laney, Committee.

Jan. 3, 1911.

AN ELEPHANT LABYRINTH.

Near Ayuthia, formerly the capital of Siam, is a curious labyrinth in which elephants are captured alive. The labyrinth is formed by a double row of immense tree trunks set firmly in the ground, the space between them gradually narrowing. Where it begins at the edge of the forest the opening of the labyrinth is more than a mile broad, but as it approaches Ayuthia it becomes so narrow that the elephants cannot turn around.

Tame elephants are employed to lure wild ones into the trap. Having reached the inner end of the labyrinth, the tame elephants are allowed to pass through a gate, while men lying in wait slip shackles over the feet of the captives.—Harper's Weekly.

All the paths of life lead to the grave, and the utmost that we can do is to avoid short cuts.—J. D. Macon.

Quick Relief From Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, saive, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

RHEUMATISM

A CURE GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the Spring of 1898 I was attacked by muscular and inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered as those who have it know, for over three years, and tried almost everything. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely and it has not returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, and it effected a cure in every case. Anyone desiring to give this precious remedy a trial, I will send it free. Address, Mark W. Jackson, No. 779 James Street, Syracuse, N. Y. Mr. Jackson is responsible. Above statement true.

MISSISSIPPI METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

Furnishings for the New Dormitory.

We made a call in the January issue of Our Home for contributions to the furnishing of the new dormitory. The building will be ready for us to furnish next week. We have made arrangements to have two rooms and one bed furnished. Are you good people going to make us wait after the building is finished for furniture before we can move in? We need to move now, and many needy children over the State are waiting to have the beds put in that they may come. Our hands are tied; the doors are closed against the needy orphans until this nice building is furnished. Will you let them stand there at the door and cry when you can open the door and give them a hearty welcome to a comfortable room and bed?

Below we publish an article from Our Home. Please read carefully. Decide what you will do, and do it now. Bring the matter before your church, Sunday school, Epworth League, W. H. M. S., and the public.

W. M. WILLIAMS, Manager.

New Building's Furnishings.

We are so very happy to tell you that the contractor promises to turn over the new Boys' Dormitory to us by the fifteenth of January, 1911. This will be two weeks earlier than we expected, nevertheless we are happy over getting it earlier. Now the furnishing of the Home is before us. All this will have to be done before we can occupy it, and in our crowded condition, we need to move into it as early as possible.

Below we give you an approximate estimate of the cost of furnishing each department of the building. Of course, we do not restrict you to the figures, if you should see fit to put more money in your room, but we do not think that any less than this amount would be sufficient.

We call upon as many as will to have a part in this most pleasant of tasks, furnishing a new house. For what is more fascinating than this? So we expect to meet with a ready and hearty response in every woman's heart in the State.

Parlor .....	$100
Matron's room .....	50
Hospital ward .....	100
Assistant Manager's room .....	50
Teacher's room .....	50

Club room (2 office tables, $20, 4 benches, $20; 18 chairs $18) .....	58
Two dormitories, forty beds at $15 apiece .....	600

Total .....

$1250
We suggest that each W. H. M. S. church, Sunday school, Epworth League, or individual, take a room, or a part of a room, or even one bed, as your special part of this work. Send the money to us, with statement as to how or where you wish it used, and we will endeavor to carry out your wishes to the very best of our ability.

We expect to have steel plates placed on the doors of all of the furnished rooms and beds, with any inscription you wish.

Now this is Brother James S. Sexton's suggestion, and we most heartily agree with him and urge everyone to accept, that, when the building is furnished and all things are ready, every one who has helped in any way with the furnishing of this Home, come to our House Party and spend the night with us, and occupy your room or bed. This is no idle invitation, but extended to you with our love and appreciation.—Our Home.

GAS STOVE REPAIRING

When your stove is in need of repairs, it would be wise to secure the services of a competent mechanic, and have the stove put in good repair. Better results in cooking and the saving of gas bills justify a small expenditure in this direction. Mr. John T. Chalmers, No. 526 Bellocastle street, New Orleans, makes the repairing and cleaning of gas stoves a specialty. Simply drop him a postal card, and he will call without delay.

WHICH WAY ARE YOU PAYING FOR AN IHC GASOLINE ENGINE?

THERE are two ways—a quick, easy way and a long, costly way.

The first way is to go to the I H C local dealer, pick out the style and size suited to your needs—pay for it—take it home and set it to work. It will operate your cream separator, feed grinder, thresher, fanning mill, turn your grindstone, saw wood, etc.

The other way is to get along as best you can without it, and pay for it over and over again in the time and money you lose by not having it.

"Procrastination is the thief of time," and time is money. An I H C Engine saves time—saves money. It's an investment that pays big dividends, day after day, year in and year out, through its capacity for doing work at less cost than any other power.

I H C Gasoline Engines

are made in all styles and sizes, 1 to 45-H. P., vertical and horizontal—stationary, portable, and tractor. Their efficiency, economy, and dependability have been proved by years of service. Thousands of owners consider an I H C Gasoline Engine one of the best paying investments they ever made.

If you want to know more about what an I H C Gasoline Engine will do for you, and why it is that I H C construction insures more power on less gasoline consumption than any other engine, you should call at once on the I H C local dealer, or write for a copy of the I H C Gasoline Engine catalogue.

While you're delaying you are paying, so why not have what you're paying for.

A NEWSPAPER ADVERTISEMENT PROBABLY SAVED HIS LIFE.

In December, 1905, I suffered severely with pains in my kidneys and could not sleep nights, on account of backache. I became run down, fell off in weight and was at that point when I thought I would have to stop my work as saw filer at the Cedar Creek Saw Mill Co.

I had used about everything and had called in my doctor, but all to no avail. After seeing your advertisement in the newspaper, I made up my mind to try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root as a last resort. After three months treatment I passed a gravel stone and at the end of one year's treatment, I was positively cured of all kidney troubles. After taking the first bottle I could sleep at night.

Now I am perfectly healthy and I honestly believe Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root to be a thorough cure for kidney trouble.

I will allow you to publish this where it may aid others who are suffering and in closing I wish to thank you for my present good health.

Yours very truly,

MRS. SUSAN R. HENRY.

Whereas, on Monday, January 2, God in his infinite wisdom, by the hand of death, called hence our beloved sister, MRS. SUSAN R. HENRY, one of our honored life members, Be it resolved by the Edwards Methodist Foreign Missionary Auxiliary, (1) In the death of Sister Henry this auxiliary and the church lose one to whom they both were dear, and for whom the members of each cherished a sincere and reverent affection; (2) Her patience under affliction and her faith that seemed strengthened by months and years of affliction, are to us an inspiration and a solace; the one because they picture the fruits of a faith triumphant, and the other because they assure us that "she is not dead, but sleepeth." (3) To the members of her family, who today grieve for the sound of her voice, the touch of her hand and the love-speaking glance of her eyes, we tender our sincere sympathy; and our prayer is that they may find comfort in the conviction that she is of those who have "Passed over the highlands of Heaven,

As calm as the day at its close
Floats over the peak of the mountain, Whose spirits with Jesus repose."

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Loring.

Rev. A. R. Hoffmann has organized a permanent Sunday school at Bossier, La., with Mr. J. D. Case, the pastor of the Protestant Episcopal Church, as superintendent.

The lecture room of First Church, New Orleans, is being renovated and is now being prepared to equip the primary and junior Sunday school work. Superintendents, Phillips has appointed Mrs. Cameron as the charge of the department of the school.

On January 22, a Wesley Bible Class of six of the strongest men in Trout, La., was organized with Mrs. C. E. Smith as teacher, and Mr. W. E. Bell as president. The pastor, Rev. C. F. Sheppard, predicts that the class will soon reach a large number of men and women a place of great usefulness.

Upon the visit of the Sunday school missionary on January 22, the Sunday school at Elba, La., on the Texas charge, planned to begin the Home and Cradle Roll Departments, and superintendents were appointed and literature ordered. The school is also to be graded, but there will be a mixed young people's class organized, with Miss Miller, the cultured school teacher in charge.

The Sunday school at Trout, La., boasts of one of the most enthusiastic superintendents in the whole country. The workers there report that he has given more than $1,000 upon the past two Christmas seasons for furnishing trees and presents for the people. He has also given contributions of Hoffman's publications of Christ at twelve years of age among the disciples of the law and he appeared in his conversation with the rich young ruler. They said on either side of the pulpit. This zealous Christian brother is Mr. J. R. East, bookkeeper for the big mill at Trout and a Presbyterian.

The Sunday school at Polk is fortunate in securing as superintendent Mr. Brown, who has recently become bookkeeper of the lumber company at that place. He is ably assisted by Mr. Wallis, who also teaches the Bible Class. They have graded their school, ordered the graded literature, organized the Cradle Roll and Home Departments, supplied their school with a map and ample literature from the teacher's magazine down, and have ordered screens for the Primary Department.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Mr. R. A. Weaver, of Tupelo, has a splendid class of men, who are doing a great work for the Master.

Norman Duncan says "there is a profession of goodness." Shall we not join its skilled ranks—doing good work, true work and square work? So many of us are such crude artisans—and so excited a profession in easy reach!

Just 52 Sabbath days in a year to teach the great Book whose inspiration and influence have lived since "the morning stars sang together," and you are a teacher of men and women or little children for these guide-post days—can you miss a lesson, bungle a great truth or fail to pass on the vision in the text of the hour?

A prepared, enthusiastic teacher is "a joy forever," for on the teacher depends the order, the moral lesson and its fixedness in the pupil's mind for future use, and the Bible study in its fullness of inspiration. Then every lesson a teacher prepares well means a growth in head and heart power for that lucky person just commensurate with the hope and application put into the study of that day's lesson.

What are you doing with your Master this year? It does not take a professional artist to put clever, unique and memory-aiding illustrations on for each Sabbath. If you can't do that, put in the Golden Text accurately. Suppose your pupils read it each morning and live up to it even if two of these crown jewels from our Master's treasure box.

Mr. Clark Hines, of Tupelo, is a past-master along this line and we hope to have some of his illustrations and illuminations where all can profit by them and at no distant date.

February 1 and 2, Revs. J. H. Felt and E. P. Jaro will hold a joint District Assembly meeting at Tupelo, Miss.

A Sunday School Board Table in the afternoon and a full evening will be given that great work. Mr. W. C. Pearce, A. B. C. Supr. for the I. S. S. A., will be present and fill the evening hours.

These two splendid preaching elders have done a great work in this broad field and are giving this helpful opportunity to all within the borders of the two districts, clergy and laity alike, to hear skilled teachers and superintendents and inspired pastors give their experience along these lines.

The Sunday School Board will hold a special session there and many great and good things will be arranged for the coming year.

Mr. W. D. Hale, of Krasville, Miss., is a very progressive and up-to-date Sunday school worker. He is using the graded lessons carefully and preparedly in his school and is reaping a white harvest.

As to these graded lessons, they are a mine of undiscovered treasure. The great minds of our Church have assimilated every method and idea from every available source, and with other great thinkers have put these well-digested facts and helps into a most attractive, comprehensive and educative form.

Give these lessons a trial, send to our Publishing House for samples and helps, and in a quiet hour, look over the treasure-trove you have discovered.

After they have been properly and prayerfully introduced the work is minimized instead of magnified—but no really successful teacher shirks work, rather invites it, especially when it is so uplifting and broadening.

The Young Men's Bible Class at Corinth, Miss., has adopted the plan of sending to visitors a nice card, upon which is written the following: Dear Friend:

We note with pleasure your recent visit to our class, and trust some help was derived from the services. Whenever in the vicinity, we shall be glad to have you call again and to extend to you any courtesy within our power.

We rejoice together in the fellowship of the Gospel and in the privilege of working together with God in reaching and saving souls through the power of the Word and the Cross of Jesus Christ.

Very cordially,

President

Teacher

This is a very good way to leave a pleasant class memory with a visitor. The idea came originally from the world famous Bushwick Avenue Methodist Sunday School, Brooklyn, Frank L. Brown, Supt.

What are you doing with your Sunday school books, your Wilde pictures, your maps and helps of last year? Do not throw them aside. Pictureless, bookless people are all around you, and over in Japan and Korea, as well as in nearer Mexico and Brazil, hungry-bearded men, women and little children are pleading for these books and what helps we carelessly toss and destroy. Search for a library, school, church or station, if possible, and send these out to help somebody.

Have one of your Boy Scouts take your books and papers and bright pictures to some far off a narrow, white, mountain peak or worse still, in a poor, cold, winter day of the Christmas and bring back a card of love from the heart of one of our young men and send them to the same place where you have been surrounded with good boys and girls. One young woman's Bible Class, whose teacher, Mrs. R. M. Weaver, of Tupelo, Miss., is a beautiful Christmas character, dressed from top to toe in very good, rugged and genuine clothing of Christmas day and added books and love to their cup of joy. They are now attending Sunday school regularly and have the happiest, warmest, white snow faces you might meet.

The members of the great International Sunday School Association, Mr. F. A. Wells, Chicago, acts as a distributor of such measures, and if you cannot find a way to send them, contact him. Many missionaries carry out into the dark places these great helps collected by his effort and many more are spread along the paths of the business men have found so busy as they sped on the land with eager, questioning, helpful eyes.

Editorial

A fine place for a revival to begin is in the official board. The Discipline says, "Let the stewards be men of solid piety." They should be examples to the flock in holy living as well as in liberality. Happy the pastor who has the prayers and active co-operation of his official members in his efforts to reach and save the lost!

A new religion called Antoinism is reported to have sprung up in Belgium. The leader of it is said not to have spoken to any one for six months, but it is contended that he is in "fluidic communion" with his followers. If the rule of silence applies to members also, how would it do to set the disciples of this cult to work on tattlers and backbiters?

A Maryland pupil is said to have given his teacher the following information concerning the force of gravity: "It was discovered by Isaac Walton. It is chiefly noticeable in the autumn, when the apples are falling from the trees." That young American knew about as much about gravity as Mr. Edison seems to know about religion.

The greatest institution on earth is the Church. It does for man what nothing else can do. He who attends upon its ordinances in the right spirit is certain to be strengthened in his Christian life. It may be safely assumed that there is something wrong with the spiritual status of the member who does not frequent the services of the sanctuary, unless there are causes which make it impossible. We write this after years of close observation.

Listening to the addresses of two foreign missionary workers recently, we were impressed with their reliance upon the Holy Spirit to aid them in their labors. They spoke as if they really believe him to be guiding them, and showed that they count his presence and co-operation essential to success. We have sometimes thought that the great weakness of the Church in the home land is at this very point—that we think too much of God as far away, and lean too little upon him in our work. In the opening days of the Christian era the superintendence of the Holy Ghost was strikingly manifest. He opened hearts for the entrance of divine truth, moved men to undertake specific tasks, and went before them and prepared the way for their coming. Is he less active in the world in this modern time? Nay, not so. But it is to be feared that we are less susceptible to his influence and less disposed to seek his leadership. His conscious touch is what we need to strengthen faith and make us adequate to the tasks that we are obligated to perform.

OUR IMPERILED SABBATH.

That the Lord's day is becoming more and more imperiled in the United States is manifest to every careful observer. Business and pleasure seem to be increasingly encroaching upon it, and we fear that the sentiment for its sanctity and strict observance is growing weaker instead of stronger. At any rate, it seems less potent to safeguard the day from desecration and maintain it as a time of quietude, rest, and worship. Enter one of our cities on the Sabbath, and what does one see? The streets thronged with people; buying and selling going on to a considerable extent; picture shows, various kinds of amusement, and in many instances the theatres in full blast; and though the front doors of saloons are closed, the jargon of voices within proclaims that the barkeeper is still doing business. Nor is it only in the cities that we find the commandment to keep the Lord's day holy disregarded. Throughout the length and breadth of the land the railroads are in operation, doing not only their ordinary work, but running excursion trains and seeking to take advantage of the leisure of people who are occupied during the week, in order to reap a harvest of gain. And in many towns and villages baseball and other games are played, riding and driving for pleasure are indulged in, and not a few other practices utterly out of harmony with the spirit of the divine commandment are common.

But these are not the only things which to-day threaten the Christian Sabbath. Warfare is also made upon it in the name of religion. The Seventh Day Adventists—a growing sect—are industrious in assailing it in every way that they can, and our Hebrew citizens though perhaps less active, are reinforcing their efforts. We do not question the conscientiousness and sincerity of these people, but that does not make their propaganda any less mischievous. They show but little insight in the true nature of the Christian religion in spending their strength to revive the mere ancient form of an agency which the Church has preserved in spirit and in substance. Christianity is not a religion of arbitrary exactions. Sound philosophy underlies every requirement. God did not institute the Sabbath simply to please his own fancy, but because man's physical, intellectual, and moral well-being demanded it. There is no unusual merit in any particular twenty-four hours; it was the principle of resting one day in seven that the Creator was establishing. We think it was a beautiful arrangement which made the Sabbath commemorative of God's cessation from the work of creation under the old dispensation and of the resurrection of Christ under the new, but in our opinion, this was incidental, and unimportant in comparison with the great underlying principle that there should be a regularly recurring day of rest.

It should ever be kept in mind that the Jewish government was a theocracy and that their Sabbath was of a legal and national character. And at this time the essential thing is that every nation shall have set apart, and protected by the strong arm of the law, a day when work shall cease for man and beast throughout its borders and opportunity given for moral and religious instruction. The notion of having two Sabbaths of equal legal recognition is impracticable and vicious. They would destroy each other. A man in business would not be willing to shut up shop and leave his competitor's store open: as a consequence neither would close. And as Senator Money, of Mississippi, said when the Sabbath Bill for the District of Columbia was under discussion about a year ago, "If we respect Saturday as the Sabbath of the Jews and Seventh Day Adventists, we must respect Friday as the day of the Mussulman." The inevitable effect of having a multiplicity of Sabbaths would be to have no Sabbath. And deplorable, indeed, would be the condition of our country without a day of rest. Heartless corporations would grind the very life out of the laboring man, and our people as a whole would gradually suffer physical degeneration. They would also lose in mental vigor. But the most frightful result would be their moral deterioration. With the Sabbath gone, they would be largely beyond the reach of the Church, and the restraining influence of religion would be reduced to a minimum. Some measure of Christianity would doubtless survive, but its activities would be paralyzed and it would be left weak and gasping for life. And with the morality of its citizenship destroyed, how could the nation long endure? It was corruption that laid low the republics and empires of the past, and it has not yet lost its power to blight and destroy. To place back in the temple of Christianity the mere outer casing of a pillar, incapable of adding either to its usefulness or strength, the Seventh Day Adventists would not only jeopardize the foundation of that pillar itself, but also endanger the whole vast superstructure which it is indispensably necessary to sustain.

But what may we as Christians do to preserve our imperiled Sabbath? By means of every educational agency at our command, we should seek to increase the sentiment in favor of its observance and protection. The pulpit, the press, the Sunday school teacher, and the parents in the home should speak out vigorously in its behalf and strive to beat back the encroachments upon its sanctity. The ground of its establishment and its value to society should be made clearly apparent to each and all. It should be shown that it is the duty of every true patriot, whether he is a Christian or not, to aid in its maintenance, because the welfare, and perhaps the very existence, of our free institutions are involved. And we should be mindful of the fact that the best teaching is not that of precept, but of example. Unless we ourselves keep the Sabbath, we may be sure that we shall not be able to influence others to keep it. We should not be extremists and insist upon carrying out in our complex civilization all of the minor and unimportant details of the old Jewish law, but not a single vital and essential feature of it can we afford to surrender. The followers of Christ have before them no more fateful struggle than this impending battle for the preservation of the Lord's holy day. Most tremendous are the issues staked upon its outcome. Byron represents pilgrims to the Eternal City, overwhelmed by the magnitude of the Coliseum, as saying:

"While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand;
When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall;
And when Rome falls—the world."

With incomparably a greater show of truth, we may paraphrase these memorable lines and say,

While stands the Sabbath, Christianity shall stand;
When falls the Sabbath, Christianity shall fall;
And when Christianity falls—the world.

"OVER AGAINST THE TREASURY."

By Rev. John T. Sawyer, D.D.

Jesus passed into a court of the temple called the Court of the Women. Standing on one side of the court were thirteen large chests with trumpet-like openings, and into these chests the free-will offerings of the people were thrown. Our Lord seated himself over against those chests, watching the passers-by. He beheld many rich pass in, and likely with ostentation, throw in their large contributions. Presently he saw a poor woman approach. Timidly and, as if fearing she should be seen, hiding what she gave as all too small for public notice, she threw in her two mites, making a farthing, and departed. The Master's eye was upon her; and, before she was lost in the crowd without, he directed the eyes of his disciples to her, saying to them: "Verily I say unto you, that this poor widow has cast more in than they all."

What was cast into the treasury went either to relieve the indigent or uphold the temple worship. Were there many in all the city poorer than the poor widow herself? Ought she not to have kept her little for her own relief? Doubtless where there was one in Jerusalem to endorse her act, there were hundreds ready to condemn it as foolish, needless, reckless. Ah, an immense amount of sordid selfishness and disgusting stinginess is covered up under the saying, "A man must be just before he is generous." Many a farthing has been kept out of the Lord's treasury by that saying, and others like it. The eyes of the Lord were upon the poor widow, and he saw that in her heart, broad and deep, was shed the love of the God who was worshiped in the temple. She knew that the Lord had given a call for all to aid in the maintenance of the temple's services. She considered her contributions as a debt of gratitude that she owed, and counted it a blessed privilege to do what she could. She felt that her gift was only a trifle, yet she willingly and gladly gave that trifle. The rich were throwing in of their silver and gold while she quietly let the two mites drop out of her fingers. There was one sitting near-by who saw her two mites and passed judgment upon her, and he not only approved her deed but elevated her above all who gave that day, saying, "She of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living." She had given more than they all in moral worth.

As Christ beheld that day, so does he now behold how the people cast money into the treasury. He observes all men and all things, searching the hearts and trying the reins of the children of men. What we do in public and what we do in private are equally known unto him; aye, he beholds our most secret purposes, intentions and dispositions. He observes our state and situation in life. His eye was upon the abundance of the rich who had given much, and he knew the poverty and desolate state of the widow who had given her all, though that was little in itself. God sees all the motives which lead men to perform their respective actions, and the different motives which lead them to perform the same action. He knows whether they act through vanity, self-love, interest, ambition, hypocrisy, or through love, sympathetic charity, zeal for his glory and a hearty desire to please him. God observes the judgment which we form of that which we do in his name—whether we esteem ourselves more on account of what we have done, speak of it to others, dwell on our labors, sufferings, expenses, success etc., or whether we humble ourselves because we have done so little good, and even that little so imperfectly. Works of charity and love are not to be estimated by the size or amount given, nor by the proportions of the deed done, but by the spirit prompting the gift and actuating the deed. All men, therefore, are in a state of equality as far as giving and doing for God are concerned. There will always be a difference in outward things, yet God looks upon the heart and the poorest person has it in his power to make his mite as acceptable to the Lord by simplicity of intention and purity of affection as the millions given by the Carnegies and Rockefellers or other multimillionaires. God rates the value of an action by the spirit in which it is done.

We should never decide for a person because of the largeness of his gift, or against him because of the smallness of his gift. The widow gave all she had, while the rich gave only a part; and she did so in a better spirit, having a simple desire to please God. She gave all that she had—properly translated, her whole life, i. e., all that she had for one day's sustenance and could have no more until by her labor she had acquired it. Hers was indeed a mighty trust in Divine Providence. Alas! that Zion should languish because so many of God's professing children are niggardly in providing for his cause, being fearful lest there should be no meal in the house to-morrow! The rich, who by reason of covetousness on the one hand and luxury on the other, give but little to God and his cause, should learn a lesson of humiliation from this account of the Jerusalem widow; while the poor who through distrust of God's providence, will not give what they might, should learn from it a lesson of reproof. Undenially God expects us to give and to do our all. Our Divine Master does not expect us to take the bread out of the children's mouths, for we must not forget that it is written: "If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." Still the Lord expects us to do all we can—to give to such an extent as that we shall have to sacrifice somewhat to do it; and, if things go poorly with us in a pecuniary way, we are not to begin our economizing in lessening our contributions to his cause. All our giving is to be willingly and cheerfully done, counting it a precious privilege to deny ourselves that the Lord's cause may not suffer for lack of the mite we may be able to give.

Dean Ramsey tells of a certain penurious laird in Fife, whose weekly contributions to the church collections, notwithstanding his largely increasing wealth, never exceeded the sum of one penny, that he, one day, by mistake dropped into the plate at the door a five-shilling piece; but, discovering his error before he was seated in his pew, hurried back, and was about to replace the silver coin by his customary penny when the elder in attendance cried out: "Stop, laird, ye may put what ye like in, but ye maun tak nae thing out." The laird, finding that his explanations went for nothing, at last said: "A weel, I suppose I'll get credit for it in heaven." "Na, na, laird," said the elder, "ye'll only get credit for the penny." The will it is that gives worth to the oblation, and, as to God's acceptance, sets the poorest giver on a level with the richest. It is the fullness of the heart rather than the fullness of the hand that counts with God; and in the balances of God the widow's mite always outweighs the shekels and talents of the most opulent—the all and the utmost of the one being a nobler aim than the superfluities of the other. That our purses are lean should never keep us from the greatest of luxuries—giving all we can to God and his cause.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, in his narrative of the Maiden Sisters makes mention of the "kindly woman, herself a poor widow," who on a given day of a certain year, "sent a fractional pudding from her own table to the Maiden Sisters." The poor widow, fighting hard to feed and clothe and educate her children had not forgotten the poorer ancient maidens. Says the Doctor: "I remembered it the other day as I stood by her place of rest, and I felt sure that it was remembered elsewhere. I know there are prettier words than 'pudding,' but I can't help it; the pudding went upon the record. I feel sure, with the mite which was cast into the treasury by that other poor widow whose deed the world shall remember forever." Tenfold sweeter to her was the widow's pudding because she had shared it with others. The benediction of God's favor and peace was upon her meal and the dear love of God was in her heart. That which is given to God and his cause counts before him only as it is a sacrifice, and its value is just that, and no more, which it has cost the giver. It is plain in the light of the judgment of him who sat "over against the treasury" that none are exempt from giving all they can. If we have the willing heart that God approves, even our mites and smallest deeds will be accepted of God and remembered by him. "Little Dorrit turned at the door to say 'God bless you!'" She said it very softly; but, perhaps, she may have been as audible above—who knows!—as a whole cathedral choir. Ah, yes—

"The sense of an earnest will
To help the lowly living,
And a terrible heart thrill
If you have no power of giving;
An arm to aid the weak,
A friendly hand to the friendless;
Kind words, so short to speak,
But whose echo is endless:
The world is great, these things are small,
They may be nothing, but they are all."

If we cannot give great sums to God and his cause, let us give what we can; if we cannot give a nickel, do let us abound in the labors of love, in prayer, praise and zeal for souls—anyway, if poorest of the poor, purseless, yet heart-rich, let us flow out in sympathy for all and breathe into the ear of some troubled, tried and afflicted one; a soft, tender, loving "God bless you!" Just doing this, if this be our all, we shall not live in vain.

PAUL'S MESSAGE TO A PREACHER.

A Little Sermon to Timothy.

By Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.

Dear Timothy:—I think I am justified in beginning my sermon in this way by the fact that I have heard preachers begin sermons by saying, "My Dear People." You have recently received your appointment to a field of labor for the year. When the appointment was read out, did you not feel that it was rather a disappointment? That the Bishop or presiding elder had blundered? That you had not been appreciated at your true worth?

It has been said that somehow the appointments made by a Bishop generally work out the result that the preacher has received about such a field as he can work to the best advantage. Whether that is true or not I cannot tell, but I know that the preacher has it in his power to change a disappointment into his appointment.

"Disappointment, His appointment;
Change one letter, then I see
That the thwarting of my purpose
Is God's better choice for me."

You cannot do a worse thing for yourself than to brood over the thought that your talents have not been estimated at their proper value. Such brooding will nurture to a full growth feelings that in a little while will constitute you a chronic grumbler. Let me point out to you a better way by giving a bit of history. A preacher had always, had small appointments and he got into a state of chronic unhappiness about the matter. It bothered him and pestered him until his peace of mind about everything was unsettled. He could scarcely think of anything but the supposed fact that he and his work were not appreciated. One day it came over him that his attitude was an absurdity, that it was nourishing in his heart a spirit of envy against his brethren. So he sat down at his desk and wrote these sentences: "Where I am is of small importance compared to what I am. Life is more than place or pay or praise. The consciousness of work well done is the highest form of pay. There are no unimportant charges—no small or great with God. It is impossible to be too large for any work. Artificial classifications are powerless to obscure soul values." Then his discontent vanished and envy was crushed out of his heart and the great, deep peace of God came into his soul.

Let me call your attention to Paul's message to Archippus. In his letter to the Colossians, Paul says to the Church: "And say to Archippus: take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord that thou fulfill it." Yours is a ministry from the Lord, and in the fact that you have been called to it you have had bestowed upon you the greatest honor that is ever bestowed upon a human being. Now, because you are a professor of religion, I beseech you not to take the notion into your mind that this calling is a profession, in the common acceptance of that word. That idea indulged has hampered the progress of many preachers. Yours is a ministry. The idea in this word lies at the base of the incarnation of the Son of God. It is fundamental to Christ's atonement, and is the keynote of his life-work. "The Son of man came to minister." While you are appointed over the congregation you are not appointed a "lord over God's heritage." You have been named the chief leader that you may be the chief servant.

I wonder, Timothy, that so few Christians get the true idea contained in the word "service." It seems to me that it contains the master thought of the universe. God has painted it upon the heavens, for suns and stars shine for all. The earth, from her fruitful bosom yielding sustenance for man and beast, illustrates it most gloriously. Bishop Warren has said that "this world is built upon the keynote of everything living for others." What is nature but a panorama of God in his benevolent activity? In everything in nature God is revealed as serving man. And the chief illustration of the true glory of service is the life of our Lord. That solemn scene recorded in John's gospel, where Jesus sets the example of service by washing the disciples' feet, planted him in the deepest affections of the human heart forever. In serving our congregations, we are serving Christ, and it is the only way we can serve him. Remember, Timothy, Paul's great thought, "Your servants for Jesus' sake," and be diligent to acquire the habit of true service for your people.

Now, one other matter and I close my sermon: One of Paul's exhortations to his Timothy is this: "Give attendance to reading." This is an age of reading. Books and magazines and papers are so cheap that nearly everybody reads. The members of your congregation are reading, and if you neglect if you will surely get behind. The leader's place is not behind, but in front. You cannot be so busy that you have no time to read. I know that some preachers give that as an excuse for not reading. I have heard some undergraduates say that they were so engaged in protracted meetings that they did not have time to bring up their studies. What do you suppose John Wesley would have said to that? The plea of "no time for reading" is a delusion. The man who makes it is simply trying to deceive himself. If a man—any man—will reduce his daily work to a workable system he will find time to do anything that he ought to do. So, Timothy set apart a portion of each day for reading. And yet I would warn you to see to it that you do not become the slave of books. If you do, you will weaken your own power to think. The thoughts of other people will constantly be running through your mind, excluding your own thoughts. One who has had large experience and has made extensive observations has said, "Books are not the original sources of knowledge; they are not creative powers in any sense; they are merely helps and tools; they fill up gaps and correct much that is inaccurate and extend much that is inadequate, but without a living experience they are like rain and sunshine upon unbroken soil. The proper sources of knowledge are life, experience, personal feeling, thinking and acting." So, while I exhort you to read, I would have you do your own thinking.

"Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord that thou fulfill it." Fill it full of helpfulness. Fill it full of glad service for others. Fill it full of Christ. Sow these precious seeds in the hearts and lives of your people and the ripened fruits you will gather in the balmy airs and under the golden glow of the eternal skies. May the Lord find you a "good and faithful servant" when he comes for the reckoning.

REMARKS OF BISHOP E. E. HOSS,

Following Bishop Cranston's Paper Before the Recent Session of the Methodist Joint Commission on Federation and Union.

Mr. President:—I am very sorry that the Commissioners from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are not in position at the present time to make a written statement of their views in regard to the matters that are brought up for consideration in the paper just read by Bishop Cranston for the Commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church. But neither Bishop Wilson nor Bishop Denny could be with us at our meeting last night, and we were unwilling to take formal and definite action without their presence and help. Nevertheless, speaking for myself and representing what I believe to be the spirit of my Church, I am prepared to utter my mind with all freedom and, as I hope, without any trace of unchristian prejudice. It is my rooted conviction that the very first step toward securing a brotherly adjustment among the different bodies of American Methodists is to be found in a frank and full exhibition of the real difficulties that lie in the way of such a result. It ought to be possible for us to open our minds to one another. If we are too sensitive to listen to plain speech, then we are in no mood for fraternal negotiations; and the sooner we adjourn and go home, the better it will be. Were it possible for me to practice any evasion or reserve on so important an occasion as this is, then I should count myself utterly unworthy of the great honor that my Church has bestowed upon me in sending me hither.

Let me say, then, with all the courtesy that I can command, and yet with the utmost possible explicitness, that we are not in the least embarrassed nor confused by your proposition for union. There was never a time in our history when we were unwilling to give due and proper consideration to any advances from our sister Churches. In the very beginning of our separate history, and without waiting for the settlement of all outstanding differences, we sought honorable fraternity. Our offer, rejected in 1848, was never withdrawn, but remained open till 1874, when, to our very great joy, it was frankly accepted on the very terms that were originally attached to it.

Twenty years later, thinking that the time had fully come for a still closer rapprochement, we originated the scheme for federation, out of which much has already come, and to which we confidently look for still greater things. It will be a deep satisfaction to me till my dying day that in the providence of God I was a member of the special committee of the General Conference of 1894, which was appointed to deal with the whole matter, and that I wrote every word of the report which was adopted without the slightest modification by that body, and then passed on to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

There is still another fact of history, not so well known, that also ought to be mentioned here. The Convention of 1845, which completed the organization of our branch of the Church, passed a resolution to the effect (I regret not having the exact words at my command) that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, would always be ready, under proper conditions, to treat with the Methodist Episcopal Church on the subject of reunion. It was not in the minds of the great men who composed that assembly to shut themselves up blindly against the developments of the future. They did not know what the future might bring forth, and they solemnly put themselves on record as being prepared to meet any fresh emergency in a rational and Christian way.

In line with their promise, and by the express direction of our General Conference that met in Asheville, N. C., during May of the current year, we are here present before God to hear and to weigh what ever offer you may have to make. It is, indeed, a source of gratification to us to confer with men who manifest so much of the mind of Christ as you have done since we came together.

While I am on this point, and to keep the history straight, I may as well add that the assertion so often printed and lately repeated by one of the leading journals and also by one of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, that in the past we have time and again declined overtures for union, is absolutely without foundation in fact. No such overture has ever at any time been presented to us by anybody that had the slightest authority to do it. I am not at all unmindful that in the run of the years several fraternal messengers have rather gratuitously advised us to "come back to our mother;" but that is quite another story, and nowise contradicts the truth of what I have just said. Even now, my beloved brethren, it is not a direct but only a constructive invitation that reaches us. Yet not wishing to give any occasion to the enemy to blaspheme, we have responded to it without hesitation.

My own heart is most profoundly concerned for the real unity of American Methodism. Confronted as we are by a thousand open or secret foes of the faith, it is a thing of supreme concern that we should array ourselves in solid columns and with unbroken front. If we are Christians, we must come to a perfect understanding and a harmonious co-operation. Less than this is less than our Lord has a right to expect of us. Individually, I do not shy even at "organic union." The phrase, like most other forms of speech, is an elastic one, and may mean one thing or may mean another. Of course, I shall claim the right to put my own interpretation on it. What that interpretation is will come out later. You need have no fear that I shall palter with words in a double sense.

But if there is to be any closer union than now obtains, several things are necessary: 1. All the existing compacts, including those that were framed by the Cape May Commission and those that have since been framed by the Joint Commission on Federation, must first be honored, not in the breach, but in the observance of them. It is not worth while to enter into any new covenants till we are ready, both in the letter and in the spirit, to observe the old ones. The Church that is faithless in one engagement will, if interest or convenience require it, be faithless to another, and does not deserve to be trusted. If it be said in answer to this dictum, that General Conferences cannot always control the actions of their agents, nor enforce the terms of their own voluntary contracts, then it only remains to further affirm that General Conferences which are so impotent are practicing a fraud when they make such contracts. This language is perfectly general in its scope, and hits only those, but all those, who are in the way of it. Here I stand stubbornly, and from this position I will not budge an inch.

2. Negotiations must not proceed upon the supposition, express or implied, that denominationalism as such is schismatic or sinful. Schism, in the New Testament meaning of the word, is not separation from a Church, but a chronic and malignant quarrel inside of it. Some Protestants, including a few Methodists, have actually stolen the argument of the Romanists and the High-Church Episcopalians concerning union, and are using it as if it were a new discovery. Do they not see that they are thereby cancelling their own right to an ecclesiastical existence? If their contention be true, then it follows that Luther, Calvin, Knox and Cramer were all wrong and their Roman antagonists all right. Nay, the most of the pleas that are used to bolster up the plan for what is called "the reunion of Christendom" would, if logically followed out, land us inevitably in the conclusion that Protestantism should abjure its past record and make a speedy peace with Rome. But there is nothing in the New Testament to justify any such view. Not one of the classical passages that are quoted to sustain it has any such force. Our Lord, for example, never said that his sheep should all become of one fold. It was worth the revision of the New Testament to get that false translation out of John x, 16. What the Lord did say was this: "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also must I bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be (not one fold, but) one flock and one shepherd." The unity of the flock depends not on the unity of the fold, but on the unity of the shepherd. It would be an impossible thing to make one fold large enough to hold all Christ's sheep. Equally fallacious is the use that is sought to be made of our Lord's high priestly prayer in John xvii, and of the great paragraph on "the seven unities" in Ephesians iv. But I have not time to notice them now. The conception of a world-wide Church, under one authoritative head, whether that head be a pope, a council, a general assembly, or a general conference, is at war with the whole genius of Protestantism. That conception was not in the Primitive Church any more than it is in the New Testament. I do not believe that during the first century anybody ever dreamed of it. It came later, along with a flood of other errors and heresies. Human nature being what it is, such a Church as this would inevitably grow proud of its own bulk and obesity, and in the course of time would become, first, arrogant, then persecuting, and then rotten and corrupt. Denominationalism within due limits, which men are to determine for themselves and nobody else is to determine for them, is one of the greatest safeguards of Christian purity. Not even as an ideal to be realized in the remote future do I look or pray for the abolition of it. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty; and where there is liberty, there is sure to be diversity.

3. We shall make no real progress toward the goal in view as long as we insist that the past separations among the Methodists have been wicked or evil. As I look at it, the providence of God has been in them all. The separation of the Methodist Protestants in 1824-28 was accompanied, it is true, by a great deal of unchristian acerbity on both sides. That, of course, was wrong. But good came out of it. We are all indebted, largely indebted, to our Protestant brethren; and we have all paid them the homage of imitation. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1866 followed their example by giving laymen an equal representation in the General Conference and effective representation in the Annual Conferences, and the Methodist Episcopal Church moved later on the same tracks. Still more earnestly do I hold to the opinion that the separation of 1844—"which was by consent and mutual"—was an epochal incident in the history of American Methodism and a real contribution to the growth of the kingdom of God in these United States. The General Conference which met in that year was not, as is commonly believed, made up of angry disputants. Having read the records again and again, and with the greatest care, I declare that, in my judgment, a more serious, conscientious and devout company of men never met together on this continent. They moved slowly and acted reluctantly, with heart-aches and hot tears on their cheeks. The anger, the irritations, the unchristian conflicts came later, and might have been avoided. But the separation was designed to promote peace and brotherhood. Not even Charles Elliot, the author of "The Great Secession," was ever able to answer his own able speech in favor of it. It simply could not be avoided. Conditions had arisen which would have wrecked the Methodism of the North if it had remained in alliance with the South, and, as Stephen Olin pointed out in burning words, would have wrecked the Methodism of the South if it had remained in alliance with the North. As things turned out, the two Churches were set in right alignments with their own sections. God was surely in it, in spite of the human follies that accompanied it.

4. I go a step farther still, and make bold to say that any attempt at the present time to bring about a union by pressure would be foolish and futile. The advocates of union must understand that they have no legitimate instrument but persuasion, and that even this they must use in a spirit of love. Let those who fear God and are controlled not by a lust for ecclesiastical empire, but by zeal for the extension of his kingdom, beware how they try to create division in the ranks of any Church that is not willing to merge itself in a larger organization. Any such move would provoke hot and righteous indignation, and would work an indefinite postponement of the day of a complete unification. The sad experience of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church ought surely to teach us a lesson here. The result of a premature effort to force an unwilling element in that communion—whether a majority or simply a large minority—into an alliance that it did not relish, has ended in a long series of scandals. The same thing, on a much more exaggerated scale, would occur if a similar attempt were made to rush the consolidation of our Methodisms. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when it moves, and whichever way it moves, will move of its own unforced accord, and not in broken detachments, but in a solid body 2,000,000 strong. The suggestion that it may become necessary to reach the laymen by going over the heads of the ministers is, if serious, sinister; and if not serious, silly. Our ministers and laymen have marched together too long to split up into opposing camps now. That will come to pass on the day after the Greek Calends.

5. If a real, vital and permanent union is to be effected, each separate Church must be ready to make some concessions, and this, too, not on trifling points, but on matters of real importance. There must be no blinking of this fact and no policy of shiftiness or maneuvering for advantage. Those who are most eager for union ought to be the first to say how far they are willing to go to obtain it. The mere intimation that either one of the Churches should absorb the other, retaining meanwhile all its own prized peculiarities, would be an impertinence. If organic union ever becomes a reality, it will consist not in the mere enlargement of any existing Church, but in the creation of a new Church. The Southern Methodists do not wish to absorb anybody, and they are not going to be absorbed. Many of us, at any rate, before submitting to that will camp out under God's kindly stars.

6. As a matter of course the largest Church going into the new organization would have the greatest weight and influence. That would be natural and proper. But it would also be natural and proper for the minority bodies, simply because they are minorities, to insist in advance on the safeguarding of their reserved rights by stipulations of organic law. Majorities can take care of themselves; it is minorities that must have protection. Nor would it be sufficient simply to formulate a constitution. The question as to who shall interpret the constitution is one of equal importance. From our standpoint, an omnipotent General Conference that may sit one day as a legislature to enact laws and the next day as a supreme court to pass upon their constitutionality, is simply a despotism tempered by religion. The fact that it is made up of good men does not alter the situation. Good men are sometimes rash and foolish. The liberties of a Church, as truly as those of a nation, are too valuable to be trusted to the precarious guardianship of any unrestricted synod or conference. Somewhere on the outside there must be lodged a power of arrest. Whether it should lie in a suspensive veto by the executive with ultimate appeal to the whole body of the ministry and chosen representatives of the laity, or should take on some other form, is an open question. But that it must exist in some form is not an open question. On this ground somebody will be compelled to do a considerable amount of yielding. Either one Church or the other must modify its theory and practice.

7. Let me conclude by adding that the vast alteration which the Methodist Episcopal Church has made in the original conditions of membership are a stumbling-block to some of us. As we read the Discipline of that Church it requires belief in the Twenty-Five Articles of Religion from all candidates. This is a departure from original Methodism. The Twenty-Five Articles are very good. I do not want to alter them, lest we should get something not so good. But I am opposed to thrusting them down the throats of immature believers, or of mature ones either, for that matter. John Wesley never would have dreamed of doing it. Following the noble catholicity of the English reformers, he cut all the creeds out of the ordination ritual for ministers—all of them. It is inconceivable that he should have exacted any of them from laymen. Equally objectionable to some of us is the demand that is made of candidates that they should profess saving faith. Not that we disbelieve in saving faith, not at all; nor that we should cease to urge the pursuit of it on all our people, but that we would not insist on the conscious attainment of it as a sine qua non of Church membership. Of old the Methodists took in seekers after religion, and gave them the ordinances. The new Methodism that declines to do so seems to us to partake more of the nature of a Puritan conventicle than of a catholic Church. Nor can it be successfully maintained that its membership, on the average, is either any more orthodox in its belief or any more devout in its piety, than that of the Methodisms that still cling to the usage of the fathers and founders.

8. That some of you will be found demanding surrender from our Church in some important respects, I do not doubt. Be it so. Speak out your minds, brethren. It will not offend us in the least. We desire you, in fact, to tell us what in your judgment we ought to give up. We shall listen to you respectfully, and either comply with your wishes or else seek to show you why we cannot conscientiously do so.

GUESTS AT FAMILY WORSHIP.

There is probably no mistress of a household who has not felt uncertain about asking guests to join in family worship. Everyone has acquaintances she would not hesitate to ask to the table, but would hesitate to ask to the home altar. Perhaps the reluctance arises from a dissimilarity of creed, and a fear of offense in consequence. But the diversity of the creed is no bar. Prayer has nothing to do with creeds. Prayer is the universal religion, and men of every creed and men of no creed may meet together at the feet of one heavenly Father. The reluctance arises more likely from that weak shame-facedness which too often prevents sympathy between friends on spiritual subjects. They are afraid of being misunderstood, smiled at, criticized.

This latter idea is one which even good and great men have not always met bravely, for when Doctor Fuller once had some guests of great quality and fashion, God-fearing as he was, he omitted his family worship on their account. This act, which he bitterly repented, he designated as "a bold bashfulness which durst offend God, while it did fear man." But we should remember with the grand old preacher that our guests, though they be ever so high or rich, are yet by all the laws of hospitality below us while they sojourn under our roof; therefore, whoever come within our door should also come within our household customs and discipline. If they sit at our table for meat, it is but kind and right they should also bow at it in prayer.—Ladies Homes Journal.

Church News

The Central Christian Advocate, of Kansas City, states that there are 40,902 Methodists in Toronto.

The Presbyterians are reported to be aggressively missionary in St. Louis, and are raising $35,000 to extend their work in that city.

The salary of Dr. Charles F. Aked, the pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church of New York City, of which John D. Rockefeller is a member, has been raised from $10,000 to $12,000.

The Commencement sermon at Whitworth College will be preached on May 14 by Bishop Warren A. Candler, of Atlanta, Ga., and the annual address will be delivered by the Hon. Earl Brewer, of Clarksdale, Miss., on May 16.

The Protestant theological seminaries of the United States had in them 5,792 students in 1904, and in 1910, 7,899. In the twenty-two Methodist seminaries the students number 1,224, an increase of more than 70 per cent within the past six years.

Tolstol is said to have translated the whole of the New Testament from the original Greek. Besides the ancient languages, he knew French, German, and English. Though not considered entirely orthodox, he was an earnest student of the Scriptures.

The Texas Educational Commission met again last week, and the press dispatches report that Dallas was selected as the site of the Methodist University to be established in that State. It is said that it will likely be located in Highland Park, one of the most attractive suburbs of the city.

Bishop Hoss preached a great sermon to an overflowing audience at McKendree Church, Nashville, on Sunday, January 29. His theme was "The Great Commandment." The Tennessean says that the people throng to hear this distinguished divine whenever it is known that he will occupy a pulpit in that city.

Dr. John R. Mott has set sail for Europe, whither he goes to visit the colleges of Switzerland and the Near East. The ninth World's Student Christian Federation Conference will be held in Robert College, Constantinople, April 26-30. While abroad Dr. Mott will also meet in England the continuation committee of the Edinburgh Conference.

It has been announced that Mr. B. Fay Mills, who some years ago was one of the most active and widely known evangelists in America, will soon become the pastor of an independent congregation in Chicago. It will be remembered that Mr. Mills, after doing a great work, became somewhat loose in his theology, and since that time his success has not been so conspicuous.

The Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church will hold their spring meeting at Winona, Minnesota, instead of at Oklahoma City as was formerly announced. This change is said to have been made because many of the General Committees of the Church will hold their sessions in the West next fall and it will be more convenient for the Bishops to have their autumn conference in Oklahoma, which it is understood they will do.

Bishop Denny spent the last Sunday in January in St. Louis, preaching at St. John's Church at the morning hour and at Centenary in the evening. He was the guest of ex-Governor Loh. V. Stephens during his stay in the Missouri metropolis. The Methodists of this city, according to report, have not yet abandoned hope of having Bishop Denny reside among them, and are offering him an episcopal residence if he will consent to do so.

The Texas Christian Advocate of January 26 contains an account of a public reception given Bishop Mouzon by the Methodists of San Antonio in Travis Park Church on January 18th, the object of which was to welcome the Bishop as a resident of that growing city. The Methodists now have in this metropolis of southwest Texas 3,000 members, and a Sunday school enrollment of 3,031. Here also is situated the San Antonio Female College of which Dr. J. E. Harrison is president.

Bishop Morrison spent the fourth Sunday in January at Southern College, at Sutherland, Fla., and delivered in the auditorium "an eloquent and instructive sermon" to a large congregation. The trustees of this institution and Dr. Hillburn, the president, are planning "an extensive educational campaign in the interest of Christian education in general and the Southern College in particular." Among those who have been engaged to assist in this movement are Bishop Morrison, Bishop Kilgo, and Dr. J. E. Dickey, the president of Emory College, Ga.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America is a most important body for advancing Church union and Church usefulness, and the meeting of the executive committee, held in Washington last week, marked no little progress during the past year. And yet we wonder if it was not with some trepidation that its members went to pay their respects to the President, considering that the body of churches of which he is a member was refused membership in the Council. He was generous enough to praise "its team work for better humanity."—The New York Independent of February 2.

It is stated that the trustees of the Seashore Camp Grounds will issue bonds to the amount of $20,000 to build a new tabernacle and make other needed improvements. The bonds will be in denominations of $100 and up, and will draw interest at 6 per cent. The summer Divinity School, maintained at this place by the Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi Conferences, promises to become one of the leading institutions of that kind in the South, and, in addition to this, other notable organizations will hold their annual sessions there. And, of course, the camp meeting will be kept up as heretofore. The building committee named to carry forward this work is composed of Mr. L. N. Dantzler and Dr. W. T. Bolton, of Biloxi; Mr. Sidney Otis, of Logtown, and Mr. Daniels, of Algiers.

The Minutes of the New Orleans Baptist Association for 1910 show that in this city that denomination has six churches which reported their numerical strength and the salaries paid their pastors as follows: Coliseum, 362 members, salary $2,000; First Church, 417 members, salary $1,250; Grace Church, 79 members, salary $850; Valence, 152 members, salary $600; St. Charles, 157 members, salary $1,200; Central, 64 members, paid minister $15. 261 members were received, and 123 lost by deaths, removals and otherwise, making a net gain of 138. The aggregate membership is 1,231, and the total amount paid for ministerial support was $5,915. We take it that the salaries of most of the pastors were supplemented by appropriations from the Baptist Mission Board, though as to that we are not informed.

A meeting looking to the organization of a Young Woman's Christian Association in New Orleans was held at the Progressive Union Hall on Friday evening, the 3rd inst. The attendance was large, and the gathering was presided over by Mrs. W. W. Carre. The principal address was made by Miss Abby McElroy, Field Secretary of the Young Woman's Christian Association. Other speakers were Mr. Philip Werlein, Dr. W. McF. Alexander, and Miss Braselman, of the Maison-Blanche department store. It was announced at the close of the exercises that 1,000 young women had enrolled as members at a dollar a year, and that fifteen women had agreed to give $100 each. Several business firms of the city also made liberal subscriptions. It is said that the success of the movement is assured.

Concerning Missions.

W. H. M. S., MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The ad interim meeting of the executive committee of the W. H. M. S., of the Mississippi Conference, was held at Jackson, in Capitol Street Church, Thursday morning, Jan. 26, 1911, with Mrs. T. B. Holloman, president, in the chair. Prayer was offered by Mrs. J. R. Jones. Members answering to roll call were, Mrs. T. B. Holloman, president; Mrs. H. M. Ellis, first vice-president; Mrs. J. R. Ellis, third vice-president; Mrs. B. F. Lewis, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Chas. McQueen, recording secretary; Mrs. J. K. Dunn, treasurer.

The president asked Mrs. Lewis to explain the order of business which necessitated this meeting. This Mrs. Lewis did, and read the report of the ad interim meeting of the provisional committee. Mrs. McQueen read a letter from Mrs. McDonnell. The committee discussed the needs of the city mission work at Meridian, Laurel, and Biloxi. Mrs. Lewis made the following motion, which was carried: "In view of the fact that we have been instructed not to hold the annual meeting until after the council meeting, I therefore move that this committee formulate plans of work for the coming year."

(Signed) Mrs. B. F. Lewis, Mrs. J. K. Dunn. The following motion offered by Mrs. H. M. Ellis, prevailed:

That this executive committee memorialize the Woman's Council to the effect that we desire to use one-half of our dues for needy parsonages, and missionary work already established within our bounds, said funds to be divided at the discretion of the committee at the annual meeting.

A motion prevailed to hold the annual meeting the week following the adjournment of the General Council.

The arrangement of the programme for the annual meeting was the next business in order. Mrs. Lewis moved that Brother George Galloway be asked to preach the annual sermon. Mrs. Tom McCaskill, of Meridian, was appointed to respond to the address of welcome; Mrs. Geo. Ellis, of Lucedale, alternate. Mrs. H. M. Ellis was appointed to prepare a memoir to Mrs. W. H. Huntley, our beloved and lamented second vice-president, said memoir to be read at our annual meeting and a copy sent to the New Orleans Advocate. The Minutes were then read and adopted. After prayer, offered by Mrs. T. B. Holloman, the committee stood adjourned.

A most delightful lunch was prepared for our comfort and convenience by a committee of ladies from the H. M. S., of Capitol Street Church, and an hour of sweet intercourse was spent with friends. Our loving appreciation and thanks for this thoughtful kindness are indeed hard to express—suffice it to say "We will come again—we will come again."

A GOOD BOOK.

CONSCIENCE AND ITS CULTURE; OR, THROUGH CONSCIENCE TO CHRIST. By Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, B. D. Cloth. Price, $1.00. Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn.

A book intended not primarily for scholars and students, but for anybody and everybody who desires to understand more clearly how the little mechanism called conscience works, to know whether or not it may be trusted as a guide, and to be assisted in discovering and applying sound and effective principles in the moral and religious training of their pupils or children.

Some estimates from various sources:

"A fine, clear thinker—well thought out and valuable."—R. J. Cooke, D. D., Book Editor of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

"On the whole, an exceedingly helpful discussion of a most important subject."—Olin A. Curtis, S. T. D., Professor of Systematic Theology, Drew Theological Seminary.

"He handles his subject well, indeed, lifting conscience into a place of enlarged significance."—Methodist Quarterly Review, Nashville.

"He gives us a book which is full of practical instruction and wholesome warning."—The Christian Advocate, Nashville.

"A real contribution to the literature of ethics."—T. W. Lewis, Pastor First Methodist Church, Memphis, Tenn.

"He treats the subject with much good sense and practical helpfulness. We are especially pleased with his chapter on 'A Conscience Void of Offense.' This is precisely the sort of teaching which the Church greatly needs—the only wholesome holiness."—Zion's Herald, Boston.

"I have read the book with both pleasure and profit, and intend to read it again. It will stand a second reading."—W. S. Lagrone, Pastor First Methodist Church, Greenville, Miss.

"The aim of this volume is intensely practical. The author has given serious and intelligent consideration to the important matters which he discusses, and his conclusions are worthy of careful study."—The Sunday School Magazine, January Number.

"It is very interesting and instructive, splendidly gotten up, well written, and should grace every home."—Indianola Enterprise.

"The subjects discussed are pertinent and timely, the work throughout is well done, and the young author has reflected credit upon himself, his Conference and his Church. It deserves a large circulation, and we trust it will soon find its way into the homes of many of our people, blessing them and lifting their aspirations to higher and holier things."—The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

ANOTHER GOOD BOOK.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE, consisting of five Sermons on the Office of the Holy Spirit, by the Rev. W. G. Harbin.

Rev. M. M. Black, one of the strongest preachers of the Mississippi Conference, says:

"MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE" is one of the most helpful and stimulating books on the devotional line that I have read in many a day, and is worthy of a wide circulation among both preachers and laymen. The vital theme treated of in this meritorious little volume, not, however, in a controversial, or theological, but in a practical way, is the work of the Holy Spirit, whose divine office and mission are, alas, too often lost sight of, or minimized in this day of multiplied ecclesiastical machinery and dependence upon organized effort.

I have seen some larger and far more pretentious volumes on the doctrine of the Holy Spirit that are not half so illuminating and desirable as this booklet, which is a gem of its kind.

"The earnest reading of this little book will, in many cases mark an epoch in the life of him who reads it."

Bound in cloth. Price, 50c. Address New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HOW THE FLOWER MISSION STARTED:

One day a little English girl was walking along a street in London on her way to school. She carried her books and a bouquet for the teacher. A poor little crippled boy, leaning on crutches, said to her:

"Say, gimme me a flower!"

The kind-hearted little girl picked out a rose and handed it to him, but four or five other little children gathered around her, each begging for a flower, and one by one she gave all her pretty posies away.

The next day she took two bouquets, one for the teacher and one for the street children, and day after day she carried her flowers, until at last she took a basket for the poor children. This was the beginning of the Flower Mission. The news spread, and the idea was taken up all over London, and then some one in Boston began it, and then in New York, and now thousands are given away all over the country. So all this beautiful work started with one kind-hearted little girl.—The Mayflower.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

After an absence of more than five months, it was a great delight to get back to my regular post of duty, and settle down to work of the kind to which I was accustomed. This is one of the most pleasant posts in the division. We have a transport every two weeks, which insures us fresh Australian meat, and California fruit all the time. There is a small ice plant that supplies the post with that most necessary luxury. One must drink hot water a few months to rightly appreciate ice.

While on detached service there were many hardships, and not a few dangers—chiefly from poor food and bad water. But it is all happily past now, and will not be recalled. There are a few incidents of the trip that may be of interest to the readers of the Advocate, and while they are fresh in my mind I will write them. God is so good to us, even when we are wayward and thoughtless, that I have often marvelled at his wonderful care. When we look for him, he is always to be found, and we can see his handiwork everywhere. I used to think that the scenes of the New Testament were of the past, and that they were not to be found in these late days, yet if you read this letter you can see that the words of Jesus belong to the twentieth century, equally as forcibly as they did to the first. Walking along the shore of the sea at Aparri one Sabbath morning, I noticed the fishermen mending their nets, and it recalled the scenes described in the Holy Book where other fishermen were called to be fishers of men; another day I saw the little brown men "launch out into the deep" for a night of work, and it recalled a time when the apostles went fishing, and "that night they caught nothing." Watching the nets cast from the sides of the boats, I caught a glimpse of that early morning when the Master stood on the shore and asked, "children have ye any meat?" It seemed as if one could almost see the light of the early morning gilding the hills of that olden country, the empty boat, the useless net, the weary men, and the glorious figure of the blessed Master waiting at the seaside. "Cast the net on the right side," then the tired men became electrified—they knew it was the Master. It all seems so real, after seeing the fishermen at their work. And another day while walking through a native village, I saw "two women grinding at the mill"—something I had not deemed possible. At once there flashed into my mind that the Master was surely coming as he said he would, and he would find the "two women grinding at the mill." These little handmills are much the same as they were in his time, and it will be many years before they are not used in the East. Jesus will find things just as he said they would be. But I did not mean to preach a sermon, so must hurry on lest this letter be too long.

Leaving the Cagayan Valley in November, we went to the country of the Ilocanos. They are by far the best people and the most industrious I have met. Their little farms look thrifty and well kept. We visited five of the big towns there. In one are the ruins of a magnificent old church, and in each other one were fine churches—all Catholic. I was informed that they were not well attended, as there has been a split in the church, and many natives are members of the new "Independent" church which was started by a native Catholic priest. There are a good many Protestants in Ilocos, Norte and Sur. The missionaries have been pretty busy in that fertile country. At the capital—Laoag—the Christians (Catholic) have a very prosperous mission. I may add in passing that it is the most prosperous and successful I found in the provinces. It is in charge of a physician, and he is very popular with the people of the town, whether churchmen or not. They all say he is "a most useful citizen, even if he is a missionary," as there is no other American doctor there. I found him to be one of the most consecrated of men, and also of a charming personality. He was delighted to see me, and have a talk on medical and other subjects. He expressed great regret that I was to be in Laoag for so short a time. On Sunday I attended service in the little native chapel, and heard a sermon in Ilocano—of which dialect I understood not one word. After the sermon, Sunday school began. Dr. Lemmon has a class of school boys who understand some English, and are taught in that language. One remark he made to his class sent a glow through my heart, "Boys, Dr. Ballard and I have had a regular love feast this week. He loves the Master, and loves to talk about him." I made a short talk to the class, and received most excellent attention. Altogether my stay in Ilocos Norte was rather pleasant, though our accommodations were poor.

We reached Manila late in November, and there I learned that I was ordered back to the States for duty. I sail April 14th, 1911. This was good news for me, and when I went to church on December 4th, I had more than one cause for happiness. The last time I had attended a real service was just fifty weeks before. How sweet was the singing! How inspiring the sermon! But how homesick it did make me to see the little American children, and to hear their childish trebles singing Alexander's "Glory Song." How I do long to see a certain little five-year-old boy—the only grandson of my precious old mother—as well as the other members of the family! Children out here call to my mind my own child more than anything else.

But this letter is now too long. I shall visit Japan on my way home—of that more later. Letters mailed before March 1st, and sent to me at Manila, will reach me before I sail. My friends cannot realize what a comfort letters are.

Trusting that I may soon see many of you, I am,
Yours fraternally
J. C. BALLARD,

CAPTAIN LEVEN LAKE.

The press has given us an account of the recent death of this good man at Grenada, Miss., in his ninety-fourth year. I leave it to others to write of his great worth and merit. I beg a short space to relate an incident in his life which impressed me and which proved a great blessing to my life. When I entered the University of Mississippi to study law, Dr. R. W. Jones, the professor of Chemistry in the University, was superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school at Oxford. Upon my arrival he at once assigned me as teacher of a class of young girls ranging from fifteen to eighteen years old. One of the girls I remember distinctly now, Miss Frost Roane, daughter of Judge W. A. Roane. The class numbered something like fifteen girls. Every Sunday morning Brother Lake would insist on reciting "as one of the girls" in this class. He took his seat among them and recited his lesson as carefully as any "other girl" in the class. His presence was a benediction to me and a blessing to those girls. We all loved him. He was gentle, kind, fatherly, and never failed to impress upon us that it was worth while to be a Christian. We felt honored to have him as a member of our class.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF MY CONFERENCE.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

I closed my last with these words, "Be true to God, true to your ministerial vows, true to your people." Remember our Savior said, "Abide in me and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned." Thus, you see, you have got to bear fruit or "burn." Again, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Again, Jesus said, "If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." Read carefully and thoughtfully our Savior's last charge to his disciples, especially John's version of it. The whole of John's Gospel is worth your thoughtful consideration. In his "Studies in the Gospel of John" Dr. Geo. P. Eckman has this to say in his introduction: "The book is redolent of the spirit of Christ. It is one of the profoundest works known to men, yet it charms the humblest minds. It is the choicest book for devotional reading which the New Testament contains, yet the theologian will never get to the bottom of it. A thorough acquaintance with this Gospel is a liberal education in the things which a Christian ought to know and believe to his soul's health. To fill one's mind with its language and one's heart with its spirit is to insure a noble and effective life." John seemed to be in touch with our Savior all the time. He was called "The Beloved Disciple." I realize more and more the great importance of keeping in touch with the Savior. This will help you to be a "soul-winner." This is in part, what you are for, if indeed you are called to the work of the ministry.

Watch for opportunities to do good. Do not neglect the aged and bedridden. Look carefully after the young people and the children. Your most lasting impressions are made there. Be careful of the impression you make on the heart of a child.

Let me suggest, brother, if you use tobacco in any way, quit it, if you can. I said some years ago to a young man who drank whiskey, "Logan, quit it." He replied, "Mr. Lewis, I can't." But he did, for in a few years he was in his grave. You may say, "Brother Lewis, I can't." Yes you can, if you will. Much depends on the proper exercise of your will power. But if, indeed, you can't, let me suggest use it in moderation, and never in a lady's parlor. A young man said to me one night, years ago, after we had partaken of our evening meal, "Brother Lewis, will you have a smoke?" at the same time handing out his tobacco and book. I said, "No, and I don't suffer and one to smoke in my wife's parlor." I may have been a little abrupt in my reply, but the idea of a young man asking one of God's ministers to smoke a "cigarette"! I confess with shame that I was a slave to the weed for many years. It came near destroying my health, and my voice at one time was almost gone. I chewed, I smoked a pipe, I smoked cigars, but never got low enough down to smoke a cigarette or shoot craps. Somehow, it seems to me, the two go or ought to go together. No, my brother, some of your people work hard, economize closely in order to pay their church dues. They pay it willingly, but I imagine they don't want you to spend it for tobacco. I have often, when in conversation with preachers who smoked cigars had to turn my face to one side, or put a book or fan before my nose and his mouth to keep from gagging. So many mothers who have boys to rear have talked to me about preachers coming into their homes and using the weed in the presence of their boys, and then when the mother talks to the boys about using tobacco, the little fellows say, "why mother, your preacher smokes."

Take a bold, firm stand against every evil of every character. Stand by the truth. Live it and preach it. It will render you unpopular with some people, but will raise you wonderfully in the estimation of God and the angels. I have just read with thrilling interest "The Circuit Rider's Wife." Circuit Rider suffered more than once because he would act and preach the truth. He would not lie to his presiding elder, or anyone else, in order to get a better appointment.

Keep humble and preach the truth, even if it does militate against your financial interest.

Be true to your people. Some of them need your attention more than others do. Take special care of the poor of your charge. "The poor have the Gospel preached to them." Some of them have but little else. It is nice to be able to go into the homes of the "well-to-do" people, partake of their dainties, etc. It is profitable to enter into the homes of the humble poor and talk to them of Jesus and his love, kneel and pray with and for them. I once entered the home of a poor widow woman who had been neglected by preachers till she had become soured and discouraged. She treated us a little coolly at first. We talked to her, prayed with her, then sang a sweet touching song. Tears came into her eyes. When we rose to leave, she said in a mellow tone, "Come again." Apply yourself closely to your studies, but do not neglect faithful, pastoral work.

Jackson, Miss.

FURTHER EXPLANATION NEEDED.

Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, is the latest divine to have settled the question of the origin of the human race. He is reported as declaring, in an address recently made in Boston, that "the story of Adam and Eve was a parable invented to satisfy the child-mind of the early man." The Bishop further explained that "it is just as we say to the child to-day that 'God made us,' and then explain later on that we were developed in the process of evolution." The Bishop's explanation is like many others which raise more questions than they answer. A Georgia colored minister explained the origin of the black race by saying that when the Lord made the races of men out of the earth, and leaned them up against the fence to dry, one was left too long and turned black in the sunshine. A doubter raised the question, "Who made dat ar' fence?" Like questions are sure to be put to the Bishop. For example: "Who started that evolution?" "Who invented that parable?" "Where did the mature mind that could invent such a parable to 'satisfy the child-mind' come from?" Moreover, the Bishop's explanation is getting out of date. They are beginning to see, even in Boston, that the ordinary theory of evolution does not account for origins. In spite of the Bishop's belated discovery and announcement, that Younger Catechism question will continue to be asked; "Who made you?" And the answer is likely to continue to be, "God made me—and all things."—The Presbyterian.

THE PLACE WHERE MAN SHOULD DIE.

How little reck's it where men lie,
When once the moment's past
In which the dim and glazing eye
Has looked on earth its last—
Whether beneath the sculptured urn
That coffined form shall rest,
Or in its nakedness return
Back to its mother's breast?

Death is a common friend or foe,
As different men may hold,
And at his summons each must go,
The timid and the bold;
But when the spirit, free and warm,
Deserts it, as it must,
What matter where the lifeless form
Dissolves again to dust?

The soldier falls mid corpses piled
Upon the battle plain,
Where reless war steeds gallop wild
Above the mangled slain;
But though his course be grim to see,
Hoof-trampled on the sod,
What reck's it, when the spirit free,
Has soared aloft to God?

The coward's dying eyes may close
Upon his downy bed,
And softest hands his limbs compose,
Or garments o'er them spread,
But ye who shun the bloody fray,
When fall the mangled brave,
Go—strip his coffin lid away
And see him in his grave!

'Twas sweet, indeed, to close our eyes
With those we cherish near,
And, wafted upwards by their sighs,
Soar to some calmer sphere;
But whether on the scaffold high,
Or in the battle's van,
The fittest place where man can die
Is where he dies for man.

—Michael Joseph Barry.

THE BEGINNING OF A MAN.

That was a good answer which was given at a Band of Hope meeting, when a visitor asked the question, "What is a boy?"

A little fellow started from his seat, and replied: "A boy, sir, is the beginning of a man."

That was a true answer, for every man was once a boy. Let us remember that what a boy is in his youth usually decides what kind of a man he will become.

So boys, be true, be honest, kind, brave and industrious now, and then when you have grown to be men, you will be the kind of men that our country needs.—Apples of Gold.

A TALK WITH BOYS.

"Remember, my son," says Robert J. Burdette, "you have to work. Whether you handle a pick or pen, a wheelbarrow or a set of books, digging ditches or editing a paper, ringing an auction bell or writing funny things, you must work. If you look around you, you will see the men who are most able to live the rest of their lives without work are the men who work the hardest. Don't be afraid of killing yourself with overwork. It is beyond your power to do that on the sunny side of thirty. Men die sometimes, but it is because they quit work at 6 p. m. and don't get home till 2 a. m. It is the interval that kills, my son. The work gives you an appetite for your meals; it lends solidity to your slumbers; it gives you a perfect and grateful appreciation of a holiday."

"There are young men who do not work, but the world is not proud of them. It does not even know their names. It simply speaks of them as 'old So-and-So's boys.' Nobody likes them. The great, busy world does not know that they are there. So find out what you want to be and do, and take off your coat and do it. The busier you are, the less harm you will be apt to get into, the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter and happier your holidays, and the better satisfied will all the world be with you."—Christian Guardian.

HOW AISLIE SAVED THE BIBLE.

It was in the year 1555, when Queen Mary sat upon the English throne and filled the land with trouble because of her terrible persecution of the Protestants.

In the west of England was a little village called Harrant. At one end of the hamlet, standing apart from the few dwellings scattered along either side of its single street, was the blacksmith's shop, with its small house just back of it, and a tiny garden in the rear.

The smith's wife was dead, but his bonnie, blue-eyed little daughter kept his house. When lonely, she pushed aside a small panel in the end of the shop and crept in and stayed with him, unless the sound of voices or hoof-beats on the road drove her away, for she was a shy child.

One day when she had stolen in, her father was standing behind the door.

He had a sliver in his big hand, with which he touched the side of the great black beam in the corner. Suddenly a block of wood fell forward, disclosing a small opening. Into this he thrust a dark, leather-bound book, and quickly, but carefully, fitted the chip into the place, so that no sign of the hidden space remained.

Seeing his daughter, he started and said sternly: "Ailsie, child! how dare you spy upon your father?"

"O, father! I am not spying!" and the blue eyes filled with tears.

"Of course, you were not. I was wrong to say so, child!" said the smith, remorsefully; "but you saw what I did."

"You put the Holy Book into the beam, father. It is a fine hiding-place, too, for neither priest nor soldier can find it there."

"I would you knew not its place of concealment, for the knowledge may bring you into danger, lass. You must never betray it. When Parson Stow went away to foreign lands he gave me the sacred Word, and told me to keep it as my life. For, by the queen's orders, all the Bibles have been gathered up and burned, and we are forbidden to read from its holy pages. This is the only one between here and the sea, and it is more precious than the crown jewels. You are fifteen, Ailsie, and old enough to understand, so I told you all."

"You need not fear, father," said Ailsie, firmly, "I will not tell." But the rosy cheeks grew pale as she remembered all that her promise might mean.

Now, there was a certain priest that came sometimes to Harrant to preach to the villagers. But, being all Protestants, they would neither listen to him nor pay him tithes. He was very angry at their behavior, and spied about until he became sure there was a Bible among them; and he knew that it was in the blacksmith's possession, because he was the only man in the village who could read.

After trying in vain to find the Holy Book, he went to the nearest town and lodged information against the village with the officers there; and one day, when the smith chanced to be away from home, an officer and six men marched into Harrant.

They called upon the cottagers to surrender their Bibles; but one and all declared they had none. Then the soldiers searched every dwelling and threatened to burn every one, unless the Book was found.

But that did not suit the priest at all. He would get fewer tithes than ever if the village was destroyed. So he told the soldiers to let the rest of the villagers alone, for the Bible was in the blacksmith's possession. It was getting late and the soldiers were in a great hurry to be gone. So they resolved to burn the two little buildings, and thus destroy the Book quickly and surely.

At the first sight of the strange men Ailsie had fled through the garden, out upon the moor, and hidden among the furze bushes. She was terrified, for she feared they might find her and demand the hiding-place of the precious Bible.

It was growing dark when she saw a bright light against the sky, and sprang to her feet. Her father's house was on fire! The sight made the shy child a heroine. Forgetting all about her danger, she only remembered that she must save the Bible at all cost.

Swift as an arrow she sped homeward. The soldiers were intent upon piling straw around the burning buildings and did not see the little figure that darted in between the house and the shop, whose thatched roofs were all ablaze. Breathless and determined, she pushed aside the panel and stumbled through the blinding smoke.

The hungry flames scorched her dress and her hair, and burned and blistered her hands and face before she secured what she sought. But at last she reached the Bible and fled out into the open air.

No one had noticed her in the darkness, and she crept safely into the little garden and sank down choked and suffering among the vines.

But she felt that the Bible was in danger even now. She slipped off her woollen petticoat and wrapped it around the volume; then, digging with her little burned hands in the soft soil, she buried it under an immense cabbage. Then she crawled upon her hands and knees to the spring at the foot of the garden, where her father found her, an hour later, half unconscious with pain and fright. He never ceased, while he lived, to praise his little daughter for her brave deed of that day.

The Bible always remained in the family, and years and years afterward Ailsie's great-granddaughter carried it when she followed her Puritan husband across the sea to the lonely coast of New England.—King's Builders.

THOMAS PAINE AFTER A CENTURY.

One of the preachers at Cornell University on a recent Sabbath in outlining the progress of the Kingdom of Christ, spoke to an audience that overflowed by many score Sage Chapel. Contrasting the situation of a century ago, when deistic societies were so numerous in American colleges, he declared that he knew not of the existence of a single Thomas Paine Society, "unless it be in idiosyncratic Boston." Being in the capital of Massachusetts a few weeks ago, the city of a former pastorate, and wishing for the sake of absolute accuracy and to "verify your references," in the original manuscript, or, at least, first edition, I called in upon the authorities of "the Paine Memorial Building," not far from my former pastoral charge. Instead of an assembly hall, propaganda bureau, book store, etc., with which the enterprise was inaugurated, with many a trumpet blast and burden of prophecy a few years ago, I found no book store, no Paine propaganda, no hall for the gathering of the great deist's admirers, while the edifice is now used by various brotherhoods and social organizations and for business purposes. ### A NEW REFORMER.

The secular press announced a few days since in flaming headlines that the Rev. Henry Spencer Booth, of the Methodist Episcopal Church (Northern), had surrendered his pastorate at Morristown, Tenn., and addressed an open letter to Bishop W. F. Anderson in which he lodges grave complaint against his brethren in the ministry and the government of the Methodist denomination. He is reported to have affirmed that there is too much watered stock in Methodism; that the preachers and other officials "pad statistics" as to the number of conversions, etc., to make fine showings in their reports and to maintain prestige; that the Church has "gone daffy" on organization and machinery; and thus largely crushed and ground the very life out of what real religion existed.

A pretty severe indictment is this. But we should remember that anybody can make accusations, and that they are generally most vigorously and sweepingly made when they have the smallest amount of truth to sustain them. So far from believing that the statistics of Methodism are anywhere padded, we do not believe that there is a Conference within its bounds that has upon its church registers all of the names that properly belong upon them. In spite of all we can do to reduce their number, the "trunk-letter" Methodists are a considerable host. And our observation is that there is rather too much disposition on the part of Methodist preachers to revise their membership rolls and drop names which in many instances ought to be retained. We have known several who made a hobby of doing this, but we have never known one who "padded statistics" to make a fine showing at Conference. And if the Rev. Henry Spencer Booth knows any such, we respectfully suggest that it would be more creditable for him to call their names in his accusation instead of assailing the Methodist ministry as a whole. It requires no bravery, no manliness, no extraordinary degree of virtue of any kind for one to make a charge in sweeping generalities, which he knows is too indefinite to cause him to be held specifically responsible. And pray tell us if things are in such a bad way in the Methodist Episcopal Church, where has the Rev. Henry Spencer Booth been that he has allowed the characters of these ministers who "pad statistics" to pass year after year and has lodged against them no complaint? When in open Conference their names were called one by one, and the Bishop asked, "Is there anything against him?" why did this apostle of purity and reform sit silent and say not a word? Where then was the courage and hero spirit of which he now boasts and makes such a parade?

Nor is it true that the Methodist Church more than other denominations has "gone daffy" on organization and machinery. For nearly every gathering or society the Methodists have, the other Churches have one to correspond. We have the Church Conference, so do they; we have the Quarterly Conference, they have the Official Meeting and the Session; we have the District Conference; they have the Association and Presbytery; we have the Annual Conference, they have the State Convention and the Synod; we have the General Conference, they have the Southern Convention and General Assembly. Their young people, their women, and practically every phase of their work, are organized in much the same manner as ours. We have sometimes felt that all of the Churches have too much machinery to carry on the work for the Master with the highest degree of efficiency, but that is a matter of opinion. Certainly there is little, if anything, in our ecclesiastical organizations which warrants the charge of corruption, or that is calculated to stifle and destroy the spiritual life of the people.

We do not know the Rev. Henry Spencer Booth. Indeed, until the present occurrence we had never heard of the gentleman. But we have a distinct suspicion as to what ails him. As a friend of ours is given to saying in language more expressive than elegant, "He acts very much like a man who is hurtling at one place and grunting at another." "Toils of an ecclesiastical machine," "abuse," "espionage," "puppets," "oligarchy!" Are not these words rather suggestive? Is there not about them the odor of disappointed ambition? Do they not rather indicate that what has sent our brother out on the warpath is that he has not had what he thinks he deserves? Possibly in this we are mistaken; but we have known men to be instantaneously transformed from cringing sycophants into noisy reformers by the failure of those in authority to recognize their commanding abilities. A descent from a leading station to one not quite so good sometimes works a mighty change in a brother, especially if he has more vanity than piety.

But he tells us that he is going to straighten things out and that he will carry his campaign into every State in the Union. We have no objection. It is well enough to let real life outstrip fiction. The famous knight of the imagination will pale into insignificance in the light of the exploits of this sure-enough Don Quixote. But the Rev. Henry Spencer says, "I am after the system." We are neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but we venture the modest prediction that the system will be after him—that when he has gone to his "long home" and the flowers are blooming and the birds are singing above the place where he sleeps, Episcopal Methodism will still exist, working, growing, achieving every hour—her heroic followers bearing aloft the banner of the Cross and singing their songs of triumph and praise all the world around.

THE VIEWS OF A SCHOLAR.

There is apparently existing to-day a widely prevalent notion that one in order to be a scholar must be a "Modernist" in his theological views; that he is not abreast of expanding truth unless he has a new way of looking at and stating the old teachings of the gospel. Dr. A. T. Pierson suggested some weeks ago in an interesting communication in The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, that not a few young ministers have been influenced to advocate the conclusions of "higher criticism" from a desire to be considered men of learning and vigorous thought. But scarcely any notion could be more erroneous than the imagination that the advocacy of modern fads is necessary to take rank as a thinker. The scholarship of the world is by no means on the side of heterodoxy. Many men of vast erudition yet hold to the simple faith of the fathers. They do not perhaps make as much noise as some others, but they are not one whit behind them in intellectual stature or in the reach of their attainments. A distinguished representative of this class is Dr. James Orr, of Glasgow University, who is one of the foremost scholars of Great Britain. Writing for the London Sunday School Chronicle a short time since, he expressed himself concerning several of the cardinal doctrines of Christianity, with which it is now very common to find fault, in the following forceful language:

"The 'Fall' is put in question by evolution; but unless sin is made a necessity, and deprived of its heinousness before God, which made redemption needful, its origin must ever be sought in the voluntary departure from rectitude of a creature who had the power to live obediently. The Trinity is called 'metaphysical,' but we cannot be faithful to the revelation in the gospel if we fail to recognize in it a God subsisting and revealed, in the words of the baptismal confession, as Father, Son and Holy Spirit. The trend of the 'New Theology' is to humanitarianism in Christology, but the Church, so long as she adheres to the faith of the apostles, will never, we may be sure, depart from her testimony to her Lord as perfect God and perfect man—the Word made flesh. There are all sorts of speculations on the Atonement, but any 'moral' theory which denies the true vicarious death, and atoning, cleansing power of the blood of Christ, will never satisfy the conscience, or faith of the general Christian community or furnish an evangel to preach to the masses. 'Justification' is thought to be a forensic term, but it can never be twisted to mean anything but what it signifies in Paul—a setting right with God through his own free act of pardon and acceptance for Christ's sake. There are eschatologies innumerable; but while the mysteries of the future are acknowledged, we have no expectation of seeing the Church commit herself to either universalism or annihilation, or even make a dogma of second probation. Let veils lie where Scripture leaves them."

DR. CARROLL'S STATISTICS.

Dr. H. K. Carroll, one of the most experienced and competent statisticians in the United States, submits in the New York Christian Advocate, of January 26, his annual report on the growth of the Churches. His figures show that there are now within the limits of the nation (not including its foreign territory) in all the denominations (Roman Catholics included) 170,153 ministers, 218,147 churches and 35,392,776 communicants. The aggregate gain of them all during 1910 was 2,309 ministers, 2,431 churches, and 623,955 members—somewhat less than the total increase for the year 1909. The gains of the leading religious bodies taken singly are as follows: Roman Catholics, 110,000; Methodists, 108,776; Disciples of Christ, 89,759; Baptists, 85,828; Presbyterians, 72,659 (this includes 40,000 gained by the Cummerlands as a result of a readjustment); Lutherans, 70,439; Protestant Episcopalians, 16,777. The strength of the seven largest denominational families is also given: Roman Catholic, 12,321,746; Methodist, 6,596,168; Baptist, 5,774,066; Lutheran, 2,243,486; Presbyterian, 1,920,765; Disciples of Christ, 1,519,774; Episcopal, 938,390.

It is quite interesting to note that, according to Dr. Carroll's summary, the membership of the churches is increasing at a ratio considerably larger than the population of the United States. He says: "In 1890, 1 in every 3 inhabitants, of all ages, was a member of some religious body; in 1900 the ratio was 1 in every 2.8; in 1910 it was 1 in every 2.6."

But perhaps no part of Dr. Carroll's report will be read with more careful attention than his comparison of the relative strength of the Methodists and Roman Catholics in the United States. He notes the fact that the figures given for the Romish Church represent a constituency rather than actual communicants; that the numbers which they give out are based on population, their method being to take a census of their adherents, and then deduct 15 per cent for children, not old enough to be eligible to communion. Having explained their method of enumeration, Dr. Carroll continues:

"The question is frequently asked whether the Methodist population for all branches in the United States is not actually larger than that of the Roman Catholic Church. If we accept as approximately correct the ratio of 2 1-2 adherents to each Methodist member, including probationers, we have for adherents 2 1-2 times 6,596,000, or 16,490,000, and the total of communicants and adherents would, therefore, be 23,086,000 Methodist population, or 8,738,973 in excess of the Roman Catholic population. By the same rule the population of the Methodist Episcopal Church would be 11,154,000; and that of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South (which have together 5,018,808 communicants) 17,565,828, or three millions greater than that of the Roman Catholic Church." From Dr. Carroll's estimate it would seem that the Methodist denomination is by long odds the strongest religious body in the United States.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Bishop Murrah will dedicate the First Methodist Church at Greenville, Miss., on Sunday, March 5.

Rev. Joe Ramsey, the well known evangelist of Viola, Tenn., will begin a series of revival services at Winfield Memorial Church, of Little Rock, on February 26.

Rev. Eugene Johnson, of Ripley, Miss., in a personal note to the editor, says: "The paper gets better, I think." We sincerely thank him for his commendation. Such words bring cheer to the heart of the editor.

The date for the formal opening of Parker Memorial Church of this city has been fixed for Easter Sunday, and Bishop W. B. Murrah, of Jackson, Miss., will preach the sermon. The occasion promises to be one of much interest.

We note the recent marriage of Miss Ethel Maude Ellis to Mr. S. C. Milton. Mrs. Milton is the daughter of Rev. C. H. Ellis, and the third vice-president of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League. We pray heaven's richest blessings upon this young couple.

Among the recent appreciated callers at the Advocate office were Rev. C. C. Weir, of Franklin, La., and Mr. J. T. Means, an esteemed and useful layman, of Ida, La. These brethren were in the city attending the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Masons, which convened in New Orleans this week.

Rev. R. O. Wier speaks encouragingly of his work at Donaldsonville, La. His first Quarterly Conference has been held, and as was to be expected, the presiding elder, Dr. J. M. Henry, gave great satisfaction. We thank Brother Wier for an invitation to preach for him sometime during the year.

In a telegram to Professor E. L. Bailey, superintendent of the Public Schools of Jackson, Miss., Mr. Carnegie has declared that he will give $25,000 to erect a public school library building in that city. The people generally, as well as those connected with the school work, are much pleased to know that they are to have such an institution among them.

A Preachers' and Laymen's meeting will be held at Central Church of Fort Smith, Ark., on March 1 and 2. Among the distinguished speakers who have places on the program we note the names of Bishop McCoy and Dr. John M. Moore. One of the Bishop's themes will be, "The Preacher Approaching the Dead Line."

After a two weeks' trip to Cuba in company with Bishop Candler and others, Dr. I. W. Cooper has returned to his home at Brookhaven, Miss. He was greatly delighted with his visit to the Pearl of the Antilles, and we are pleased to state that in our next issue he will tell our readers something of what he saw in that land of fruits and flowers.

Rev. W. M. Commander, of Chester, Miss., has shown his interest in the Conference organ by sending a list of new subscribers. We feel also that he is forwarding the interests of the Church by so doing. He has our thanks.

Rev. C. M. Crossley, of Utica, Miss., has brought us under renewed obligations by a list of subscribers. He hopes soon to have his charge on the "Honor Roll," and we have no doubt he will succeed in his efforts. Brother Crossley is one of those who have dropped the word "failure" from their vocabularies.

Rev. D. R. McDougal, of Dorsey, Miss., reports a very encouraging outlook on the Fulton Circuit. There is an advance along all lines of church work. The pastor's salary has been increased over last year, and his first Quarterly Conference was a great occasion. We thank him for a splendid list of subscribers to the Advocate.

We were honored to have Dr. J. M. Moore, General Missionary Secretary for the Home Field, call at our office Tuesday of this week. He was en route to the Mid-Year Meeting of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions at Alexandria. Dr. Moore is in fine health and spirits, and wide awake to the interests of the great cause committed to his hands.

Rev. H. W. May, of Columbia, La., is happy in his work in that developing charge. He reports the new church there to be a thing of beauty, and praised Brothers White and Reams, his predecessors, for their efficient service in making it possible. We will let him tell of his people and the promising outlook in this field in his own interesting way in our next issue.

Writing from Boonville, Miss., on February 1, Rev. S. A. Brown, our pastor there, says: "Rev. B. P. Fullilove preached for us last Sunday at 11 o'clock, and Rev. H. M. Young preached at the evening hour. Both sermons were excellent and greatly enjoyed by large congregations. Bishop McCoy will preach for us next Sunday. Signs are encouraging in and around Boonville."

We were delighted a few days since to receive a cheering letter from Rev. H. P. Crowe, formerly of the North Mississippi, but now of the St. Louis Conference, in which he is an esteemed presiding elder, having charge of the Farmington District. Brother Crowe says: "I am well provided for, and have the best of health. The Lord is blessing my labors and prospering my administration." We can readily believe this, knowing the superior service which this faithful itinerant rendered for years in the State of his nativity.

From the "Church News" column of the Times-Democrat of the 6th inst., we take the following: "The annex to the Epworth Methodist Church, of this city was opened formally yesterday morning with the Sunday school services at 9:45. Mr. T. O. Adams was in charge of the music; Miss Davis sang a beautiful sacred song. Dr. Henry, the new presiding elder, Prof. Walter Miller, of Tulane University, and the Rev. L. A. Sims, the pastor, were the principal speakers."

The pastors in New Orleans are preaching on live issues nowadays. At First Church last Sunday morning Dr. Werlein delivered the third of a series of sermons on the Lord's prayer, using as a text, "Thy Kingdom Come," and at the evening hour he chose as his theme, "Christian Science Unscriptural and Unchristian," and struck some telling blows against this modern heresy. At the Louisiana Avenue Church Rev. H. T. Carley preached at night on "Something Better than the Exposition."

On a recent Sunday morning, Rev. Wm. H. Coleman, pastor of our Church at Ruston, La., preached to the children. Two infants were baptized, and fourteen children made application for church membership. Brother Coleman looks well after all the interests committed to his care, and wins his way into the hearts of his people. On his leaving Homer, the members of the church there presented him with a handsome gold handled umbrella, and the Junior League gave him a beautiful pair of gold cuff buttons, as a mark of their love and esteem.

Rev. N. B. Harmon and family received a most cordial welcome to their new work at Hazlehurst, Miss. A union service of welcome was held shortly after their arrival, participated in by the Baptist and Presbyterian Churches, and later a reception was given in their honor at the residence of Mr. J. S. Allred. At the first Quarterly Conference an increase was made in the pastor's salary, and both preacher and people start out with courage in the work of the new year. That is a most delightful condition of affairs. We have no doubt great success awaits this energetic pastor and his enthusiastic people.

Rev. W. Fred Long, the energetic field secretary of the Mississippi Sunday School Association, has given to the press the following list of County Conventions to be held in that State during the month of February: "Montgomery County, at Winona, Thursday, Feb. 9; Holmes County, Durant, Friday, Feb. 10; Pontotoc County, Pontotoc, Tuesday, Feb. 14; Calhoun County, Calhoun City, Tuesday, Feb. 21; Washington County, Leland, Tuesday, Feb. 21; Sunflower County, Drew, Thursday, Feb. 23; Warren County, Vicksburg, Feb. 23-24; Jackson County, Moss Point, Friday, Feb. 24; Pike County, Magnolia, Tuesday, Feb. 28.

In sending in his appointments for his second round on January 30, Rev. B. P. Jacob, presiding elder of the Corinth District, writes: "I got home last night. I usually make a round by traveling from 900 to 1,200 miles by rail, buggy, horseback, and afoot. I have preached or spoken over forty times. I think at least one-fourth of the charges have increased the pastors' salaries. The year begins with much promise, and we are aiming to secure yet greater victories in this part of the Conference." We thank Brother Jacob for an invitation to attend his District Conference at Myrtle, which we hope a favoring Providence will permit us to accept.

The Mississippi Conference Minutes are out in their usual admirable form. Dr. Watkins as secretary of a religious gathering has few equals and no superior. This year he had as an assistant in issuing the Journal of his Conference Mr. H. B. Watkins, who also has special aptitude for such tasks. The pamphlet contains 132 pages, and the mechanical work is of a high order, having been done by The Tucker Printing House, of Jackson, Miss. The Mississippi Conference has had a great history, but is not reposing upon the memories of the past. It is virile, aggressive, and moving forward to larger things, as its Year Book abundantly proves.

Mayor Crowder of Jackson, Miss., has appointed the following committee to arrange for the reception and entertainment of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, who is to visit that city on March 11: Governor E. F. Noel, Chairman, Major R. W. Millsaps, Mr. L. B. Mosley, Hon. S. S. Hudson, Hon. J. B. Stirling, Mr. A. C. Crowder, Mr. E. S. Wilson, Mr. R. H. Henry, Mr. Fred Sullens, Mr. Oscar Newton, Jr., Mr. I. C. Enochs, Mr. W. M. Anderson, Mr. R. L. Saunders, and ex-Governor A. H. Longino. It is safe to predict that the visit of the distinguished ex-President to the Mississippi capital will be a great occasion, and that he will be accorded a sincere and enthusiastic welcome.

Through the courtesy of the editor and publisher, Rev. R. W. Vaughan, we have received a copy of the Louisiana Conference Annual for 1910. It contains a striking likeness of Bishop Murrah, is well arranged throughout, and is a creditable piece of work in every respect. It shows that the present membership of the Louisiana Conference is 32,620; that there were last year 1,712 additions on profession of faith; and that there are in the Conference 340 houses of worship, valued approximately at a million dollars. The laity throughout the State would no doubt be profited if they would procure and carefully examine this interesting and suggestive pamphlet.

The editor was favored last Friday by a visit to his sanctum of two of his appreciated college mates, the Hon. C. F. Smith, of Nashville, Tenn., and the Hon. Dunbar Rowland, of Jackson, Miss., Superintendent of the Department of Archives and History in the Bayou State. We had luncheon at a quiet place with these long-time friends, and revived memories of the happy days spent together at the historic University of Mississippi. Mr. Smith, accompanied by his sister, Miss Kate Smith, was en route to Mexico to look after important mining interests for a company in the States with which he is connected. Dr. Rowland has been spending some time in New Orleans gathering historical data for some literary work that he has on hand.

The work of the year has opened with bright prospects at the Main Street Church of Hattiesburg, of which Dr. A. F. Watkins is the capable and beloved pastor. Since the session of the Mississippi Conference the congregation has reduced the debt on their beautiful new house of worship by the amount of $10,500, and arrangements have been made with Bishop Mouzon to conduct a ten days' revival some time in the spring. Another encouraging feature is that the women of the church have been meeting every Monday afternoon since last October to pray for a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the people, twenty-five of them having entered into a covenant to do this every week. We shall be surprised if we do not hear in the near future that the spiritual life of this growing flock has been greatly quickened.

By request of Dr. Bass, we publish the following statement concerning a European tour which he has in prospect, feeling that possibly it may interest some of our readers: "Rev. Dr. and Mrs. L. D. Bass, of Mexia, Texas, with Rev. Dr. Temple and wife, all Baptists, are to take a party to Europe, June 24th, after the meeting of the World's Baptist Convention in Philadelphia. Dr. and Mrs. Temple took 556 persons to Europe last summer. Trip to cost, all expenses, $285. This is a revolution in costs and methods, the result of ten years' experience and study of the situation. The party will travel in Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Holland, Belgium, France, England and Scotland. Special arrangement for any of the party to remain one or two months longer if desired. Dr. Bass has arranged with The Baptist Young People's Touring Club of England for his American party to join them from London to Switzerland, thus securing their special rates which are many pounds less. This party is not out to make money, and any one wishing to join them should write at once."

ANENT THE ADVOCATE.

There seems to have been somewhat of a cessation of activity in behalf of the Conference organ within the past week or ten days. We regret this, since the early months of the year are our best months. The "lean" days are not far ahead, and we urge our friends not to grow "weary in well-doing."

The Southern Christian Advocate states that it is reaching one out of every three Methodist families in South Carolina. Think of it—two-thirds of the Methodist homes of a great State without a church paper! Is it not deplorable? Most assuredly; yet this is a better showing than we are making in our territory. It is not probable that our paper reaches more than one Methodist family out of every four or five. Is it any wonder that we have so many members who are indifferent to the work of the Church?

There are people in many congregations who are too poor to take a religious paper, but who yearn to know what is being done to extend the Master's kingdom. Our publisher cannot afford to give the Advocate to all of these. Would it not be a gracious act for the pastor to call the attention of his flock to this situation at some public service, and ask them to contribute to place the paper in such homes in their community. If we mistake not, that model pastor now at First Church, Memphis, Rev. T. W. Lewis, was accustomed to do this. We commend his thoughtfulness in this particular to the brethren. The destitute are not mere animals whose bodies alone need to be fed.

John Wesley said: "It cannot be that the people should grow in grace, unless they give themselves to reading. A reading people will always be a knowing people. A people who talk much will know little. Press this upon them with your might; and you will see the fruit of your labors."—Wesleyan Advocate.

Our "Honor Roll," made up of the charges in which every official member takes his Conference organ remains as follows: Mansfield, La., Rev. A. W. Turner, pastor; Bogalusa, La., Rev. J. M. Alford, pastor; Tunica, Miss., Rev. J. W. Honnoll, pastor; Lumberton, Miss., Rev. T. W. Adams, pastor; Ruleville, Miss., Rev. O. L. Savage, pastor; Homewood, Miss., Rev. W. W. Graves, pastor; Houston, Miss., Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor; Seventh Avenue, Meridian, Miss., Rev. J. A. Wells, pastor.

Murrah will dedicate the church at Greenville on Sunday, the 5th day of March, at 11 a.m. A cordial invitation is extended to all the preachers and presiding elders who have served the church to be present and take part in the service.

Born in the State of Vermont, Sister LUCY STONE came to Mississippi about thirty-five years ago, making her home with her daughter, Mrs. J. T. Davidson. Early in her life she gave her heart to the Master and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, but when she came South she transferred her membership to the M. E. Church, South, and for these thirty-five years had been a devoted member of that Church. During the severe winter weather she contracted pneumonia, and after two weeks of suffering, her spirit ascended on high, Jan. 6, 1911. After a long, useful life of eighty-one years, triumphantly she passed through "the valley of the shadow" and rests beneath the shade of the Tree of Life. May the blessings of God, the Father, abide upon those left to mourn, until they too, shall be gathered home.

J. W. WARD, P. C.

The subject of this sketch, Brother J. G. Thornton, was born 1849, and died Sept. 21, 1911. He was twice married; first to Miss Martha Rodgers. Ten children were born to them, eight of whom still live. His second marriage was to Mrs. Isabella Gray. Seven children were given them, all still living. Near the age of thirty he professed faith in God, and soon after joined the M. E. Church, South. It had been my privilege to know Brother Thornton only a few months, but I found him true to his profession of faith. During his last several months illness I visited him often, and found him ready and anxious to talk of his soul's salvation. While talking of his home, the expression of happiness in his eyes was almost sublime. More beautiful, childlike faith I have never known. Two days before his death, wife said to him, "Is there still reality in religion for you, and is Jesus near you?" His answer was clear and distinct: "There is more reality in religion for me now than ever, and Jesus is more precious every moment. I long to be with him, and if I slip away before you return, look for me in heaven, for there's where I'm going." We miss him sadly, but weep not as those who have no hope. Blessed be the name of the Lord.

His pastor, W. G. ROBERTS.

Mrs. SADIE ELIZABETH JORDAN, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Fife, was born at Hermanville, Claiborne County, Miss., Aug. 12, 1872, and died at the Touro Infirmary, in New Orleans, Jan. 4, 1911, being in the thirty-ninth year of her age. Her childhood and young womanhood were spent in the pleasant little town of her birthplace, she being one of a family of fourteen brothers and sisters, most of whom have crossed to the other shore. After attending the public school in her home community, she spent two or three years in college at Lexington, Miss. On Oct. 24, 1894, she was united in marriage to Mr. E. C. Jordan, a substantial young business man of Port Gibson, Miss., where the happy years of her married life were spent. One child was born to them, a bright and beautiful little girl, now about five years of age. Sister Jordan was converted and joined the Methodist Church during her girlhood, and her life was marked by unwavering fidelity to her Lord and to the Church. Of a sunny disposition, gentle, refined, and thoroughly unselfish, she endeared herself to all who knew her. She was a zealous worker for the Church and for every good cause, and will be sadly missed in the Church and community where she lived. A devoted wife and mother, a kind neighbor, and a useful and lovable Christian has been taken from us. For some time preceding her death she was treasurer of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Port Gibson Methodist Church, and a teacher in the Sunday school. During the last year of her life she suffered much, being an invalid most of the time; but she bore her ills patiently, and when the end came she faced death calmly and fearlessly, saying she was ready to meet her Lord. Her noble spirit is done with the toils and cares and sufferings of this earthly life, and in the heavenly home she wears a crown of righteousness. She was buried at Hermanville, her old home, Jan. 6, 1911, Rev. W. L. Blackwell, the pastor, officiating, and there her body sleeps till the resurrection morn. The grief of her bereaved husband and little daughter, is shared by her aged mother, three grown brothers and one sister, namely: W. A. Fife, Pressley and Magruder Fife, and Miss Cora Fife, and by a large circle of relatives and friends. May the bereaved ones realize in this dark hour that God is their refuge and strength, and may the hope of meeting this now sainted loved one in the home above cause them ever to keep close to the Master's side.

Her former pastor,
M. M. BLACK.

Mrs. PENELOPE HARRIS died Jan. 10, 1911, aged seventy-four years. She was born and reared near Harrisville, Miss. She joined the Methodist Church in early life. She leaves four daughters, seven sons, and many friends to mourn their loss. I was her pastor the past two years, and found her to be a good woman, true to God and loyal to the church. I performed the funeral service in the presence of a large congregation. We laid her remains to rest in the Harrisville cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

R. T. NOLEN, Pastor.

BRUCE G. DUBARD passed to his great reward from his home at Bew Springs, Miss., Jan. 19, 1911. No better young man I think has ever lived in Grenada County. He was buried at the Spring Hill cemetery, Rev. W. W. Mitchell, of Grenada, and the young pastor, Rev. O. C. Ray, conducting the funeral services. Bruce Dubard honored his country and his church, and was the embodiment of truthfulness to his little family and to the household of his father. He went early but wrought well, and has bequeathed to those he loved and to his friends a most worthy record. Those who wish to see him again will know where to find him.

A. H. WILLIAMS.
Shuqualak, Miss., Jan. 24, 1911.

On Sunday, Dec. 19, 1910, the spirit of Sister BETTIE MARTIN ascended to the Father of all spirits. Sister Martin was in her seventy-ninth year, and from early life she had been a loyal Methodist and a consistent Christian. Last Summer she suffered from a second stroke of paralysis from which she never recovered. From that time she was confined to the bed. She suffered patiently and without a complaint until released by death. She was laid away on Monday, Dec. 19, 1910. She leaves an aged sister, two brothers, and numerous relatives and friends to mourn her going way. But with bright anticipations of a glad reunion at the Father's right hand we abide his will.

PORT GIBSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Port Gibson District Conference will be held at South Washington Street, Vicksburg, March 13, at 7:30 p. m., and will close on March 16, in time to take the evening trains both north and south.

Opening sermon by Rev. E. W. Barrington, followed by the Lord's Supper, Monday, 13th, 7:30 p. m.

Delegates, under the new law, are to be elected by the Church Conferences, one delegate for each church; but if the church has more than one hundred members, one delegate for each one hundred members and two-thirds of a hundred. All preachers are members.

Let the preachers in charge report just as soon as possible names of delegates to Rev. W. H. Saunders, Vicksburg. Dr. McMurry promises to be with us. Matters of much importance require the presence of every delegate and preacher.

H. W. FEATHERSTUN, P. E.

REVIVAL AT SUMNER, MISS.

We have just closed a splendid meeting at Sumner, Miss. There were not a great many additions to the Church, but the meeting resulted in bringing together the scattered forces of Methodism. The revival was held in the Baptist Church—we have no church building there. Bro. J. W. Robertson gave us one of the prettiest lots in the town for a new church, and Brother Lester, the pastor, will begin to put up a brick church at once. About all the money has been subscribed that will be needed.

Brother Lester is doing a fine work on this charge. He is not as fast as some I have seen, but he is always there when the fox is caught. He is one faithful and true man and it was a great blessing to be associated with him during the two weeks' meeting.

Yours fraternally,

W. M. MCINTOSH.

January 28, 1911.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Because of the loss which has been ours by the death of our beloved sister and faithful co-worker, we thus wish to show our deep appreciation of her faithful and unselfish services by the adoption of the following resolutions: Resolved.

First—That in the death of Mrs. E. C. JORDON, the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Methodist Church has lost one of the most faithful, untiring and unselfish workers.

Second—That we extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved husband and little daughter, and pray that God will bless and comfort them, and so lead them that they shall meet her in the heavenly home.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, a copy sent to the sorrowing family, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and Port Gibson Reveille for publication.

Signed: Mrs. E. E. Drake, Mrs. D. L. Turner, Mrs. M. M. Satterfield, Mrs. H. H. Crisler, Committee.

"AS OTHERS SEE IT."

Rev. George S. Sexton, D. D.

In a recent issue we gave reasons why all Southern Methodists should respond heartily to the appeal being made for our National Enterprise. or the consideration of loyal Methodists we offer additional reasons from some of our wisest and most trusted leaders:

Bishop J. S. Key, D. D.: It is representative, and we need to be represented at the National Capital in a shape worthy of us. Southern Methodists visiting or removing to Washington should find satisfactory church accommodations awaiting them.

Rev. F. J. Prettyman, D. D.: Our Church has a right in Washington City; we have been there through all our history. Our Church ought to be in Washington City; here is the center of government, and we must help shape public opinion, and meet our obligation to our national life. Roman Catholicism is established on every hill-top. Her mark is everywhere. We must share the battle with all other branches of the Protestant Church at the seat of our government.

Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D.: With such an organization and such an equipment as are proposed, we might hope that a gracious influence would go forth from it that would be felt all over our beloved land. From Washington City, as from the nation's heart, would issue an influence that would be felt in its farthest extremities, more or less. That such a church as we propose to build, conducted as it ought to be conducted, would please God and be a blessing to all concerned, is a gracious certainty. Then my exhortation is: Build, and be glad; build, and be blessed.

Bishop W. A. Candler, D. D.: We should build a Representative Church in Washington City: Because, as one of the largest Churches in the United States we owe this to the religious welfare of the Capital of the Republic. Because, without such a church we are put in an unfavorable light when compared with other Churches which have recognized and fulfilled their duty in this particular. Because, for lack of such a church at the Capital, our cause suffers throughout the nation in public appreciation. Because, foreigners—Ambassadors and other representatives of foreign nations—seeing the buildings of other denominations, and no great church of ours, hold us as a cheap and weak body.

Rev. T. E. Sharpe, D. D.: The connection should build in Washington, because it is the Capital City; to it visitors and officials from all parts of our own and all other nations come. They will get an impression of the denomination from the building, preacher and congregation that represent us. It is, therefore, very important that we be adequately represented. The local church, while not a mission, is peculiarly a connectional church, doing a work for the entire Church, rather than for a purely local interest; just as Vanderbilt University is our connectional educational institution, so the Washington Church is our connectional church. We should no more expect the Methodists of Washington to provide the connectional church, because it is located there, than we should expect the Methodists of Nashville to provide for Vanderbilt, because it is located in Nashville.

BREWERS AND THEIR BUSINESS.

Brewer Pabst lives in Milwaukee and has a fine residence built at the expense of the drinkers in that city. He wishes to live as decently as he can and follow his business. Accordingly he has headed a petition to the Legislature of Wisconsin asking them to make a boulevard out of the street on which he lives that saloons may be forever prohibited therefrom. The brewers do not wish to be too closely connected with their own business. Let common people be cursed with the presence of the saloon.—Nebraska Issue.

Epworth League

NEWS AND NOTES.

Emerson spoke volumes when he said in an essay on "Greatness," that a certain man had a heart as great as the world, but there was no room in it to hold the memory of a wrong.

For 'tis sweet to stammer one letter of the Eternal's language; on earth it is called "Forgiveness!"—Henry W. Longfellow.

Topic for February 12: The Place of Prayer (Acts xvi, 13; Matthew xxi, 13)—Hymns 2, 208, 217.

The Epworth League states that California is soon to have a summer Epworth League Assembly. This will be the sixth institution of the kind in the connection.

On the occasion of a recent visit to the Southern College of Florida, Bishop Morrison gave the Leaguers a talk, telling of his experience in throwing off the tobacco habit. The better thing to do is never to form such a habit, but if one has been so unfortunate as to do so, he should break loose from it at the earliest day possible. The use of this poisonous weed has never helped any one in any way.

The League Union of New Orleans will have a grand "Jubilee" at Epworth Church on Tuesday night, Feb. 14, to celebrate the completion of the new house of worship of this congregation. They were instrumental in starting this organization in the city, and have just cause to feel gratified at the progress which it has made.

The Leaguers of Columbus, Mississippi, are active. They recently issued a neat folder announcing the topics and leaders for several weeks in advance. This is well—nothing does more to insure success than wise planning for work and giving ample time to get ready.

Every Leaguer should have a substantial copy of the Bible, and earnestly study it. It is both the guide and armor of defense of the young Christian. It enriches every heart and mind with which it comes in contact, and tends to keep the soul pure and the feet in the upward way.

Some one has said that "prayer is the wish of the heart." So it is; and to be effective it must be in harmony with one's aim in life. Live for God, and he will answer when you call upon him.

From the Okolona Methodist (Mississippi) we take the following account of a League social recently given in that goodly town: "One of the most delightful occasions of the season was a League social given by Mrs. Cavin. It was the 'old Time School' where we studied 'Readin, Ritin and Rithmatic.' We also stood up on the floor and spelled 'Baker and Shady an' them sort o' things.' Well, we laughed 'til we had about exhausted our laughing resources. The recess lunch and the dinner baskets were the best of all. It reminded us of how we long ago would sit out in front of the school house on a big log and eat 'pies an' things' which we thought couldn't be beat. We could not but be serious a little as we thought how fast time goes by. What a change in the few years. You Leaguers will soon be old folks, with the best of life's opportunities past, standing on the threshold of eternity, awaiting the Master's call."

The Louisiana Conference Epworth League will meet in annual session June 21-23. The place of meeting will be announced later. The outlook now is for a very successful meeting.

The officers of the Louisiana Conference Epworth League are as follows: Rev. H. W. Jamieson, president, Shreveport; Mrs. Sudie J. Lingle, secretary, Shreveport; Miss Evelyn R. Price, treasurer, Lake Charles.

Quick Relief From Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it
Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the disordered mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

Tidings from the Field

Columbus, Second Church:

We had a good day at Second Church yesterday. A fine congregation at both services. Ten joined our Church—twenty-four since Conference. All of the organizations of the Church doing good work. Prospects for a good year grow brighter each week. My people are working and praying and God is blessing them. We will soon be on the "Honor Roll." Look for us; we are coming. "Praise the Lord for his goodness." Success to you and our paper.—W. C. Carlisle.
January 30.

Verona, Miss.:

We are now well settled in the historic town of Verona, a community long and widely known for its refinement, hospitality and interest in the spread of the kingdom of our Lord. Soon after we arrived at the parsonage a number of the good ladies came to give us a cordial welcome, and supplied our larder with good things sufficient for many days. Though our first Quarterly Conference was quite early, our people were delighted to see and hear Brother Felts again. The stewards made a fine report and provided for the support of the ministry like men of affairs. With some needed repairs on the parsonage, which will be done soon, this will be a delightful charge.—A. W. Langley.

Denham Springs, La.:

We arrived here by the second Sunday in January and were very cordially received. Our Ladies' Aid Society had the parsonage in readiness for our reception. The District Stewards' meeting was held here, and also our first Quarterly Conference on January 20, which was well attended. Rev. C. C. Miller, our presiding elder, was with us, but not being real well; Brother T. J. Warlick, of Baton Rouge, preached in his stead, a sermon that was a delight to the audience, as well as deep, powerful and edifying. I have made my first round of appointments and have had good congregations at each church. I have made about sixty pastoral calls and am much encouraged. We have a bright prospect for a good year and feel a great desire to be a blessing here. Truly, "the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places."—Raleigh V. Fulton.

Mar's Hill Circuit:

I will give you a short report of my work since Conference. I was "read out" to Mar's Hill Circuit, and when I arrived here I found a good, kind-hearted people. They know how to treat their pastor and his family to make them feel good. The good people at one of my churches (Chapel Hill) sent us a wagon load of good things—just such things as are needed at a preacher's home—and, Mr. Editor, the greater portion of it was free. We are well situated here. We have a good six-room parsonage and it is reasonably well furnished, this a result largely due to the efforts of my predecessor, Brother T. J. Half-acre. I have been "around" once and found a good, open-hearted people at all of my churches. Fortunate, indeed, is the man who has a better people to serve than those of the Mar's Hill charge. I doubt whether they can be found. We have made an auspicious beginning; have two good Sunday schools in full blast, and hope to have others soon. Everything is promising for a good year. I have sent in 12 subscriptions to the "Advocate" and have ordered 54 copies of "Revival Praises" for my people. Mr. Editor, I make a specialty of circulating good literature among my people. We all need to know more about the doctrines of our Church. We are hoping and praying for a revival of religion, such as our fathers used to have; I think that is the crying need of the hour. We have had our first Quarterly Conference. Brother Lewis was with us January 21-22, and, as usual, preached two soul-inspiring sermons. The charge paid nearly a fourth of its assessment—one Church paying one-third of its assessment for the pastor and one-half of its Conference assessments, taking it entirely out of the preacher's hands and agreeing to raise all the assessments themselves. For this I feel very grateful. Forgetting the things of the past, I press forward to greater achievements and more glorious victories, ever looking to Jesus for strength. "On with the revival of Scriptural holiness," for the spreading of which the people called Methodists were raised up. God bless all who are laboring for the spread of the gospel.—Thos. L. Porter, P. C.

January 30.

Good Enough for Grandma.

If it's good enough for Grandma, it should be good enough for us, and so it is. Your grandmother used "Gray's Ointment" for cuts, bruises, boils, old sores, carbuncles, poison oak, frost-bites and the like. "Gray's Ointment" is nearly a century old, and has prevented more serious trouble than any other one thing known to medical science. For skin eruptions of any kind it has no equal. Its healing powers are nothing short of marvellous. Get a box from your druggist for 25c, or, if you want to test its merits before you spend your money, send your name and address to Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 804 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., and they will send you, postpaid, a free sample box of this celebrated Ointment.

Stone in Bladder Removed in Remarkable Way.

A year and a half ago I was taken with a severe attack of kidney trouble that pained me to such an extent that morphine had to be given me. Was attended by a doctor who pronounced it as stone in the bladder and prescribed Lithia Water. I took Lithia Water and tablets for some time and received no relief from them. I stopped taking medicines for some time and having some of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root in the house, I decided to try it and felt much relieved; while taking the second bottle commenced to pass gravel in urine until I had passed in all at least a half dozen or more and have not suffered the slightest since and in all have taken one bottle and a half and feel very grateful to Swamp-Root.

Yours very truly,

H. W. SPINKS,
Camp Hill, Ala.

Personally appeared before me this 16th of August, 1909, H. W. Spinks, who subscribed the above statement and made oath that same is true in substance and in fact.

The Quickest, Simplest Cough Cure

Easily and Cheaply Made at Home, Saves You $2.

This recipe makes a pint of cough syrup—enough to last a family a long time. You couldn't buy as much or as good cough syrup for $2.50.

Simple as it is it gives almost instant relief and usually stops the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. This is partly due to the fact that it is slightly laxative, stimulates the appetite and has an excellent tonic effect. It is pleasant to take—children like it. An excellent remedy, too, for whooping cough, sore lungs, asthma, throat troubles, etc.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents' worth) in a pint bottle and add the Sugar Syrup. It keeps perfectly. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

Pine is one of the oldest and best known remedial agents for the throat membranes. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in gaulic acid and all the other natural healing elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this recipe have endeared it to thousands of housewives in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 236 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Obituaries.

Sister CORNELIA BATLEY, of Ridgeland, Miss., departed this life on Nov. 9, 1910, in the fifty-fifth year of her life. For many years she had been an invalid, and for many months before her death was confined to her room. Yet all of her afflictions she bore with Christian grace and fortitude. Though an intense sufferer no murmur ever escaped her lips. Mrs. Dr. Copp, her family physician, said of her: "She was so patient and so lovable that on entering her room I felt like taking her in my arms and caressing her; she was made to love." This spirit of Christian love was manifest to all. She was buried from her old home in the family burial ground on Nov. 10, 1910. After long years of suffering she rests with her Master whom she had loved and served from early childhood, for it was at an early day that she plighted faith in the Divine Son of God, giving her life in service to him through the M. E. Church, South. May the comforting grace of the Father Almighty sustain the bereaved husband and loved ones!

J. W. WARD, P. C.

CHARLES HENRY FANT was born near Huntsville, Ala., June 21, 1837. While yet an infant his parents moved to Mississippi and settled near Holly Springs, where he grew to manhood. He graduated at Lagrange College under the presidency of Dr. Rivers in 1857 and was married October, 1857, to Miss Louise M. Foster, of Florence, Ala. She died in 1876, leaving one daughter and three sons. He was married again in 1878 to Miss Addie Maynard, of Friar's Point, Miss. He was converted when a school boy and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. There is a law of nature that no force is lost; matter is indestructible. Every kind word, every loving deed, every friendly act finds a response somewhere. We may not see the result. The energy may seem to be wasted, but it is God's will that some time, somewhere, the forces set in motion may produce results. And so, although the days of C. H. Fant, who died at Coahoma, Bolivar County, Miss., Dec. 22, 1910, have passed into history, his life is still among us in the noble efforts he gave the Master. His friendly words and brotherly acts still live in somebody's heart. Seventy-three years were given and these were filled with service—service to his home, his State, his county and his God. For his State he served faithfully amid the hardships and dangers of the Civil War; for his home he served through the trying times of reconstruction; for his county he served in the various civil offices given him, and for his God he served in Sunday school and church up to the time of his death. His record throughout is one of faithfulness, honor—"a light set on a hill cannot be hid." The light of his life, shining forth from the hilltop of faithful and consistent living, shall be seen far beyond his vision and long after his dust has been scattered and forgotten. Many are the souls that can look to God and give thanks for the steady beam of divine love that came into their hearts from this, his light-house upon earth. Many are the dark places that have been made bright and pleasant by its searching rays. And now that his life has been ended we feel our great loss and are weighted down with sorrow for ourselves, but peace and joy come into our hearts when we remember that he lives with his Father in heaven and is reaping the reward of the righteous.

J. J. BROOKS.

MARY M. WATTS, wife of J. J. Watts and daughter of Rev. Thomas and Barcena Simmons, was born near Rockport, Copiah County, Miss., September 6, 1846. She was blessed with godly parents and reared in a home that was truly religious. So when she was but a tender girl of eleven years, she gave her life to God and professed faith in Christ as her Savior and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which Church she lived a true and faithful member to the end of her earthly pilgrimage. On September 7, 1867, she was happily married to J. J. Watts. This union was blessed with nine children—five sons and four daughters. All these children survive their mother, except one, her eldest daughter, who preceded her mother to the better world some twenty years. Her devotion to her Church was beautiful, and, while she did not manifest her devotion in loud, noisy demonstrations, her pure religion was seen in her unselfish love to God and his cause. And many a tired and discouraged pastor will remember the happy home and encouraging words of Sister Watts. She was sick eleven days and it seemed from the very first that the fell disease had laid fast his hold upon her mortal frame. Yet, amidst all her sufferings she was patient and uncomplaining, and said to her devoted husband that if it was the Lord's will to take her, it was all right, for she was ready. And on the morning of January 21, 1911, at 7 a. m., surrounded by her husband, eight children, thirteen grandchildren and a host of other relatives and friends, God called her from her sufferings to the home of the pure and the good. May we all live the life of the righteous and meet our loved one in the better world.

NOTE FROM A SUPERANNUATE.

Mr. Editor: It seems "right, meet and proper" that under the circumstances a note from me to my brethren of the Louisiana Conference should be forthcoming.

At the late session of the Conference, after a service of fifty years, unbroken only by service in the Confederate Army, I was placed on what is called "The Honor Roll."

My wife and I returned to our former home, packed up our "stuff" and went to the home of a daughter living at Lafayette, La., "intending there to winter." Before Christmas day dawned we thought we were at rest for at least one year; but providence seemed to order otherwise.

There in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins I met the presiding elder of the Lafayette District, Rev. J. E. Denson, who was in need of a "supply" at one of the towns in his district. The result is, I am here at St. Martinsville as a substitute for a preacher.

At the first service held, fourteen—mostly children—made up the audience. But prospects have somewhat improved. At the fourth service, on January 29, there were perhaps four times as many as at the first service.

I am here, under agreement, to remain as long as my health will permit. We are a feeble folk here, but the few promise $200 for the year's work, and more, if it can be secured. So it happens that I am just where I began fifty years ago—on a mission.

In a population of somewhat more than 2,500 people, we have about thirty members most of whom, as usual, are women and children.

Our Church has good property here, and if the right man could be placed here and kept here, I believe success would crown the effort. We must build up in South Louisiana by natural increase—little can be hoped for from the outside. There is no spot in our broad land, nor in Mexico, more clearly missionary ground than here in St. Martin Parish.

I am here at a sacrifice of a year of rest and pleasure among my children in Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, but if I can be the means of saving a soul, that would give me more pleasure than the companionship of my loved ones.

Fraternally,

J. A. PARKER.

The Sunday School.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Texas is making a plea for 1,000 new A. B. Classes, to be organized during the year 1911. Mississippi may not possess so many acres or so many people, but she has hundreds and thousands out of Sunday school and the message of great joy must be carried to them.

What would it mean to Mississippi if each boy and girl, maiden and lad, the adults and home department as well, should bring one pupil into the school for each quarter of the Sunday school year?

You are an organized class, you have your certificate, possibly in the new paper roll in which it came. A certificate really means something and is a source of growth and inspiration.

Every class organized this year in the Mississippi Conference has a great chance. The Sunday School Board offers a Bible to the class making the best exhibits next December at Conference for one year's good work, and one for the second best work in the same length of time.

Comparative exhibits are most helpful. At Columbus, Miss., at the State Sunday School Convention, March 21-22-23, there will be an exhibit of all the work done in every department of Sunday school activity.

Let every class prepare even the smallest thing they have done—a class motto, a class picture, a line or card telling of an orphan cared for, a missionary supported, a library arranged for town or country—all the printed helps used, etc.

People are heart-hungry for this information, and it would be helpful for Mr. W. Fred Long to be able to report the activities from all the classes "doing things" in Mississippi.

Mr. W. C. Pearce got out a helpful leaflet, "A Hundred Things a Hundred Classes Are Doing," and it could easily be duplicated in every State.

Write your field secretary your plans and methods, so they may be used by other classes struggling over the rough road you have smoothed.

What about your Cradle Roll? A thoughtful Sunday school worker in this Conference said the other day that he had found many Cradle Rolls dust covered and not even hung, with only the original half dozen names attached, and he bemoaned the lack of interest. We must become more enthusiastic along this line.

In Sweetwater, Tenn., an entire Sunday school was doubled and irradiated not long since by the revision and fresh interest put back of the babies and Cradle Roll.

We must have them, as we must have the boys and girls, the men and women.

There is a tall, magnificent oak tree at old Farmington, Miss., called the "lookout oak." During the war between the States, a man was kept in this tree, early and late, with a powerful glass, watching enemy and friend alike and reporting to headquarters. Hidden under that cover of soft, rustling, protecting leaves he did valued service for his cause, and every man, from general to private, gave heed to the messages and even gestures of that man away up in that old, dignified and friendly tree. Our lookout Sunday school men are high up, and with glasses and skilled eyes they send us down the messages of joy, hope, and impending danger. One ever repeated message is, "Get everybody into the Sunday school, everybody saved for the Master—and now."

Obedience is the first and best quality of a good soldier—a soldier of the cross especially—and it is to be feared many are not even thinking of being ready for marching orders.

Dr. Chappell, than whom there is no more vision-gifted Sunday school specialist, comprehends the success of many details of this great work by the epigrammatic phrase, "consecrated energy plus common sense has done the work."

Sunday school leaders should not be content to care for the children only when they come to the classes on Sunday morning. If we are sincere in our desires to save the child there are many things to consider besides the problems of teaching. Two million boys and girls under sixteen years of age in our country are breadwinners. It is said that ten thousand little boys work in coal mines, six thousand and four hundred work in glass factories, and in various industries there are hundreds who work all night. Sixty thousand children toil in Southern cotton mills, and it has been estimated that forty-three per cent of this class are illiterate. The welfare of the child should be considered from every standpoint, and Sunday school workers should seek to aid every laudable effort to better the condition of children physically and mentally as well as morally.—V. A. Godbey.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

The greatest need just now, is pastors who will study modern Sunday school methods and introduce them into their Sunday schools. Leaflets on all subjects may be had from Nashville for the asking.

Brother Ramsey of the Harriston charge, has recently organized a Home Department at Lorman. It is meeting with great favor among the members. Why should not a Home Department be as successful in the country as in town?

The modern Sunday school is in a sense in competition with the modern day school. Systematic work, with regular promotions to higher grades, under trained teachers, prevails in the day school. Many Sunday schools are run on methods of long ago. The sensitive nature of the child soon detects the difference with, oftentimes serious results. It is a source of gratification that large numbers of Sunday school workers are noting this, and swinging into line.

The Sunday School Board gathered some very interesting and suggestive statistics for the recent session of Conference at Hattiesburg. It was learned that there were in the Mississippi Conference 34 graded Sunday schools; 52 schools using the new graded lessons; 48 cradle rolls; 71 organized Bible classes; 29 Home Departments, and 11 schools observed promotion day. Could we have received reports from all the charges these figures would have been largely increased. We anticipate better results next year.

Plans are now perfecting for the spring itinerary of Sunday School Institutes. Before the next issue of the Advocate the programs will be out and distributed. We are anticipating the finest series of institutes.

The Origin of Georgia Marble

The exact period of the formation of this vast deposit of the world's finest marble is not known, but more than fifty years ago the Cherokee Indians were removed from their reservation in North Georgia to the Indian Territory, and then it was the white men came into undisputed possession of this country, rich in natural resources almost beyond reckoning or conception. Before this, white men, envious of the unquestioned riches with which the territory abounded, took up their residence and traded with the Indians. There were many disputes and quarrels between the races, with loss of life, and it was not until after the country was thrown open that real advancement was made possible. In a United States census volume devoted to the subject, the opening sentence reads: "The geological formations represented in Georgia embrace the Metamorphic, the Paleozoic, the Triassic, the Cretaceous, Tertiary and Quaternary."

What Georgia Marble Is

Georgia Marble is a crystalline formation, being 97.32 per cent carbonate of lime. These tiny crystals are so closely interlocked as to prevent the slightest degree of absorption or decomposition the absorption being but six one-hundredths of one per cent. This same close fitting crystalline formation renders it hard and firm and the very best material for exterior building, interior finishing and monumental work, having a crushing strength of upwards of 10,000 pounds to the square inch, the greatest resisting power of any building stone in the world. Georgia Marble resists heat to upwards of 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit. In other words, it is practically fire proof. In color, there is "Cherokee," a silver grey; "Creole," a mottled black and white; "Kennesaw," a pure white and "Etowah," a most exquisite pink of varying shades.

The Supply and the Plant

The supply of Georgia Marble is in reality inexhaustible; the principal formation being over sixty miles long, from two to three miles wide and about 200 feet deep, and contains about five hundred billion feet of workable marble. The Georgia Marble Company is fully equipped for quarrying this stone, with all the latest improved machinery and operate a most gigantic plant. They work a day and night shift in their sawing mills, continuously; own their own power and electrical plant, machine and wood working shops and many miles of standard gauge railway, completely equipped, which connects the different quarries with each other and with the main line of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad system. With their modern facilities, huge steam and electrical cranes, etc., they can supply any size and shape block desired and make prompt delivery to any point in the United States or foreign countries. The magnitude of this great plant must be seen to be appreciated. The marble is the largest in the world, and its product is by far superior to any other stone for building or monumental purposes.

The Uses of Georgia Marble

This celebrated Georgia Marble is used in a great many different ways, and for many purposes, but on account of its beauty and lasting qualities, it is especially valuable as a building material, exterior and interior, and for monumental work. Being superbly beautiful and matching up so perfectly and also being practically fire proof it is unsurpassed for interior finishing and wainscoting. An example of this can be seen in the Cadillac Building of Atlanta, which is finished throughout with Georgia Marble. It is absolutely non-absorbent and proof against dirt and other impurities of the atmosphere. These features also make it unexcelled as a monumental material—it is time and element-resisting, and when lettered the inscription presents a beautiful contrast to the background that renders it legible at a distance. It is the most superior American marble, and resembles in analysis and beauty the famous Parian marble of ancient times.

Ask your dealer to show you samples of "Cherokee," "Creole," "Etowah" and "Kennesaw" Georgia Marble, and if he can't supply you, write us and we will put you in touch with a nearby dealer who can.

Editorial

There is a notion abroad that laymen do not need to be as religious as preachers. Such a view is erroneous and hurtful in its effect. The moral law is over all alike, and the obligation to keep it is equally binding upon both sexes and people in every occupation. There is no double standard in the divine kingdom.

The editor of Zion's Herald suggests that there should be a time limit on public prayers. The proposal is a wise one. And along with it let us have a requirement that in praying the one who leads shall talk to the Lord and not to the people. Some so-called prayers that we have heard were little else than lectures by one on bended knee to an audience kneeling.

"Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I unto thee," said St. Peter to the cripple at the temple gate. But the healing and health that he gave were better than money. So to-day there are more valuable gifts than dollars. The man who lifts up a soul fallen and weak and groveling in sin and gives it heart and hope and vision, does for it what the wealth of the world could not do. The noblest benefactors of humanity are they who minister to the spiritually destitute. Man is a deathless soul, and food and drink and raiment are but a small portion of his needs.

Much comment has been made upon John Wesley's lack of knowledge of children, and it is true that the regulations that he laid down for their government in his Kingswood School were quite ridiculous. But the illustrious founder of Methodism knew one thing about them that many in this boasted modern time seem yet not to have learned—the importance of looking after and saving them in the opening years of life. To his helpers he gave the following directions: "Spend an hour a week with the children in every large town, whether you like it or not. Talk with them every time you see any at home. Pray in earnest for them." The pastor who does not seek to reach and win for Christ the young of his congregation is not in the true Wesleyan succession.

Stodiousness becomes the man called to preach the unsearchable riches of the gospel of Christ. Though he is not to depend on learning for success, he can not have too much of it. Ignorance has never been a help to any cause. Let not our ministers, because a few have been spoiled by making too much of some of the ephemeral phases of modern thought, conclude that they do not need to aspire to scholarship and the best equipment. For every one injured by quaffing of the Pierian spring, dozens have been maimed and dwarfed by not drinking of its ever-flowing waters. The "choice vessels of the Lord" have never been men with empty heads. He who would be useful to the highest extent of which he is capable, must procure the best books and assimilate their nourishing truths into the very fibers of his intellectual being. The young preacher who does not form the habit of systematic study makes a tremendous mistake.

A TIMELY ENTERPRISE.

Methodism nowhere is more wide awake and aggressive than in Texas, the Empire State of the South. The leaders in that great field seem to have the fortunate faculty of quickly discovering needs and opportunities, coupled with an ability to enterprize successful methods of meeting them. This fact is attested by their erection of modern and imposing churches in Houston and other important centers, by the establishment of their notable Epworth League Assembly on their gulf coast, and by the movement which they now have under way to develop, articulate, and strengthen their educational system.

But, in our opinion, in nothing have the Texans evinced more discernment and wisdom than in the organization of a Tract Society, which has for its aim the creation and circulation of a cheap literature succinctly explaining and defending the teachings of Methodism. This organization, of which the Rev. Charles A. Spragms is president, had a meeting at the Publishing House in Dallas a short time since, and Rev. S. W. Turner, of the Central Texas Conference, was placed in charge of this work and will devote to it his entire time. We are in hearty sympathy with this movement, which, in our judgment, has been begun none too soon, and we think our people elsewhere would do well to follow the lead of the brethren of the Lone Star State and set on foot similar enterprises.

Two or three years ago when a presiding elder we felt the need of distributing some doctrinal tracts to counteract certain influences at work in the territory over which we had supervision, and wrote to the Publishing House at Nashville to obtain them, but, to our amazement, were informed that there were none in stock. Frequently now we have letters from church members who are disturbed about some religious question, that we do not have time to answer. Never was there a period when the country was so flooded with poisonous literature as it is now. The most precious doctrines of the Christian faith are called in question, and the claims of new cults are being pressed with a persistency and urgency worthy of better causes. Nothing is left unchallenged, and the only loyalty that can be counted upon to stand in this testing time is that which springs from intelligent convictions.

Our Church to-day has no duty more imperative than that of informing and indoctrinating her membership. Thousands of them are Methodists simply because their fathers and mothers were. Of the basis and ground of Methodist teaching they know almost nothing. Hence, when an earnest propagandist of some other denomination, or no denomination, comes along and begins to assail our mode of baptism and other things for which we stand, we find some of our people slipping away ere we were aware that they were being disturbed. If the statistics showing how many have gone from the Methodist Church to other Churches and to Christian Science and other cults within the past decade were available, we dare say that they would present a revelation that would be startling. The truth is, our very liberality tends to make our followers an easy prey for proselyters. We would not have our members to be sectarian or lacking in fraternity, but we hold that they should be made to see the beauty and scripturalness of our teaching, the efficiency and wisdom of our polity, and led to appreciate the marvelous history of Methodism and to partake in the pride of her imperishable names. One who considers all Churches equally good is pretty certain to make a poor member of the one to which he belongs. He is apt to lack the concern and enthusiasm necessary to make him bestir himself to build up his own fold. Why should he, when he thinks it is no better than any other?

It is our conviction that the lack of denominational spirit is one of the weaknesses of Methodism, and we fear an increasing weakness. As we see it, we need not only a revival of spirituality, but also of devotion and loyalty to our Church. For this reason, we think a propaganda to instruct our people concerning our government and religious views is eminently wise. The circulation of properly written tracts would contribute much toward the accomplishment of this end. We hope, therefore, that this movement will spread and become general throughout the connection. And we should also like to see our Sunday school literature made somewhat more denominational and the atmosphere in our institutions of learning more pronouncedly Methodist. The pulpit, in our judgment, should also deepen its doctrinal note, and lend a more vigorous hand in the work of establishing the masses of Methodism in the faith. Our Church cannot continue to be great and creditably perform the work of the future, if built upon a mere passion for evangelism and nothing else. Her members must know and appreciate the truth and be able to maintain it, if they are to achieve results commensurate with their opportunities, and prove themselves worthy successors of the spiritual sons and daughters of Wesley who wrought so gloriously in the past.

Dr. H. B. Johnson, presiding elder of the Dyersburg District, Memphis Conference, and one of the strong and growing men of the Southern Methodist Church, thus addresses the pastors associated with him in the work in an open letter: "Be present at all appointments—Sunday schools, prayer meetings, Epworth Leagues, ladies' meetings, and preaching, with a well-prepared message for each occasion. Stay on your own charge. Too much time in other fields does not build well your work or the general cause. Lose sight of the fifth Sunday vacation. Rest only when necessary. Use the fifth Sunday, and on circuits the moon-light nights for some extra preaching services. Establish in this way mid-week services. Visit your appointments in advance of Sunday. Do not appear in the pulpit the first, and only, time your people see you. Drummers stay away from home all the week, sometimes longer. Our fathers did also." Excellent suggestions are these. We will only add that presiding elders are often away from home for days and weeks at a time, and that there are occasions when our Bishops do not see their families for weeks and months. Hence, a brother so constituted that he cannot stay away from home for two or three days is disqualified for both the eldership and the episcopacy.

THERE'S A BRIGHT SIDE.

"This old world is full of trouble,"—
We so often, often hear.
Isn't it as full of gladness,
Bright with love and hope and cheer?
If we look for flaws, we find them;
Look for trouble, it's ours;
Why not listen for the joy-bells,
Shun the thorns and gather flowers?
Clouds will come, but clouds are transient things;
We know they cannot last;
Think how glorious is the sunset
When a stormy day is past.
Smile, and smiles will brightly blossom
On the lips of those we greet;
If we give of love to others,
Joy and we are sure to meet.
Stars behind the clouds are shining,
Afterwhile they'll come in sight.
Hope—our beacon star—is beaming
For us in the darkest night.
God is smiling on his children,
Watching us with loving care;
If we bravely bear our crosses,
We will in his glory share.

DOCTOR WINTON ONCE MORE.

By Bishop E. E. Hoss.

Mr. Editor:—Your issue of December 19, containing a letter from Dr. George B. Winton, is before me. But for the fact that I have been incessantly on the go, I should have made answer much sooner.

This last utterance of my sometime friend would surprise me, if anything from his pen could any longer be a surprise. The Doctor does not take it kindly that I should have presumed to reply to his former letter. As he sees the matter, it is all right for him to go into the public prints, and to indulge in the free use of my name therein, but all wrong for me to take any notice of what he says. Possibly he is correct. I have myself wondered more than once whether it was worth while to pay any attention to his sneers and criticisms. But lest any should suppose that I tacitly admit the truth of his statements, I desire to say a little more.

The Doctor makes a distinct issue with me. In response to my allegation that he has shifted his position on the Vanderbilt matter, he enters a categorical denial, thus:

"I have done nothing of the kind. There is not the vestige of support for the repeated charge that I agreed with and commended the conclusions of the Vanderbilt Commission. I did not commend their conclusions because I did not agree with them. I did commend the Commission for its abnegation and diligence. The only comment I made, however, was not in the editorial columns of the Christian Advocate, but merely in a few lines on the cover page, put in to fill the space under a cut of the members of the Commission, and made up of kind generalities."

Now, in a case like this, the record itself is the best evidence. Why did not the Doctor give the record? Here are his exact words:

"That report is a monument to the Christian intelligence and abnegation of the men who framed it. Without compensation they have engaged in extensive studies, given much hard work and valuable time, and have elaborated a report that in clearness of verbiage and definiteness of meaning, as well as in Christian high-mindedness, will take rank with the best State papers of our country. We echo their earnest wish that it may hush all questionings and disagreements."

Little comment is necessary. It will be noticed, however, that the Doctor commended, not as he says, the "abnegation and diligence of the Commissioners, but their 'abnegation and intelligence.'" He declared that their work was "monumental," and that "in clearness of verbiage, definiteness of meaning, and Christian high-mindedness, it will take rank with the best State papers of our country." He goes further still, and "echoes the earnest wish that it may hush all questionings and disagreements." Yet all this, he now tells us, was simply "kind generalities." What sort of language, I am tempted to ask, would he have used, if he had designed to commend the report throughout? I should like to inquire also how he could honestly "echo the earnest wish" that this report might "hush all questionings and disagreements," when by his own statement, he stoutly questioned it and disagreed with it from the beginning, and has fought it ever since.

But these "kind generalities" were space fillers, the Doctor further points out, and did not appear in an editorial column, but on the cover page. Does that make any difference? Is candor any the less demanded on the cover page than elsewhere? If so, then every editor ought to give distinct notice to his readers that his cover page pronouncements are not to be taken seriously.

There is more yet. In declining to publish an article from me before the Commission sat, Dr. Winton said over his own signature: "I need not say how reluctantly I decline to let Bishop Hoss have right-of-way in the Advocate, and the more so as in this case I heartily agree with him." Does he still stick to that? After the Commission had made its report, he again refused me a hearing in the words and terms following: "While it (the case) was pending before the Commission, I felt that public discussion might only tend to complicate matters. Now that it is settled, and settled satisfactorily, it seems to me that it would be well to let it rest." Does he still stick to that?

To do the Doctor justice, I suppose that if the Church had been content to look upon the report of the Commissioners as a series of mere barren abstractions—cover-page stuff—he would have offered no serious objections to it. But just as soon as the Church showed the slightest disposition to act on it as a "satisfactory" interpretation of law, he was at once up in arms against it. The Board of Trust, so we were solemnly told, "accepted this report in good faith." If this statement was made, in the simple and natural sense of the terms, then the Board is in honor held and bound by it; but, if not, then it was, from the beginning, evasive and ambiguous.

In view of all that has since happened the Board's "acceptance" ought to have contained another clause to this effect: "Our language, of course, must be understood to be used in a Pickwickian sense. We accept the report with the distinct reservation that the Church shall make no attempt to exercise the rights which this report claims for it."

The assertion that the Church released the Board from the self-assumed obligations by breaking what is called the "compact" of 1895, is a piece of impudence. There was no compact. The word was not used at the time, nor thought of. It has been dragged in later to serve a purpose. The whole process was simply a rearrangement of the Church's relation to the University, the Annual Conferences giving place to the General Conference. Nothing passed to the General Conference except the powers that the Annual Conferences had always possessed—nothing at all; and this transfer was made by the free consent of the Annual Conferences themselves, the Board of Trust acting only as an agent or intermediary in the premises. How could the Church acquire, by compact in 1895, the rights which it had had, and had exercised from the beginning? I affirm—and I challenge the denial of it—that till June, 1910, and excepting only the Bishops, who sat for some time as ex-officio trustees, in accordance with Bishop McTyeire's opinion, every trustee that Vanderbilt University ever had was either named or confirmed by the Church. And yet we are coolly informed, and that by men who are supposed to be more than ordinarily intelligent, that the right of confirmation was bestowed on the Church by "compact" in 1895, and taken away, in a spirit of retaliation, as one of the trustees told me, in 1910. What the trustees did not give they cannot take away. Let us hear the Doctor once more:

"After all my earnest requests for proof, the affirmation that the Supreme Court of Tennessee decided the Southwestern Presbyterian University case on the basis of the statute of 1895 remains unsupported. Why can we not have a reference to page and line of the published reports of that Court? I made and make no claim to original knowledge in this matter. A competent lawyer, not acting at the time as a hired attorney at all, a man in whose ability and integrity I have as much confidence as I have in the integrity and ability of Bishop Hoss, told me that he had gone over the record in that case twice and had found no reference to the statute of 1895. If there is such a reference, everybody concerned would feel grateful for a citation by which it could be verified."

As I intimated in my former article, Bishop Denny went carefully over this whole matter last fall with Dr. Winton, assured him that he had personally read the record, and showed him precisely why there had been some misunderstanding in regard to it. At the time the Doctor professed himself satisfied. Now, however, he declares that his "earnest request for proof" has not been answered. Either he has suffered a lapse of memory, or else he has concluded that Bishop Denny did not know what he was talking about. The opinion of the Court in the case under notice has never been published. But it was in the hands of Mr. Keeble, the counsel for the trustees, in manuscript form, when the Vanderbilt Commission met in 1906, and it came into the hands of my lawyer, Mr. Albert W. Biggs, near the close of the sittings. A copy of it is before me as I write.

That it does not refer to the Act of 1895 by name is unquestionably true. That much nobody has ever denied. But it does refer to it as Section 2531 of Shannon's Code.

The case in question came up from the Chancery Court of Clarksville, Tenn., to the Chancery Court of Appeals in 1894. That Court decided that the trustees were a self-perpetuating body, but went out of the way to add: "Of course, we must assume that in carrying out the religious purposes involved in the granting of the charter and in the establishment of the University, the Board will select as directors gentlemen of Presbyterian religious predilections, and who will carry out the purpose for which the University was created." The "assumption" of the Court seems not to have been verified by the trustees of Vanderbilt University.

The ground on which the Chancery Court of Appeals reached its conclusion that the Board was self-perpetuating was that the University was created by the State and not by the Presbyterian Church. On page 32 of the opinion the following language is used: "Moreover, if we assume that the University was established by the Presbyterian Church, and that it is now maintained and patronized by it, and that this being so, under Code Shannon, Section 2531, this Church has the authority to elect its directors for the government and management of its affairs," etc. Now Code Shannon, Section 2531, is the same as the Act of 1895, Chapter 6, Section 2. So far very well.

But the case finally, on March 31, 1905, came before the Supreme Court for a hearing, which swept away about twenty pages of confused reasoning in the opinion below, and unanimously said, in very concise language:

"The said University is under the patronage of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and in this relation of patronage, the Synods of Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana and Alabama act for said Church, and for it and in such capacity have the right to elect each two directors for the said University corporation, according to the plan of union adopted by the Synods originally co-operating in the establishment of the said Southwestern University."

Now, if the "patronage" here referred to is anything else than the patronage referred to and described in the Act of 1895, and specifically cited and commented on in the reversed opinion of the lower court, then the case is all the worse for Dr. Winton and the trustees; for, in that event, it remains even if the Act of 1895 should now be declared unconstitutional. Patronage, as the Tennessee law defines it, involves the right to elect directors or trustees. The Court was not satisfied simply to put the case in an affirmative way, but added further: "Therefore, the trustees, or directors of said University have no power or authority to select their successors and perpetuate the said Board, regardless of the will and desire of the said Synods, as hereinbefore stated," etc.

I have probably given the Doctor enough to digest for one time. But there is one other thing concerning which I wish to add a word. My contention that the patronizing Conferences were originally members of the corporation of Vanderbilt University, he calls "absurd." Maybe so. But for the present, at any rate, I am rather inclined to accept the view of Judge O'Rear and his associates rather than that of the Doctor, and this without at all calling in question the extent or the character of his legal erudition.

The Doctor's quotation from the charter, a document for which he generally expresses little respect, is inadequate and misleading to the last limit. The hiatus represented by the three stars is most important. The "petitioners" appeared in Court, not as individuals, but as "representatives" of certain Annual Conferences, and their petition was granted to them by the Court in that capacity. Dr. Winton knows this to be true, and he knew it to be true when he charged me with absurdity. If the Annual Conferences were not of the corporation, why did "the petitioners" take the charter to all of them for acceptance or rejection? Why did they resign their places on the Board that the Conferences might directly elect the first active Board of Trustees? And why did the Conferences proceed to do that very thing, choosing some of the "petitioners" and leaving others off?

Dr. Winton presumes to know what goes on in the College of Bishops. If he does, then he gets his information through irregular sources; for the proceedings of the Bishops on matters of importance are rightly held secret.

As a matter of fact, the lawyers of the trustees have never yet answered the bill filed by the lawyers of the Bishops, and the delay in the trial of the suit is due wholly to their request for time to prepare their answer.

So much for a man whose prejudices cause him to be careless of facts.

A TRIP TO CUBA.

Fourteen years in school work, and having had no time for a summer vacation, I decided to take a trip of two weeks' duration to Cuba—the Pearl of the Antilles. I was fortunate indeed to be invited to join Bishop Candler and his party in Jacksonville, Fla., on January 17. En route, I spent the first night in Tuscaloosa, Ala. More than eighty years ago Rev. Preston Cooper joined the Conference in this city. For thirty years he blessed the Church with his matchless oratory, his faith, and consecration—then passed away to the habitation of saints in glory, where visions become an eternal reality. He sleeps well at the lonely cemetery at Benton, Miss. Last year my friend, Rev. J. E. Gray, wrote: "I visited the grave of your father to-day and placed flowers on it, and offered a prayer that his son might be useful and faithful, and join the father one day in the city whose builder and maker is God." In the strength of that prayer, I went for many days. Holy memories of that visit brought before me the lives of Galloway, Jno. A. Ellis, D. A. Little, Balliard, Newson, Andrews, W. B. Lewis, Morse, Ransom Jones, and Singleton.

I would pray with John Greenleaf Whittier:

"Be near me when all else is from me drifting,
Earth, sky, home-pictures, days of shade and shine,
And kindly faces to my own uplifting
The love which answers mine."

From Tuscaloosa we went to Montgomery, Ala., where Governor O'Neal was inaugurated. Whatever may be said of the merits or demerits of the new governor, the liquor was greatly in evidence. The retiring Governor Comer will go down into history as one of the greatest public officers the South ever had.

How true the new governor will be to his oath, remains to be seen. May the prohibition movement of Alabama become so strong that godly women will be respected instead of the hoodlums, anarchists and foreigners of the cities! Alabama is worthy of the best laws and the best officers.

It was a great pleasure to spend a few hours with Rev. J. E. Northcutt, pastor of Dexter Avenue Church. Prof. Northcutt had the chair of Mathematics in Centenary College of Louisiana in 1900 and 1902. Loyal and consecrated, this cultured itinerant is making full proof of his ministry. To a Mississippian who cherishes the memory of Jefferson Davis, Alabama's Capitol possesses great interest; for within its historic precincts the immortal Davis took the oath of office as President of the Southern Confederacy. The Spartans never loved the name of Leonidas more than the Southerners love the name of Jefferson Davis. Horace Greeley was right when he advised the federal government not to give the South a martyr like Leonidas. Jefferson Davis knew how to fight under the shadows of the arrows.

Leaving Montgomery at 7 p. m., we reached Jacksonville, Fla., 9 a. m., January 17, a distance of 400 miles. Here our party got together, consisting of Bishop Candler, William Candler, son of Hon. Asa Candler, Mr. and Mrs. Leigh and two sons, Mr. and Mrs. Murph, Mr. and Mrs. Chunn, of Georgia, Rev. C. A. Cornell and wife (Brother Cornell is presiding elder of Prattville District, Alabama Conference), and the writer. Thirteen in number—unlucky! Well, since the Colonies were thirteen in number and our country has had such great prosperity, we will risk the future. Jacksonville is beautiful for situation—on the St. John's River.

One of the principal attractions at Jacksonville is the ostrich farm on the outskirts of the city. The ostrich has a great mission, furnishing our fair women with feathers at ten, fifteen, twenty-five, or fifty dollars a feather.

My admiration for the ostrich increased when I learned they courted and mated and are always true to each other. Not even the laws of Dakota could divorce them. Then when I found out the male bird kept the nest warm at night, relieving the female, my admiration knew no bounds for this gallant bird. Long live the ostrich family!

Our train left at 3 p. m. for Knight's Key, 500 miles distant. A very amusing incident occurred at Miami. One of the passengers said to his wife that it was very warm in the sleeper. He donned his overcoat, put on his slippers, went out on the platform of the depot to enjoy the sea breeze at 4 o'clock in the morning—when lo! the train left him. A rather embarrassing condition! At nine o'clock a. m., Jan. 18, we reached Knight's Key. The steamship, Governor Cobb, was waiting to take passengers to Havana—one hundred and twenty miles across the straits of Florida. We had traveled more than one hundred miles through the everglades of Florida over coral beds and cement pillars. Leaving the train, I noticed the wheels of the engine were covered with the dust of coral, as if a snow had fallen during the night.

Flagler, the multi-millionaire, a member of the Standard Oil Company, has brought about this startling improvement. He is now building the track from Knight's Key to Key West, 49 miles over the gulf. It will take at least fifty millions to do the work. To see two miles of track in the sea and hundreds of men at work—is an inspiration to one who loves to behold the execution of noble deeds.

Flagler is building himself a monument. I could but ask, are we as enterprising, as Christians, in building for eternity. If so,

"The work will multiply like stars at night
When darkness deepens—every noble deed
Lasts longer than a granite monument."

After eight hours' ride over calm seas, we entered Havana Harbor under the shadow of Morro Castle, and near the spot where the Maine went down. When I thought of the horrible deeds committed in Morro Castle and of the 250 sailors who sleep in the Maine, my feelings were not as calm as the sea over which we had sailed.

"Stoop, angels, hither from the skies!
There is no holier spot of ground
Than where defeated valor lies,
By mourning beauty crowned."

The harbor expands before us into a magnificent bay, two and one-half miles wide, with sea-room for a thousand ships. The arrivals of vessels at Havana in a course of a year from domestic and foreign ports number about four thousand. It will be noticed that most of the steamships lie at moorings in the bay.

At Havana, as practically at all the ports in Cuba, cargoes of vessels, are discharged by lighters. Gen. Bliss who had charge of the Havana customs service during the American occupation, estimated that during the three and one-half years, the lighterage in Cuba cost not less than ten million dollars.

Our ship does not dock, but comes to mooring at a buoy. We go ashore on a tender. On the wharf our baggage is inspected by officials who know how to be polite—courtesy is the rule in Havana. We take a street car for our hotel and soon realize we are in a strange land. Bishop Candler had anticipated our comfort and engaged rooms at the elegant Hotel Trocha. The Bishop was our host in a foreign land. No one could have been more considerate and attentive. To be associated for ten days with this distinguished servant of the Church is to have one's estimate of the dignity of our Christianity increased. Joel Chandler Harris was never more humorous; Sumnerfield was never more tender in his friendship. In his preaching he is verily a son of thunder and in his personal relation to others he is as attractive as the dawn of a cloudless morning.

For the present, a dios.
Havana, Cuba, Jan. 20, 1911.

I. W. COOPER.

"THE LOCAL PREACHER" AGAIN.

Dear Dr. Meek:—By your kind permission I wish to make a few statements under the above caption. The local preachers of the North Mississippi Conference of to-day are occupying a somewhat unimportant relation to the pastor and Church, to what they once did. Many of them are doing absolutely nothing toward making proof of the fact that they are ministers at all. Many of them do not even (or rarely so, at least), attend the District Conference, nor even make a report to that body, as our Book of Discipline requires. We had last year in this District, Oxford, 26 local preachers (counting the four we licensed at that time), and there were only fourteen present, counting those that were licensed during the session of the District Conference; or, eleven of the twelve that were absent failed to make any kind of report to the District Conference.

I seriously doubt the wisdom of licensing men to preach, if they mean to sit down and not try to do anything toward carrying out their obligations to the Church, and then renewing their licenses year after year, when they have had every necessary opportunity to "show their faith by their works," and failed to make use of it. It seems to me to be unwise to pursue such a course! When will our local preachers return to the old paths in gladly living up to the obligations and privileges in our beloved Church?

Brethren, there is something wrong, and badly wrong, too. Beholding the situation as some of us do, a few of us are trying to so engage the attention of the local preachers of our district and to enlist them in the great work of the Church that needs so much to be done right in our own midst. So we have organized "The Local Preachers' Association of the Oxford District," and during our last session, which convened at Main Street Church, Water Valley last summer, we decided not to vote for the re-licensing of local preachers who treat with indifference, or in excusable carelessness, the great obligations resting upon them. It is really an unjust reflection on the Church that so many of our local preachers do so little toward advancing the cause of the world's Redeemer. Talk to some of them about "preaching the gospel to all the world in this generation," and they will tell you it cannot be done; and no wonder they think so, for it is precious little that some of them are doing to spread the glad tidings. The overworked pastors have more than they can do, so there is no reasonable excuse that can be offered by the local preachers of to-day for not doing more active work in the Church. Therefore, we earnestly ask that all the pastors in the Oxford District (our presiding elder is in hearty sympathy with us) to assist us in any way they can conveniently do so to encourage the local preachers of the district and lead them into more active service in the work of the Master.

A LOCAL PREACHER.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The annual meeting of the Board of Education will be held April 6-9 at Montgomery, Ala. There will be held an Educational Conference in connection with the Board meetings. The Board will meet Thursday morning, April 6, at 9 o'clock. The Conference will begin Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Morning, afternoon and evening sessions of the Conference will be held April 7, 8 and 9. The general topic is, "The Church College." The different phases of this subject will be discussed by thoroughly competent educational leaders. The educators and pastors of the Church are cordially invited to attend and to take part in this Conference.

The committee appointed by the Board to classify the institutions of the Church, will meet April 5, at 9 o'clock, at Montgomery. The exact place of meeting will be published later.

All information required by the committee in classifying the institutions of the Church should be in the hands of the committee before the date of its meeting. Full reports from a number of schools are now in the hands of the secretary. Some have not yet made reply to requests for information from the office.

Will the head of each institution of learning kindly see to it that all the facts and information concerning his institution, which the committee will need—or which the institution desires the committee to have—in making a fair and correct classification, are sent at once to the office of the Corresponding Secretary, 310 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.?

Those schools which desire aid from the Board should make out their applications and statements and forward the same to the office of the secretary, so as to be in his hands by March 25.

STONEWALL ANDERSON,
Corresponding Secretary.

BOY PAGES OF CONGRESS.

Boys and girls who visit Washington while Congress is in session probably consider the most interesting persons in either the Senate or the House of Representatives are the boy pages constantly running hither and thither. However solemn or sedate or prosy the speeches may be in the Senate, however noisy or mysterious may be the conduct of the House, ever continually flit the pages eager, busy, alert, adding a lively picturesque feature to the scene.

When a congressman wishes to send a message to another member, whether in the same branch or not, where he has mail to send out or reference books to be brought in from the library, when indeed any errand is to be done, he claps his hands and instantly several boys run to him from their seats on the steps of the speaker's platform. When a member rises to make a speech, a boy runs for a glass of water, or in the summer he may bring lemonade.

The boys do not appear to be more than from twelve to fifteen years of age. They display silver badges about the size of a half-dollar on their coats. On their feet they wear slippers or pumps while on duty, that they may move about quietly as well as quickly. Some days they grow very tired with excessive running, but on the whole the occupation is pleasant and naturally it is instructive.

A page has to be a bright, wide-awake chap, for he must learn to recognize Senators and Representatives, foreign diplomats, public functionaries and prominent citizens in order to perform his errands satisfactorily and without embarrassment. He is sent on every conceivable sort of errand, and his store of information increases rapidly.

The pages would not be boys, however, if they did not find plenty of ways to amuse themselves. In the Senate, for instance, there are occasional lulls when the lads settle down on the carpet under the seats at the rear of the room and enjoy a quiet game of marbles. During the night sessions, while eager debate occupies the House, many a prank or mischievous adventure is indulged in by the boys who are so fortunate as to escape unnoticed for a while. Games of football and baseball are played outside during the leisure hours of the session.

Living among lawmakers day in and day out for several months, the boys cannot help learning a great deal about their country and its people, its laws and methods of government, and its needs and opportunities and responsibilities. Many lads who have served as pages—receiving $2.50 a day—have grown up to fill important public positions; some of them have returned in later years to represent their State in Congress.—New York Christian Advocate.

Church News

The Scarsitt Bible and Training School of Kansas City has an enrollment of ninety students, the largest in the history of the institution.

Mr. John R. Pepper, of Memphis, and Rev. George R. Stuart, the well known evangelist, visited Hattiesburg, Miss., last week in the interest of the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

Dr. J. H. Shakespeare, the noted English Baptist minister, has accepted an invitation to preach at Harvard University on June 11, and conduct a series of devotional services the week following.

A campaign is under way to add $500,000 to the endowment fund of the Ohio Wesleyan University. Of this amount the General Board of Education (Rockefeller) is expected to give $125,000 and Mr. Carnegie $50,000.

Ex-Vice-President Chas. W. Fairbanks visited New York a few days since and lunched with the executive committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. He is a Methodist of connectional spirit, and an ardent advocate of foreign missions.

Bishop Collins Denny will preach the Commencement sermon at Millsaps College on June 4, and deliver the baccalaureate address on June 6. The annual sermon before the Young Men's Christian Association will be preached by Dr. H. G. Henderson, of Columbus, Miss.

Rust University, the well known negro school at Holly Springs, Miss., recently enjoyed a visit from Bishop Quayle, who presented the cause of African missions so effectively that fourteen students have avowed their purpose to devote their lives to carrying the gospel to the inhabitants of the dark continent.

President Taft seems actually to have given utterance to a phrase which has caught the popular ear. We refer to his characterization of the co-operation of the Churches in America as a "team work for better humanity." Most of what our Unitarian Chief Executive says and writes is like himself—somewhat heavy.

On February 1 the Diocesan Council of Virginia (Episcopal) elected the Rev. Berryman Green, Doctor of Divinity and Professor of the English Bible in the Virginia Seminary, Bishop-Coadjutor of that diocese. Dr. Green is forty-six years old, and is said to be well equipped for the responsible position to which he has been called.

The laymen of the Methodist Church at Helena, Ark., gave a banquet on the evening of January 30, with Rev. T. V. Ramsey, the pastor, as toast master and Bishop McCoy as the guest of honor. The Western Methodist says that Brother Ramsey "did in good style his function" and that Bishop McCoy made an excellent address.

The Chapman-Alexander revival campaign in Toronto, which recently closed, is said to have been a disappointment so far as the number of conversions are concerned. The Christian Guardian, of that city, thinks much good was accomplished, but remarks that some of the Bible readings bearing upon the millennium "did not consort well with Methodist teaching."

Mr. Thomas W. Knight, the last survivor of the twelve charter members, who, with George Williams, organized the Young Men's Christian Association in London, England, died at the home of his son, Dr. F. W. Knight, near Portage, Ohio, on January 18. He was a tea merchant in London in 1844, when the organization which has since grown to such proportions was started.

Bishop John M. Walden, D.D., LL.D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, celebrated his eightieth birthday on Feb. 11. The press of the denomination to which he belongs took advantage of the occasion to review the career and express appreciation of this distinguished chief pastor. Our sister Church deserves credit for the manner in which she is given to honoring her aged leaders.

By request we publish the following statement: "The Union Evangelistic Bureau, of Nashville, Tenn., has a list of evangelists and singers to recommend to pastors who desire help in their revival meetings. These workers are holding evangelistic services in different States, and the Bureau can assist the pastors in securing the right kind of help. While the Association stands for union meetings, many of the helpers conduct single meetings. Rev. Wait Holcomb, the evangelist, is the secretary, and will furnish any information desired. If you are interested address him, Nashville, Tenn."

The press dispatches report that Dr. J. H. Jowett, of Birmingham, England, who has accepted a call to the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York City, has notified the officials of that congregation that he does not desire the $12,000 salary offered him, but only such a part of it as is equivalent to what he is receiving in his present pastorate. Dr. Jowett's stipend as pastor of the Carr's Lane Church is a little less than $5,000. Evidently the great preacher does not wish to have it a year that it is the lure of money that is bringing him to this side of the Atlantic, and his action in declining large pay deserves the most hearty commendation.

The Hospital Commissioners of the Memphis, White River, and the two Mississippi Conferences met in the First Methodist Church at Memphis on February 7. The following are the representatives named by the four Conferences to carry forward this important enterprise: Memphis—Dr. H. B. Johnston, Rev. W. G. Heney, Mr. J. R. Pepper, Mr. L. M. Stratton, Mr. T. K. Riddick, and Mrs. St. John Waddell; Mississippi—Rev. J. T. Leggett, Rev. J. R. Jones, Mr. D. W. Heidleberg, Mr. L. N. Dantzler, and Mrs. H. M. Ellis; White River—Rev. R. C. Morhead, Rev. J. K. Harris, Mr. Ed Hamilton, Mr. J. F. Smith, and Mrs. W. R. Stuck; North Mississippi—Rev. J. W. Dorman, Rev. W. S. Lagrone, Mr. J. D. Barbee, Mr. J. R. Bingham, and Mrs. Robert Somerville. The press dispatches report that nineteen of the twenty-two commissioners were present. Mr. J. H. Sherrard was chosen president, and several vice-presidents were named. The meeting was enthusiastic, and it was resolved to erect a hospital to cost when completed $250,000. An executive committee was constituted with full power to take such steps as it may deem necessary to promote the speedy consummation of the project.

METHODISM AND THE DIVORCE EVIL.

By Rev. W. Winans Drake.

For many years the M. E. Church, South, has realized the growing evil presented by the divorce question, and has officially recognized her responsibility for the discouragement of it by forbidding her ministers to sanction it by celebrating the re-marriage of divorced persons. The following paragraph, No. 143 Discipline of 1910, is as positive and specific as possible:

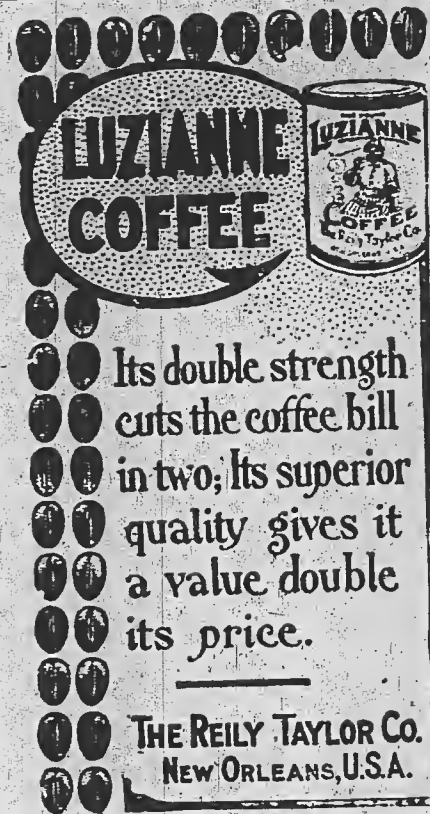

"The ministers of our Church shall be prohibited from solemnizing the rites of matrimony between divorced persons, except in case of innocent parties who have been divorced for the one scriptural cause."

I have not traced the history of this paragraph, but I know that it has been part of our Church law for many years. In spite of this fact, however, I am frequently told when faced practically with this question, that many of our ministers do solemnize the marriage of divorced persons. Within my own observation within the last few months have come two cases illustrative of the non-observance of this law, though they are not the only cases that have come within my knowledge. A young man who secured a divorce without the barest shadow of a scriptural cause, was married, as announced by the daily papers, by the pastor of one of our churches in a Texas city. More recently the daily papers in New Orleans announced the rather sensational case of a woman who secured a divorce from her husband because she had met a former sweetheart, for whom she still felt the old attachment, with the generous co-operation of her husband. The point of the incident, so far as this article is concerned, is that she was at once remarried by Dr. —, pastor of a leading Methodist Church in a certain city. Knowing the minister referred to as a thoughtful and conscientious man, I felt sure that his participation in the matter was due to ignorance of the circumstances of the case. But the fact remains that oftentimes our ministers for some reason disregard the plain law of the Church in such cases.

The object of this article is simply to call attention to this fact, and suggest the propriety and obligation of our ministers to carefully inquire, in all cases in which they are not personally familiar with the circumstances, as to whether either party is divorced. The question may be embarrassing, but the very raising of it is likely to emphasize the attitude of the Church to the matter. In the new form of license issued in Louisiana, the facts as to a previous divorce are stated, thus removing the necessity of the minister's asking the question.

I trust that if any of our ministers have been careless in this matter, the suggestions here made may tend to cause them to exercise more care in the performance of marriage ceremonies, that our law may be more honored in the observance than in the breach.

PREACHERS' MEETING OF THE ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

The preachers of the Alexandria District met in annual session at Bunkie, La., Jan. 30, 1911, and adjourned on Feb. 2, after a very delightful and profitable session. Most of the preachers in the district were in attendance. Rev. P. O. Lowrey, Sunday School Field Secretary; Rev. R. W. Vaughan, Superintendent of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, and Rev. J. Wilson Brown, of the Baton Rouge District, favored us with their presence, adding much to the interest of the occasion. Various members conducted the devotional exercises, which formed a prominent feature of the meeting. There were two questions, and one proposition put on the blackboard by our wide-awake, deeply spiritual and painstaking presiding elder, the discussion of which occupied all the time given to the regular business of the meeting:

1. "What has impressed you as being the greatest need in the field in which you have labored?" As the roll was called the several preachers responded, and while there was diversity as to the manner of expression, there was unity as to the real need—all agreeing that the supreme need in the various charges is a deeper spiritual life which will manifest itself in a personal evangelism—practiced by both pastor and members.
2. "What do I, as pastor, do in, for, and with the Sunday schools of my charge?" This question to the pastors called out considerable discussion, and while there was no written resolution offered to be spread upon the minutes, yet I am quite sure every pastor present resolved to put more into, and hence get more out of his Sunday schools. Very appropriately the congregation sang one verse of "Work, for the night is coming."

The last item of business engaging the attention of the brethren was the assessments for the various connectional claims on the Alexandria District with this statement: "What the Church expects the Alexandria District to do on connectional claims." According to a resolution offered by Brother May, the chair appointed H. W. May, A. R. Hoffpauir and R. M. Brown a committee to devise a plan by which to work at least some of the machinery of our Church, and report to the meeting. The following is a synopsis of the plan as embodied in the report: 1st. "The Sunday school interest may be increased by a more thorough organization of the schools in the district, and by organizing at such places as where 10 persons can be gotten together. Further, that Brother Lowrey be employed at such places as he is most needed, and that the pastor get in touch with the modern method of Sunday school work, and work to the finish." The plan for getting the collections: "Begin early and use Church Conference, missionary committees, the Laymen's Movement," etc. "Employ and pay expenses of Brother Williams, District Lay Leader," and lastly, "we desire that the presiding elder take charge of the evangelistic campaign, employing such men as he shall see fit." The preaching was done by Drs. C. W. Carter, and F. N. Parker, and it is needless to say it was the very best. The meeting passed a resolution of thanks for the able services rendered by these highly esteemed brethren. A resolution of thanks to the pastor and good people of Bunkie for cordial and delightful entertainment while among them, was adopted, and spread upon our minutes.

MANSFIELD COLLEGE.

Dear Dr. Meek: Kindly allow me space in the Advocate to say a few words to the ministers and laymen of the Louisiana Conference. I want to include with these every Methodist within the bounds of the Conference.

The Mansfield Female College is doing fairly well. We have enrolled a few new girls since Christmas, but we need more and must have them. It is my desire that the brethren invite me to their churches that I may help them bring the school vitally before the people.

Brethren, this school belongs to you, to the Methodists of Louisiana, and it should be our great pride to support it and make it a power for good. Not only will it increase and strengthen Methodism in the State, but it will be a great power in spreading the gospel of our Lord and Master on earth. Let me urge that all the ministers and laymen send me the names of girls who expect to go to school. It should be a pleasure to you to direct them to Mansfield. The religious influence here is first class, the discipline wholesome and constructive, and the building and grounds are homelike, and the girls are always given the greatest care and attention.

How much the girls need religious training! The public schools are leaving out this most important part of their education. It is not my purpose to discount their work, for they are rendering a great service to millions of boys and girls. The Bible has been cast out of them and the boys and girls no longer hear it read there, nor is prayer allowed to be made for fear some one will be offended. How few of the young people are familiar with the truths of the Bible? Here the Bible is read and taught, and prayer is made, and the truths of the Book of books are instilled in the hearts of the girls that their education may be threefold.

Our course of study is modern and up to date, and we have a strong and efficient faculty. The work which is being done in the literary department is as good as can be found in any school. Our music department is doing first class work, the teachers are as proficient and up-to-date as can be found anywhere in this line. In this department instruction in piano, violin, and voice is given. Our art department is in charge of a teacher of first-class standing and reputation.

Students graduating from here are given a first grade certificate without an examination (except in the theory and art of teaching), which entitles them to teach anywhere in the State. We are putting in a normal department equal to any in the State, and a diploma from this department will rank with the diplomas from the best normal schools of the South. We want the Methodists of the State to know these things. Here the girls receive the moral and religious training, as well as the intellectual and physical. We have every thing you need, and besides it is our own Church school.

Our buildings and grounds are in first class condition. Drs. Dowling and Porter, after inspecting them carefully, said in their report that the sanitary conditions of the college were in as good a condition as could be made. We keep them in this condition every day.

Send us your girls. They shall have the best religiously, mentally, and physically. We are able to give them the best in these lines.

With best wishes, I am sincerely yours,
A. B. PETERS, President

TO OUR METHODIST PEOPLE IN LOUISIANA.

I have yet my first appeal to make to the good Methodist people of Louisiana and receive no response. I hope that at this time I may have the attention and the helpful sympathy of our people.

Following the good work and liberal support accorded our Orphanage last year, we came to this year with sincere gratitude and faith in God. We believed that our people would continue their support and that we would have no trouble securing ample funds to operate our Home on. We have paid the interest on our debt of $7,000 until Dec. 1st, and for the time being need only money enough to operate with. We have therefore felt that the pressure for money would not be so heavy as heretofore. But we paid out all the surplus money we could possibly spare on the debt, and have absolutely nothing to feed and care for the fifty homeless children we have in our Orphanage except what comes to us through those who are interested in our work. We have no endowment. We are dependent on the voluntary contributions of our people for support. So whenever these voluntary contributions cease to come in we are compelled to suffer in consequence. We must have money to pay our monthly grocery bills, the salaries of our helpers, and the sundry current expenses that we are constantly having to meet in the operation of our Home.

Let me impress you, again, with the fact that this is your Orphanage. It belongs to the Methodist people. We want to operate it in a creditable way for this great people. We are eager to reach and help all the needy children that may come under the influence of Methodist people. We long to bring relief to every suffering child in our land. But we can do none of these things unless our people supply us, and keep us supplied, with the means wherewith to operate. This is our own work. It is caring for the destitute, the neglected, the homeless children of our own State and Conference. These children are the children of your neighbors, they belong to you—and to God. They are not the children in some foreign land crying for the gospel; they are not the youth of our own land, able-bodied and strong, asking you to help them to obtain an education; but they are helpless, defenseless children pleading for a home, a place to be protected, fed and clothed, to be given the gospel, to be educated, to be equipped for life. They are our own children begging for bread.

The true father and mother are not going to allow the children of their own home to suffer for the actual necessities of life in order that they may give to some other cause, however worthy, that which should bring bread and comfort to their own. Nor do we believe the Methodist people in Louisiana will permit their Orphanage, and the children in it, to suffer when they are in need, whatever else may appeal to them for aid.

We are now in actual need. Our treasury is almost empty, and we have the fast accumulating bills coming due. We appeal to our people for help, and feel confident that we will have the liberal support of all our people. Let the preachers, Sunday school superintendents and others who are interested in our cause do all they can for us at this time so we may not be pressed for the funds we need to meet our running expenses.

Please send all contributions to

A VALUABLE BOOK.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE, consisting of five Sermons on the Office of the Holy Spirit, by the Rev. W. G. Harbin.

Rev. M. M. Black, one of the strongest preachers of the Mississippi Conference, says:

"MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE" is one of the most helpful and stimulating books on the devotional line that I have read in many a day, and is worthy of a wide circulation among both preachers and laymen. The vital theme treated of in this meritorious little volume, not, however, in a controversial, or theological, but in a practical way, is the work of the Holy Spirit, whose divine office and mission are, alas, too often lost sight of, or minimized in this day of multiplied ecclesiastical machinery and dependence upon organized effort.

"I have seen some larger and far more pretentious volumes on the doctrine of the Holy Spirit that are not half so illuminating and desirable as this booklet, which is a gem of its kind."

"The earnest reading of this little book will in many cases mark an epoch in the life of him who reads it."

BISHOP MCCOY IN MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Brother Meek: Bishop McCoy has been in Mississippi confirming the Churches. First he was at Tupelo, where the District Stewards and Lay Leaders of the Aberdeen and Corinth Districts met for business and general consultation on important subjects. Members of the North Mississippi Conference Sunday School Board were also on hand and held a meeting. It was something out of the ordinary for officials of two districts, including two presiding elders, to meet in the same town. In this instance it was altogether convenient, and the good people of Tupelo were willing to entertain the brethren. When the pastor, Rev. W. L. Duren, met about a dozen of us, with book in hand, I was reminded of an Annual Conference. The meeting was largely attended, and the two days were spent pleasantly and profitably to all concerned.

The meeting was opened Wednesday evening with a sermon by Bishop McCoy. He preached also Thursday morning. Both sermons were plain and practical, and on timely topics. They were of a heart-searching nature, and delivered with great earnestness. The Bishop is a strong man, has much "common sense" and knows how to use it to good advantage. He is also personally attractive, and "the people hear him gladly."

From Tupelo the Bishop ran down to Shannon and spent a day and night at the parsonage. He is "a son of the parsonage," and knows how to adapt himself to parsonage life. The good wife is accustomed to common preachers, some of whom are more critical than sensible dignitaries, but she shrinks at the idea of entertaining "the Bishop." When Bishop McCoy comes again he will be doubly welcome. She did not say that in just those words, but I know.

Never before had the feel of a Bishop pressed the dust of Shannon. Possibly Bishop Paine, more than a generation ago, in going West from Aberdeen, passed this way, but he did not stop, for there was no Shannon here. Naturally, the Methodists hereabout, and a few others, who had never seen or heard a Bishop, looked forward with great pleasure, and hoped for favorable weather and a good congregation. All signs were promising, but just a little while before preaching, a big cloud came up, and there was lightning and thunder, and a great noise. Notwithstanding, the house was nearly full of eager hearers. No preacher hereabout could have mustered a corporal's guard. The sermon that followed was by far the best of the three that I had the privilege of hearing. It will be remembered and talked about for a long time. Shannon is a small community of intelligent and refined citizens. They know what good preaching is and appreciate it, and they said, "Bishop McCoy preached a good sermon." The writer adds his testimony to the same effect. Our people were delighted and edified. His presence in our home was a benediction.

From Shannon the Bishop went to Booneville, where, we doubt not, he imparted to the saints some spiritual benefit. Blessings on his head and heart!

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

BOARD OF MISSIONS, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren and Fellow-Workers: I have been trying to get through with the matter of organizing and projecting the work of the Board of Missions for the Conference year, so that I might give some thought to an effort for the quickening of the missionary conscience. My judgment is, that so long as we are content to project our missionary enterprise upon the basis of the money demands of the hour, our policy must be an eternal succession of expedients. We can never hope to grasp the missionary situation, to say nothing of a realization of the slogan of this generation, until questions of expediency shall be as mere ripples upon the surface of our world-wide policy. To accomplish this revolution of missionary activity will be no easy task.

First of all, I think, it may carry some of us back to our spiritual birth-hour for a re-christening of our vision of human redemption. To some of us redemption is essentially and exclusively personal, and we have narrowed the policy of the Jews in that we are not even willing to seek to make a proselyte. But for everyone with an exclusively personal conception of the movement, there are a thousand with a universal conception. The work of eliminating these defective conceptions, of bringing together in one thing a universal faith and a universal statement, is generally, I think, a radical problem. To solve this will require more than appeals to church order, to the universal impulse of men, or to the verities of common sense. It will take a baptism of the Holy Spirit.

But there is another phase of the work more apart of approach than the first. It is the matter of the dissemination of truth and ethical standards in common. Missionary work bearing the stamp, not only of a universal of grace, but of a Christian conscience, is to come a definite Christian commitment.

PARKER MEMORIAL CHURCH, OF NEW ORLEANS.

Which is now nearing completion, and will be formally opened by Bishop W. B. Murrah on Easter Sunday, April 16, 1911.

This congregation began as a mission Sunday school, which was organized by Rev. J. D. Parker in 1876. It was organized into a Methodist Church by Dr. F. S. Barker in 1885, who served it as pastor in connection with Carrollton Avenue. Since that time the church has had the following pastors: 1888, C. M. Lyon; 1889, F. N. Parker; 1892, R. H. Wynn; 1895, H. H. Ahrens; 1898, P. H. Fontaine; 1899, C. D. Atkinson; 1903, K. W. Dodson; 1906, S. J. Parish and H. T. Carley; 1907, C. D. Atkinson. The agitation in behalf of a new building was begun in 1903 while Rev. C. D. Atkinson was in charge, and the change of location was made from Peter's to Nashville Avenue. The Sunday school room in which the congregation worshiped for several years was built during the incumbency of Rev. K. W. Dodson. The present new structure is commodious in size, modern in its appointments, and has admirable facilities for work. Rev. C. D. Atkinson and his efficient building committee deserve much credit for the pluck and energy with which they have carried forward this enterprise in the face of many difficulties. The next session of the Louisiana Conference will be held in this church.

an imperfect understanding of the meaning of Christ, and if there is a lack of missionary enthusiasm, we need to turn first of all to missionary annals for the means to generate enthusiasm, and for the inspiration to examine the foundations of our faith anew. In the forefront of such a task the preacher, the recognized leader of the legions of righteousness, must take his place. Through the preacher the official members shall be reached, and through these working together a whole charge shall be leavened. Surely no preacher with this understanding of his own importance in this work can fail to do his best.

First among the agencies for bringing about the spread of missionary information, is The Voice. No Methodist leader can afford to miss that. But if we are going to do the most at this task, a larger furnishing is necessary. We must have a larger survey of missionary work and of missionary victory. To this end I have made arrangements on behalf of the Board, whereby every preacher and layman can get the best missionary periodical published at a price he can afford to pay. The Funk and Wagnalls Company have made an "Introductory" offer of $1.50 for a year's subscription to The Missionary Review of the World, provided the subscription is sent through me. From the Corinth and Aberdeen districts I have already received twenty-six subscriptions, and I hope to place it in the home of every preacher and leader of the North Mississippi Conference. If the preachers will join with me in pushing this offer, we will get more and better missionary information before our people than they have had before, and we will do something toward relieving a situation that has been a source of perpetual trouble in our missionary work of the past. Fraternally,

WM. L. DUREN,
Treas. Board of Missions.

REV. W. M. FOSTER DEAD.

Rev. W. M. Foster, a native of Mississippi (Chickasaw County), died the morning of February 1, 1911, and was laid to rest Sunday afternoon, the 5th, at Pleasant Ridge Cemetery. Rev. C. B. Garrett, presiding elder of the Tyler District, Texas Conference, and the writer conducting the funeral service. Brother Foster spent the most of his career in Mississippi, but late in life moved to Texas. After coming here he entered the ministry as a evangelist and served eleven years in that capacity. He was a good man and did excellent work. All his neighbors and friends loved him, and the pastor will miss him very much. He leaves a wife and several children, in whom their love is lived a Christian life, and died in the faith. We'll meet again some day.

Concerning Missions.

The annual session of the Woman's Missionary Council will convene in St. John's Church, St. Louis, Mo., April 19. All Conference Societies are urged to hold their session after the Council Meeting, in order that any new plans adopted there may be placed before the auxiliaries. While making a plan for united societies, it has been decided to leave this union at present to the wish of the majority in both organizations.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society will be held in Monroe, La., May 4 to 7 inclusive.

A full attendance is earnestly requested. One or more of the general officers will be present, and important plans will be discussed, looking to the union of the two societies in the Conference. Will not each auxiliary remember to make a special effort to raise an extra free-will gift for our school and mission work? There is an urgent call that a voluntary pledge be made by each auxiliary and the same reported to the Conference Corresponding Secretary, as a basis of appropriations by the Council for the coming year.

MRS. E. R. KENNEDY,
President.

HOME MISSION SOCIETY, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MRS. CHAS. McQUEEN,

DEDICATION AT MINDEN, LA.

Dear Dr. Meek: Please announce for me through the Advocate that our new church in Minden will be dedicated on Feb. 19, 1911, by Bishop W. B. Murrah, of Jackson, Miss.

This church was built under the pastorate of Rev. J. J. Martin, who at First Church, Baton Rouge. The total indebtedness of $1,000 was paid last year under his pastorate.

A special invitation has been sent to all the former pastors to be present on their vacation, and I would like to include you in the list of those especially invited. I think you would find Minden the most desirable Methodist community in Louisiana. In fact, it is one of the few towns in the State where Methodism is predominant. Thanking you for your kind note, I remain, very truly yours,

E. E. WEAVER.

The Home Circle

THE FIRST CANDLESTICK.

The first candlestick was a boy. He sat in the corner of a Scotch kitchen holding a piece of fir in his hands, from time to time cutting and trimming to make it burn brightly.

The first candlestick was a length of wood cut off a kind of fir tree, which is found embedded in the peat. This kind of candle is still used in some parts of Scotland.

It usually fell to the lot of the "herd-laddies" to act the part of candlestick, but should a beggar ask for a night's lodging, he was expected to relieve the "herd-laddie" of his duty. A candlestick is still called in Aberdeenshire a "pulp man," or "poor man."—The Child's Hour.

THE LITTLE LOAF.

Many years ago there was a great famine in Germany, and the poor people suffered from hunger. A rich man who loved children sent for twenty of them and said to them: "In this basket there is a loaf of bread for each of you. Take it and come back again every day till the famine is over. I will give you a loaf each day."

The children were very hungry. They seized the basket and struggled to get at the largest loaf. They even forgot to thank the man who had been kind to them. After a few minutes of quarreling and snatching for bread, every one ran away with his loaf except one little girl, named Gretchen. She stood there alone at a little distance from the gentleman. Then, smiling, she took up the last loaf, the smallest of all, and thanked him with all her heart.

Next day the children came again, and they behaved as badly as ever. Gretchen, who would not push with the rest, received only a tiny loaf scarcely half the size of the others. But, when she came home, and her mother began to cut the loaf, out dropped six shining coins of silver.

"O Gretchen!" exclaimed her mother, "this must be a mistake. The money does not belong to us. Run as quick as you can and take it back to the gentleman."

So Gretchen carried it back; but, when she gave the gentleman her mother's message, he said: "No, no, it was not a mistake. I had the silver baked into the smallest loaf in order to reward you. Remember that the person who is contented to have a small loaf rather than quarrel for a larger one will find blessings that are better than money baked in bread."—Adapted from "Cowdery's Moral Lessons" by Ella Lyman Cabot, in "Ethics for Children."

DO-AS-YOU-PLEASE DAY.

"If I could have my wish," Jack was saying as Mrs. Porter came out on the porch, "I'd wish that I could do as I pleased all one day—just have a good time. I wouldn't wish for a doll with real hair or a toy piano," and he looked at the girls as if to say their wishes were very foolish. It was a rainy day, and the children were playing quiet games after getting tired of their toys and dolls.

"That would be nice," agreed Emily. "Mamma, we are playing the wishing game. Cousin Florence wants a toy piano and I wished for a doll with real hair. What is your wish?"

"I'll think about it and tell you later," said Mrs. Porter, threading her needle. "You go on with your game while I think."

"I only have one wish to-day," went on Jack. "If I could do as I pleased a whole day, I'd be perfectly happy. It's always, 'Jack, don't,' and 'You mustn't do that, Jack,' from morning till night."

"Well, it seems to me it wouldn't be so very hard to manage a do-as-you-please day," said Mrs. Porter. "Of course, it would depend upon whether you wanted to get into mischief or not. I think to-morrow you may all try doing as you please. If you promise not to do things that will injure you or anyone else."

The children were all excited and promised very readily to keep out of mischief. Then they began to plan what they would do the next day, and the rainy afternoon passed very quickly.

"I shall stay in bed till 'way late," said Emily, "and then get up to play the rest of the day. I won't have to do a single thing all day, will I mamma?"

"Nothing but the things you want to do."

"And I shall wear my best dress and my white shoes," said Florence. "I think I'll take my new doll parrot and go walking, or maybe play with Geraldine Mignonette, where folks can see me. I don't like to wear my best dresses. I like to wear them all the time."

"Push! Push! Push! I'm going to have some fun!" cried Jack. "I'm going to have a lot of fun!"

The next day Emily stayed in bed till ten o'clock, but Jack and Florence were down early. Jack ate his breakfast without washing his hands or face, and then ran over to play with his chess. Fred by the river. Florence came down early, dressed in her best, and went to her room, but she had not been long before she was called out by a knock. She opened the door and found a man in a suit standing in the doorway. "What do you want?" she asked.

"Auntie, did you think it was going to rain?" asked Florence, coming home wet and bedraggled an hour later. "Why didn't you tell me?"

"But, my dear, the other day when I told you it was going to rain you cried and pouted, and, besides, this is do-as-you-please day, you know."

Jack came in tired and warm and dirty after a very happy morning; but when he saw Aunt Molly at the table in her white dress, he said he would eat in the kitchen rather than wash his hands. He left his dinner for a moment, and the cat upset his ice-cream, so that he thought he had better go to the table the next time. Emily fared better than any of the rest, for she had a long, happy day with her dolls and her books and her little friend from next door, but she was glad when evening came.

"Well, how did you all like it? Shall we try it again?" asked Mrs. Porter as they gathered about her chair in the twilight.

"I don't want to," said Jack quickly. "It's no fun doing as you please."

"I don't want to try it again," said Emily. "I had a good time to-day, but I'm sorry I didn't help mamma. It's all right in the daytime, but when evening comes and mamma is very tired, I'm sorry I didn't do a thing but please myself. Don't let us do it again, mamma."

"I don't want to do as I please either," said Florence. "I spoiled my parasol and my new dress, and Geraldine Mignonette looks like a fright. I'm not going to pout after this when auntie wants me to stay at home."

"Well, we won't try it to-morrow," said Mrs. Porter; "but the next time you are naughty and must be punished we might try another do-as-you-please day."

That was last summer, but none of the children have ever asked for another whole day to please themselves. Of course, they often want their own way in many things; but when somebody says, "Do as you please," there is a general laugh; and everybody gets straightened out in a laugh.—Hilda Richmond, in Christian Intelligencer.

A NOTE FROM PORT GIBSON.

"Off with the old and on with the new," is more often in the experience of the Methodist ministry than any other class of men. So it has proven with this writer. There was much connected with the last pastorate to endear the flock to the shepherd. Truer, more sympathetic people no pastor ever had the pleasure to serve, and kinder neighbors and friends are not to be found than those at Moss Point. He who serves that people may count himself happy indeed. No schism, no carping, no unkind rivalries—such associations are a delight. Our year in their midst will ever be as an oasis, a green spot, in the years to come. Our ministry began at this place on January 1st and was ushered in by the descending of rain and the coming of floods—such as has not been in many days. Of course, this was an off-day. Followed by an unprecedented spell of fine weather, the congregations have kept pace with the sunshine and the greeting has been hearty. Our reception has been continuous; each day has reminded us of our sincere welcome (though this pastor has lost his identity because of the renewed friendships of the mistress of the parsonage—I am her husband).

Under the superintendency of Brother H. H. Crisler, assisted by a corps of the strongest men in the Church, the Sunday school measures up to the best. While the school at the college, consisting of more than eighty young ladies, is technically under his superintendency, he has a thoroughly furnished assistant in the person of Mrs. Walker, one of the faculty of the institution, who reports eight classes, well officered and doing a fine work among the student body. By special invitation last Sunday we took part in a unique service, when more than forty of the young ladies received certificates of excellency in the department of the "Loyal Soldiers of the Sunday School Army." These certificates show merit ranging to nearly one hundred per cent on attendance, perfect lessons and offerings. On the last a penny counts as large as if it were a greater amount. The securing of four of these certificates entitles the holder to a diploma. Brother Hawkins has the profound respect of the community and their heart sympathy in the most excellent work he is doing.

With the college girls in their section and a considerable representation of Chamberlain-Hunt on the other side, there is fine opportunity for the pastor to recall his youthful days and study the needs of the hapless southern youth to which he now turns. In such associations and with such cooperation, you forget that he has ever made that famous declaration which has given him quite as much celebrity as his knowledge of the human eye and the medical art.

A stroll through the cemetery reminds us that there is much of historic interest, and old and religious, as well as the very best of the modern world.

It is quite as important to know how to commend as how to criticize. A word of commendation in season is often very helpful; so also is a word of criticism if offered in the right spirit. If there is no friendly word of warning, through carelessness or inattention or ignorance, our faults and imperfections grow upon us or deepen. He who warns us in time, if done in the right way, becomes our friend even though he be an enemy.—Methodist Recorder.

SOME HISTORICAL FACTS.

From the Western Christian Advocate of January 25 we take the following:

Bishop Thomas B. Neely writes us: "I have read your article in the Western Christian Advocate on 'The Status of Methodist Unity.' I quite agree with you when you say: 'The union desired and even hoped for by our Bishops and others more than forty years ago is still in the future; and who knows how far away?' When you say: 'But the facts, principles, and convictions which moved the Methodist preachers in 1844, wise and good men, to agree to the division of the Church they loved, and moved the equally good laymen to acquiesce in the division,' there may be danger of your being misunderstood. As a matter of fact, neither the ministry nor membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church agreed to a division, and the General Conference of 1844 did not divide the Methodist Episcopal Church. The truth is the Southern Conferences withdrew. Some of the Southern brethren used a stronger word."

This statement from the pen of Bishop Neely will occasion little surprise among Southern Methodists. They have become so accustomed to his exhibitions of partisanship that they expect a biased and sectional view whenever he speaks or writes concerning either their past history or present affairs. Justice at his hands they do not hope for, and they have learned long since that he does not reflect the sentiment of the millions of broad-minded men and women in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Indeed, his position among the leaders of our sister denomination seems to be much like that of Senator Heyburn among the Republicans in the United States Senate—that of a lonely survivor of a generation that seemed to find peculiar pleasure in fighting over the issues and keeping alive the bitter memories of an unhappy era of strife.

But what of the correctness of Bishop Neely's statements? Is it true that the General Conference of 1844 did not divide the Methodist Episcopal Church? We frankly admit that it did not determine absolutely that there should be a division; and that the movement to separate the Southern from the Northern Conferences was not fully consummated by that historic body. But it is a fact, clear and undeniable, that the General Conference of 1844 recognized the division of American Methodism as a moral certainty and sanctioned it to the extent of adopting by an overwhelming majority a specific plan of separation. That plan referred to the new organization as the "Church, South," prescribed the method by which the division was to be effected, obligated each section to refrain from an invasion of the territory of the other, and formulated a course of procedure for the settlement of common property interests. No blame attaches to Southern Methodists because after the adjournment of the General Conference they took steps to make the plan of separation agreed upon operative. It devolved upon them to do so, because they were in the minority. The organization, as it then existed, was controlled by their brethren of the North, who had no occasion to do anything more until the Southern contingent had taken the initiative, which they were expected to do under the terms of the General Conference enactment.

The truth is, the division of American Methodism at this critical time was inevitable, and as Bishop Hoss said in his recent admirable address on the subject, was evidently "providential." Nothing else could have preserved the Church in vigor and prosperity in the two sections. The delegates from the North could not have surrendered the principles for which they contended and have faced the people in the States from which they came. And as Dr. Stephen Olin, who Dr. Buckley says was the one man in the General Conference of 1844 who was not a full compromiser and was a champion of all sorts of the subject, said in his own address when the question of separation was under discussion: "With regard to the division of the Church, if they concede what the Northern brethren wish, if they concede that Southern churches be separated with holding their ministers, they must as well go to the Rocky Mountains as to their own native hills. The people would not bear it. It is a historical fact, which cannot be successfully controverted, that the division of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as the distinguished editor of the New York Christian Advocate calls it in his history of Methodism, took place with the consent of, and according to a plan laid down by, the General Conference of 1844, in which the Northern delegates had a large majority."

But again Bishop Neely says: "Neither the ministry nor membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church agreed to a division. Through their accredited representatives in the General Conference they did agree to it, and the Supreme Court of the United States held that under the constitution and laws of the Church, as set forth in the Discipline, they were legally bound by it. The Bishop perhaps has reference to the effort afterwards made by his denomination to repudiate the solemn compact which their delegates entered into with those from the South, but in which they signally failed because their proceedings were revolutionary and without constitutional warrant. And it has always been amazing to us that any Northern Methodist should desire to open and parade that chapter of his Church's history. If our denomination had written it, we feel sure that it would be our wish to keep it forever closed. For, certainly it is not creditable to a body of Christians that they should have sought to violate an agreement made in a legal and proper manner with their brethren, and to retain in their possession property to which they had no equitable and moral right, and which they relinquished only when forced to do so, by the mandate of the highest Court in the land."

We write this in no spirit of bitterness. Our fathers were acting at a time when the tides of passion and prejudice were running high. Many extreme things were said and done. As Bishop McTear states, "Neither side was without fault." It has always been to us a source of gratification and pride that the members of the General Conference of 1844, both of the North and South, bore themselves so admirably throughout the heated struggle that took place upon the floor of that great gathering. And if those who afterwards rushed into the fray and became participants in the controversy did not measure up to the high standard of fairness and justice set by these majestic men, we can well afford to let the irritating circumstances by which they were surrounded soften our judgment of their conduct. But that Southern Methodists should be discredited and censured more than others for the course they pursued, is an allegation which we do not for one moment admit, and which the facts of history will not sustain.

We are not advocating the union of the Methodisms of the United States. We sincerely doubt whether such a union would result in a single advantage that federation, properly carried out, would not secure equally well. But we should like to see the spirit of fraternity and goodwill among the several Methodist bodies beneath the American flag continue to grow. It has been nearly sixty-seven years since Episcopal Methodism was rent in twain and nearly a half century since the close of the Civil War, but we are not yet measuring up to the terms of comity specified in the original plan of separation, which provided that "neither denomination should organize societies within the geographical limits of the other. We are persuaded, however, that there are better days ahead. Sectarianism everywhere is abating. The followers of Christ of every name are drawing closer together. And we hope that the day is not distant when our Methodisms will at least co-operate sufficiently to do away with hurtful competition, and stop the wastage of resources urgently needed to extend the Master's kingdom elsewhere.

WISE LEGISLATION.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has provided in its Book of Discipline for organizing its Sunday schools into temperance societies with a view to imparting proper instruction concerning the results of the use of intoxicants and narcotics, and pledging its members, as far as possible, to total abstinence from all harmful drugs and drinks. As a rule, we are disposed to oppose additional organizations in the Church, but we think this movement is needed and calculated to exert a far-reaching influence for good. Certainly the best way to safeguard the race from the frightful evils of intemperance is to begin with the children, and by wholesome teaching and training to steel them against the temptations and dangers that will come later in life. Nor is a mere occasional Sunday school temperance lesson adequate to accomplish this important work. Theoretical instruction should be clinched and re-enforced by handing our young people together in such a manner as to commit them to the practice of what is taught, and to make them feel that temperance is a strength and character that is invaluable.

A recent number of the New York Christian Advocate contains that Bishop McIntyre, President of the board of managers of the Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is himself an example of the most results of temperance. "He was married when quite a small boy to take the pledge. Afterwards, when a brick layer's apprentice he was told to drink, but could not be prevailed upon to do so. This he called his first great victory." A few months, formed in the opening years of life to often a source of defeat and all the strife and stress of work after career. The strength of youthful purpose has been abundantly proven in the history of many distinguished men. The task of committing the children of the nation to the cause of temperance was undertaken some years ago by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, but now they do not seem to be so active in this field of service. As we see it, here is an open door which all of the Christian denominations would do well to enter. If we can protect our young people from this great destroyer that lies in wait, and enlist them enthusiastically in the glorious army of temperance reform, the battle against the licensed liquor traffic will be won at no distant day.

A MORE IMPORTANT WORK SUGGESTED.

It appears from the account of its proceedings published in the secular papers that the Georgia Mothers' Congress recently in session at Atlanta, Ga., devoted considerable time to the discussion of the equipment of Sunday school teachers. Mrs. Frederick Schoff, President of the National Mothers' Congress, who was in attendance is reported to have declared that "too many of the teachers are frivolous, untrained girls, who know little of children and how they should be taught;" and other speakers are said to have contended that the teachers should be "trained in psychology and children culture."

It is natural and proper that parents should be concerned as to the character of instruction given their children in the Sabbath schools of the country; but we confess that this scene of a body of mothers insisting that Sunday school teachers, who serve in that capacity as a labor of love, should be given lessons in child culture before they are allowed to occupy such a position, is to us not altogether a pleasing one. Why not have the mothers to take the suggested course in psychology and child training? Is it not the divine plan that the chief work of moral and religious instruction shall be done in the home? Can it be that the reason these ladies are advocating this course of study for teachers is that they would be more largely relieved of the binding obligation to rear their little ones "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord?" Alas! in too many instances about all the religious teaching children receive is during the hour they spend weekly in the Sunday school. If our sisters really desire to help the youth of the land and improve moral conditions throughout the country, let them address themselves to the task of making the home teaching and training of the nation what it ought to be. Napoleon on one occasion is reported to have said, "The need of France is mothers." It does not require the insight of the "Man of Destiny" to see that the need of America is Christian mothers.

OPPOSED TO SEPARATION.

The editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate of this city, who is an influential leader among the colored people of the Methodist Episcopal Church, takes the position, in a late editorial that the negroes of that denomination are opposed to being set off as part of a distinct organization, embracing all of the colored Methodists of the United States. He calls attention to the fact that the Texas Conference of his people, recently in session, unanimously adopted a resolution declaring themselves unalterably opposed to such a scheme and pledging their "fidelity and devotion to the Mother Church." He also quotes the following from the Northwestern Christian Advocate, of which Dr. Charles M. Stuart is the able editor: "Such a step, if taken at all, when taken must be upon the initiative of the negro, and in the full persuasion that the best interests of that race will be conserved by such a step." The editor of the Southwestern then adds: "The negro has no reason for taking such an initiative and he will not do so." From this it would seem that our brother in black may not be so easily managed in effecting the unification of American Methodism, as some of the more ardent advocates of that movement appear to think.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Southern Scribe, an excellent weekly published in this city, contained last week a good picture and an interesting sketch of Rev. A. G. Shankie, the popular pastor of Rayne Memorial Church. We congratulate the Rev. and Mrs. W. L. Duren, of Texas, Miss. upon the addition of a new and better building in the latter locality.

At the same time, Rev. H. H. Hines is the pastor of the church in the latter locality.

Rev. H. H. Hines, pastor of the church in the latter locality, is the pastor of the church in the latter locality.

We were pleased to receive on Wednesday of last week a letter from Mr. P. H. Hill, formerly of Texas City, and now of Vancouver, B. C., the apostle of the work of the church in the latter locality.

Rev. J. M. Mason, has made a good beginning on the Oak Ridge charge. He says he has a fine people to serve, which is no news to those who are acquainted with that excellent community.

We are glad to hear that the work is prospering on the Lorman charge. There are signs of a spiritual awakening, and the pastor, Rev. J. E. Samuels, is confidently expecting this to be a successful year for the church.

Rev. H. W. Ledbetter speaks in the highest terms of the work of the Woman's Home Mission Society of Colfax, La. The women of that wide-awake organization raised last year $235, and added much to the furnishings of the parsonage.

Rev. O. L. Savage, of Ruleville, Miss., serves a people who are concerned for the welfare of their pastor. The first Quarterly Conference advanced the salary to $1,500. Ruleville is one of the most delightful charges in the North Mississippi Conference.

We learn that Rev. W. N. Dodds, of the Baldwin charge, is delightfully situated, and is encouraged with the outlook for the year. He has a splendid people to serve. We pray that his ministry among them may be happy and successful.

We call special attention to a communication from Rev. R. W. Vaughan in this issue of the Advocate. Brother Vaughan is doing a great work as manager of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, and he needs the help of every Methodist in Louisiana.

We regret to learn that Rev. O. P. Armour, of the Kosciusko Circuit, has been hindered in his work by continued illness in his home, but rejoice to know that he expects soon to be able to render full service. He serves a most excellent people.

We regret to learn, from a personal letter, that Rev. J. W. McGee, the popular and efficient chaplain of the Mississippi State Penitentiary, has recently been quite ill. We pray that this good man may soon be restored to full health and vigor.

Rev. L. E. Wicht, of the Washington charge, is comfortably domiciled in a brand new parsonage. The old parsonage was destroyed by fire last November. The possession of a new one this soon is excellent evidence of the interest and energy of his people.

A pleasant caller at our office a few days since was the Rev. D. T. Sledge, who is doing missionary work at Wetmore and Goodpasture, in Colorado. Brother Sledge was reared at Duck Hill, Miss., and is on a visit to friends and relatives in that State and also in Louisiana.

Rev. L. B. Hankins, of the Mayhew and Artesia charge, has a delightful work. His people have increased their pastor's salary about $200, and the first Quarterly Conference was a delightful occasion. We congratulate both preacher and people. Brother Hankins has shown his appreciation of the Advocate by putting it in the homes of many of his people.

Rev. J. H. Felts states that the Aberdeen District is in the best condition that he has ever known it to be. The voluntary advances in salaries amount to nearly $1,000, and the revival spirit is beginning to spring up. We will let this stirring presiding elder report for himself in our next issue. Brother Felts must forgive us for anticipating him a little. We like so much to give out good news that it is difficult for us to refrain from doing so.

We thank the following brethren for substantial favors to the Advocate recently: H. Mellard, Logtown, Miss.; W. L. Broome, Lamar, Miss.; H. P. Lewis, Jr., Montrose, Miss.; F. A. Howell, Durant, Miss.; J. C. Long, Philadelphia, Miss.; B. F. M. Bullard, Cedar Bluff, Miss.; W. J. Dawson, Morton, Miss.; J. C. Price, Zwolle, La.; T. J. Durrett, Buena Vista, Miss.; D. W. Babb, Coldwater, Miss.; L. B. Hankins, Mayhew, Miss.; W. C. Lester, Webb, Miss.; T. G. Adair, Booneville, Miss.; W. J. Porter, Lanesville, La.; C. A. Northington, Bellefontaine, Miss.; G. W. Gordon, Valden, Miss.; R. O. Weir, Donaldsonville, La.

The Georgia State-wide Conference on Evangelism will be held at Wesley Memorial Church, Atlanta, March 3-12. The program is one of surpassing interest, and the attendance promises to be large. Among the speakers we note the names of Bishops Hoss, Kilgo, and Candler, Dr. W. F. McMurtry, Dr. W. N. Ainsworth, Dr. Charles D. Bulla, Dr. F. S. Parker, and Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Hamill. One fare ticket for the round trip may be had all over the South on March 5, 6 and 7, on account of the Southern Commercial Congress. The Georgia railroads will give one and a half extra miles in March through the State of Georgia and north to a special and better treatment.

In a personal note to the editor, Dr. George F. Sweeney states that the financial Conference Committee which has in hand the task of building a representative church at Washington, D. C., will meet in Atlanta on Tuesday, March 7.

Rev. W. J. Briggs delivered his famous lecture, "The Prince of Peace," to an overflowing audience at the Y. M. C. A. Hall of this city last Sunday afternoon. He also met with the New Orleans Council for the Men and Religious Forward Movement, a work in which he is greatly interested.

From Kentucky, La., Rev. Henry T. Young sends out an optimistic note. His work is progressing favorably, and he is pleased with the general outlook. He says that he recognizes the importance of having a church center in the homes of his people, and that it is his purpose to do his best to supply this urgent need.

In sending in a list of subscribers, for which he has our hearty thanks, Rev. H. I. Collins reports that he has been warmly welcomed at Cochrane, Miss., and that his parishioners are a big-hearted folk. Brother Collins is a tireless toiler, and we expect to have good tidings of things accomplished on his circuit before the year shall close.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., of Rayne, La., is having success in his present interesting field of labor. He particularly commends his Sunday school, which has a Home Department and is alive in every respect. Brother Doss has kindly favored us with eleven subscriptions to the Conference organ and a check to correspond.

We received a few days since from Rev. J. B. Randolph, of Como, Miss., a card bearing date of the 7th inst., conveying the good news of his recovery from his recent severe illness. He reports everything as moving on nicely in his delightful pastorate. The stewards have fixed his salary at $1,200, and assumed all responsibility for the other collections.

We are grateful to Rev. W. H. Mourger, of Hollandale, Miss., for some good work in behalf of the Advocate. He states that his charge is reasonably prosperous, and that everything is moving on smoothly. Brother Mourger is exceptionally well qualified for the work of the ministry, and the Church has a right to expect much of him in the years to come.

Rev. E. E. Langford is delighted with the reception which has been accorded him on the Pickens charge, and thinks the prospects point to a year of substantial progress. The flock which he serves is, indeed, a choice one, and it would be strange if he were not pleased with his present situation. We thank Brother Langford for a list of 16 subscribers to the Advocate.

In renewing her subscription, Mrs. P. E. Duncan, of West Point, Miss., writes in commendatory terms of the Advocate and says she finds it helpful in her religious life. Sister Duncan is the widow of the Rev. Perry Duncan, one of the truest and most faithful itinerants that ever wrought in North Mississippi, and whose memory will long be cherished in every charge that he served.

Rev. J. D. Boggs has completed his first round on the Jonesboro Circuit, Corinth District, and reports that he has a fine people and that the outlook is gratifying. We are grateful to him being mindful of the Advocate as he goes to and fro on his work. But for the fidelity of these faithful men who serve the rural charges, the Conference organ would have had to shut up shop long ago.

Rev. C. P. Moss reports that the church at Durant, Miss., promises well. He commends the work that Brother F. A. Howell, an honored layman of his charge, is doing to extend the circulation of the Advocate. We also desire to record our appreciation of the valuable service which Brother Howell is rendering the Conference organ, though it is nothing new for him to abound in usefulness.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney has lately had an interesting meeting at Macon, Miss., conducted by that prince of preachers, Dr. S. A. Steel. His account of it appears elsewhere in this issue. Brother Gladney is at present the only pastor in Macon, and in consequence finds his hands quite full. But he thrives on hard work, and is never happier than when freely spending his strength to extend the Master's cause.

Writing from Wilson, La., under date of the 11th inst., Rev. F. N. Sweeney says: "I received one of the biggest soundings Friday evening a preacher ever had. These Wilson folk do not do things by halves." Nothing delights a minister more than to know that his people appreciate him and are thoughtful of his needs. Brother Sweeney expects to hold a meeting soon in which he will have the assistance of Rev. D. E. Kelly, of Purvis, Miss.

A beautiful card from the Rev. and Mrs. Walter Campbell, of Schlater, Miss., which was received a few days since, announced the arrival in their parsonage home of Master Walter McNeill Campbell, Jr., weight nine pounds, on February 7. We extend congratulations, and pray that a favoring Providence may watch over the little one and bring him through the trials of childhood and youth to a useful and better position.

We are rejoiced to hear that Rev. J. A. Lewis, of Durant, Miss., has been elected to the position of pastor of the church in the latter locality. Rev. Lewis is a fine man, and we expect to have good tidings of things accomplished on his circuit before the year shall close.

Rev. A. M. Thomas, of Vicksburg, Miss., continues to show an active interest in his pastorate. He is looking after the interests of the Advocate. Much of Brother Thomas' ministerial life has been spent in the preceding capacity, and a more capable man in that important office we have never known. But evidently he still knows how to do the work of a pastor whose mission it is to influence the people to support all of the institutions of the Church.

Rev. J. J. Tucker, of Centenary College, in a last week's note to our office adds: "Our college is doing excellent work. We have a fine corps of instructors, an earnest student body, and the promise of larger growth. Centenary needs a central building commensurate with the possible patronage of our Conference. We are pleased to have this cheering message from this historic institution. The service which it is rendering to Louisiana Methodism is far-reaching and immeasurable."

We acknowledge the reception of a program of two Missionary Institutes prepared by Rev. E. E. Lewis, the energetic presiding elder of the Winona District. One of these meetings will be held at Kilmichael, March 3 and 4, and the other at Sandover, March 10. At the first, the preaching will be done by Rev. W. D. McCullough and Rev. J. A. Hall, and at the latter, by Rev. John Ritchie and Rev. W. M. Campbell. Brother Lewis makes an earnest appeal for a large attendance both upon the part of preachers and laymen.

We are informed that Canton Station and the name of its worthy pastor, Rev. C. F. Emery, were omitted from the list of the Mississippi Conference appointments which appeared in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and also from the one appearing in the Conference Journal. This is explained by the fact that the two lists were duplicates made by a public stenographer from the Bishop's original copy, and hence the same error occurred in both. It is needless to say that both Dr. Watkins, the Conference Secretary, and the editor regret this omission, which was purely accidental.

In ordering the continuance of the Advocate to his home at Jacksonville, Texas, Rev. R. A. Burroughs, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, adds the following interesting items about himself and his work: "We are doing well out here. I had 206 additions to the Church last year, and raised for all purposes $10,000. Since Conference the salary has been raised $300, and I have received 26 members. I am very much in love with the work of the pastorate, having been a presiding elder so long." Brother Burroughs' host of friends in Mississippi will be delighted to know that he is faring so well in the Lone Star State, and that the Lord is so abundantly blessing his labors.

PARSONAGE BURNED.

Dear Brother Meek: Our South Washington Street parsonage with all its furnishings was destroyed by fire to-day at 12 o'clock. Brother W. H. Saunders and family lost all their personal effects, including clothing, library, etc. The building was insured for one thousand dollars, much less than will be required to rebuild. There was no insurance on anything in the house, all of which is a total loss.

The good people of South Washington Street Church have worked heroically with meager resources and had just about finished paying for the parsonage. This little home represented much heroism and sacrifice by both people and pastor. Now, both have sustained a loss that each is unable to bear. There is scarcely a place in the whole Southern Methodist Church where a little help would count for more or would be more worthily bestowed. Surely this suggestion, of which Brother Saunders is utterly ignorant, will bring some substantial response. Yours faithfully,

CHAS. W. CRISLER,

Pastor Crawford Street Church.

Vicksburg, Miss., Feb. 13, 1911.

To-day is your day and mine—the only day we have; the day in which we play our part. What our part may signify in the great whole we may not understand; but we are here to play it, and now is our time. This we know—it is a part of acting, not of whining.—David Starr Jordan.

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over two hundred words in length will be published free of charge. All over two hundred words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around.

At his home, near Ridge, La., January 4, 1911, WM. ARCHIE HOFF-PAUIR, aged 25 years and 8 months. Just nine days before his death he was taken suddenly ill with pneumonia. All that kind hands and loving hearts could do was done. But on the ninth day he succumbed to that dreadful disease. Alas! a voice we loved so much is stilled, a place in the home is vacant that never can be filled, and our hearts are sad. But we believe that he, in whom we believe, doeth all things well. And we hope to meet our brother "beyond the sun-set's radiant glow," where parting and sad good-byes will be no more. His brother,

J. H. HOFFPAUIR.

JAMES MARLIN BENNETT.—In the parsonage on the Adams Circuit I found, when I first went there two years ago, that the young preacher and his pretty girl-wife were happy over a very wonderful babe. I saw him often. He seemed to me a really wonderful babe—quiet, content with himself, his little play-things, but constantly looking at me out of lustrous, inquiring eyes. So silent, intent, beautiful was that gazing that I humorously nick-named him "Inquirendo"—about to ask a question. As I loved the fine young preacher and his girl-wife, I specially loved their splendid baby boy. But he died—alas! alas! And we were so sorry. The young parents bore it all with true Christian courage. Here is the record: James Marlin Bennett, son of Rev. Jas. V. Bennett and wife, was born September 24, 1908, and died April 14, 1910. "Of such is the kingdom."

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

The subject of this sketch, Brother J. E. BAKER, was born in Claiborne Parish, November 30, 1856, and died in Homer, La., January 19, 1911. He was married to Miss Etta L. Patton, January 17, 1878. To them were born ten children, nine of whom are living. Bro. Baker joined the M. E. Church, South, in Arizona, La., when he was a boy, and lived a consistent Christian life to his death. Brother Baker was my life-long friend. We were boys together in school and grew to young manhood together. He was kind, affable, and full of mercy, and devoted to his family to that degree that no hardship, no difficulty, was too great for him to undertake for their welfare. While not always successful in his undertakings, yet he faced disappointment with a courage that few men possess. A good man has gone from us. We sympathize with his dear wife and children, commending them to the care of our heavenly Father, whom their loved one trusted.

J. B. WILLIAMS.

Entered into rest on December 25, 1910, Mr. A. R. STENSON, who soon would have been 76 years of age. He was a devoted Christian, true to his God, loyal to his Church and kind in his home. He lived and practiced what he believed to be right. He had not been well for some time. His every-day walk was evidence to his relations and friends that he was a fit subject to meet his Savior. How this dear one is missed no one can ever know, except those who have gone through a similar experience. But it draws us all nearer heaven to lose our loved ones, if we have faith in the precious one who said, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." He was a member of the Methodist Church, having joined the Church years ago. His membership was at Lebanon Church, in which neighborhood he had lived for a half century. He leaves six sons, three daughters and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. His dear companion and one daughter preceded him to the other shore. May the God of the living ever watch and care for the bereaved until they gather on the other shore. H. W. SCOTT.

To the memory of Mrs. J. E. BEAN- DER: Now the "silent voices" have called the soul of Grandma Beander for the last time. This earthly veil has been a burden upon her soul for many years, but she has borne her lot patiently, uncomplainingly, awaiting the day when she should be called home to her Master. The call has come and she has gone. Her life was a beautiful expression of piety, hope, love and Christian fellowship. Her faith was pure and trusting, looking always for the unseen hand to prepare the way for her efforts and guide her footsteps. In the providence of God her days were lengthened beyond the allotted time that she might point the way of life to many wandering souls. From her youth she was a devout Christian, trying to follow as best she could the footsteps of her Lord. Her early life was devoted to teaching, and she was always a lover of the young folks. She took a great interest in all their life, and in her feebleness enjoyed frequent visits from them. It was a familiar scene on Sunday afternoons to see the little girls carrying her bouquets of flowers, and of more value to her, the buoyancy and cheerfulness of youth. The ideal of service was kept ever before her, but her old Bible, worn and marked, tells the story of her life more eloquently than human pen can write. With her loved ones, whom she has left behind, we sympathize deeply, but bid them not mourn, for death was the great victory of her life, and she is now with the Father, to continue her supplications for them. Well might she say with St. Paul, "I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith."

J. J. BROOKS.

SARDIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Sardis District Conference will be held at Hernando, Miss., from May 9 to 12, inclusive. The first day will be in charge of the women of the district, who will consider their missionary work. Other announcements will be made later. W. M. YOUNG, February 7.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE JOURNAL.

The journal of the recent session of the Mississippi Conference was given to the post and express offices January 31, and should by this time be in the hands of the preachers.

Wherever practicable, the package was sent by express; but when this was thought to subject the preacher to serious inconvenience, it was sent by mail.

If, in any case, they should not be received, let inquiry be made at the nearest express office, and if this does not secure them, a card to me will be followed by a prompt effort to trace the missing package.

Tidings from the Field

Kosciusko Circuit:

I have been much hindered in my work by severe sickness in my home, my son, Bland, having been quite sick for three weeks with typhoid pneumonia, but he is convalescing now. Both my people and the people of this town have been very kind to us. We have received quite a lot of "pounding," the pantry being kept well filled all the while. We have re-furnished our parsonage, which gives us a comfortable home. Our first Quarterly Conference was held on the 6th instant. The salary was raised over last year and paid up to date. All in all, we are happy and are serving as good people as the world affords. I will ask the readers of the Advocate to pray for us, that we may have a great year.—O. P. Armour, P. C.

Booneville, Miss.:

I am glad to report Booneville Station alive and wide awake. I have been here now about two months and am more and more pleased with the situation. The church is well organized, and all departments are doing gratifying work. Adequate provision has been made for the support of the ministry; the "Home and Conference Mission" assessment has already been paid. The finances of the church are looked after in a business way by business men. It was our great pleasure to have Bishop McCoy preach for us last Sunday morning and night. He was greeted by large congregations, who were charmed with his discourses. I am sure the day will long be remembered and will tell on the future of our church.—S. A. Brown, P. C.

February 7.

Many, La.:

This is my third year on this, the Many charge, and it gives promise now of being the most successful of the three. On our return from Conference we received the customary pounding. We have had la grippe, but we are now at work. Our Sunday school is the best we ever saw in a small town. We use the graded courses of literature. We have Cradle Roll and Home Departments. Last Sunday we had 94 present, and this with a church membership of eighty-one. Our official board are fully alive to their duty and look well to the support of the preacher. Our Woman's Home Mission Society is a fine company of the really elect, and look well after the parsonage and church improvements. We will begin a campaign for subscribers to the Advocate in a short while. We are looking forward to a full report at Conference. We wish the Advocate great success.—B. H. Sheppard.

Fulton Circuit:

The undersigned was returned to this charge for another year. We hope and expect that this, the second year, may prove a much better year than the one just passed. In many respects this is a great people, as true and loyal as can be found anywhere—noble-hearted, kind and good. All homes extend such warm and hearty greetings to the pastor as make him feel glad. Indeed, we are entering into a covenant with our people as we go, to make to-day better than yesterday was; and to-morrow better than to-day. We catch glimpses of higher heights in the church and community life, and thus we want and expect to achieve more this year than last.

Pray for us that God may save our boys and girls, and give us Fulton Circuit for Christ. The first Quarterly Conference has passed and a great one it was. Our beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Felts, brought to us a soul-cheering message, as he always does. There was some raise in pastor's salary over last year. Conference having adjourned and dinner spread, all enjoyed to their satisfaction a good time eating of the good things that had been prepared by the people of Pleasant Grove community. Pleasant Grove never fails. I like so much to work for subscriptions to the New Orleans Advocate, for the paper goes into the homes of our people, giving them food for the soul, making life better and service sweeter. May God bless its readers, and long live its editor.—D. R. McDougal, P. C.

February 8, 1911.

Baker, La.:

We arrived in Baker the 28th of December, and were met at the train by kind friends and conveyed to the parsonage. The kind people had made preparations for our coming in a substantial way. The first Sunday after my arrival it rained so that I was unable to go to my appointment, which was several miles away. The next Sunday I went to Deerford and preached at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. I met with a warm reception. The next Sunday I preached at Blackwater at 11 a. m., and was greeted with a splendid congregation and a hearty welcome. I returned to Baker in the afternoon and preached at 7:30 p. m., to a very appreciative congregation. The next Saturday and Sunday our beloved presiding elder, Rev. C. C. Miller, came and held our first Quarterly Conference, which was very well attended. On account of not being well he only preached for us once, and it goes without saying that it was a fine sermon. I was here four years ago when Brother C. C. Miller was pastor. I came over to help him in a revival meeting. How time brings about a change! This circuit has been served by some of the best and strongest preachers in the Louisiana Conference. I trust that I may not cast a shadow over their influence for good. Mr. Editor, my highest aim in life is to do the will of God and become more like Jesus Christ. I will do all I can to make this the best year of my ministry; also I will work for the Advocate and its circulation. I have not bought a horse and buggy yet, and so I am somewhat handicapped in my work. I shall make a purchase in the near future. We are well pleased with our new home.—S. D. Howard, P. C.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

The Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, through its Executive and Finance Committee, has accepted the invitation of the Virginia Annual Conference to meet in the city of Richmond, Va., April 27-30.

Sunday, April 30, will be used by the Churches of the Virginia Conference, according to resolutions passed in Conference session, to increase the Bishop John C. Granbery Memorial Loan Fund, and the Churches of the entire connection are cordially invited to join their Virginia brethren in this effort to honor the memory of a saintly man who served the Church long and well, and whose interest in the work of Church Extension remained unabated until the close of his life.

COLUMBIA, LA.

You will kindly grant me an opportunity to say a word concerning my present field of labor. I find myself among as kind and appreciative people as I have seen anywhere during the twenty odd years I have tilled and toiled in Louisiana. The first round on the Columbia Circuit has just been completed, and I am delighted with the charge and hopeful of a good and happy year. Columbia is a historic town on the Ouachita River, at the foot of the hills where the great pine forests, rich and splendid, lie. A beautiful modern church has just been finished by the people, led by Brothers White and Reams, my predecessors. Our people here gave me a most delightful reception; larger full, and money for the pastor accompanied the smiles of welcome on my arrival, and again and again tokens of friendship and love are manifested. I would rather be a country preacher than a city elder or editor of any Conference paper. This, sir, is a sane and safe state of mind, and in perfect accord with the law of adaptability. I have, in connection with the church at Columbia (which has half my time), Clarks and Standard. To each of the last named places I go once a month. I was acquainted at Standard, having held a meeting there in November last, resulting in the reception of some of the best people in the town into our Church. I find Standard to be one of the best sawmill towns in the State. The superintendent, Mr. J. P. Collins, a member of the Baptist Church, is one of the finest gentlemen in the land—broad-gauged and generous to all, and especially to the people called Methodists. Ever since we have been there our preachers have been cared for by him, and it was by his and Dr. T. W. Harper's request the present pastor prophesies there. With these two gentlemen, wise and good, I am working for the moral and religious uplift of Standard. Brother Collins loves men, and leaves nothing undone to advance the moral and religious interests of the town. The company with which he is connected esteem him very highly, and would have difficulty in finding a man to take his place. Our Dr. Harper is the generous steward at Standard, and any preacher is safe with him to look to for counsel and support. Clarks is a great sawmill town. Our holdings there are greater far than I thought, until a canvass of the little city was made last week. We had a large congregation there last Sunday, and an organization of our forces was perfected. There is a bright future for us at Clarks, if we are wise in management and prayerful in spirit. The Columbia charge is one of the very best now in the State.—H. W. May.

Quick Relief From Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it
Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 234 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

PASS IT ON.

"Have you had a kindness shown?"

Pass it on.

It was not given to you alone,

Pass it on.

Let it travel through the years,

Let it wipe another's tears,

Till in heaven the deed appears,

Pass it on.

"Have you found the heavenly light?"

Pass it on.

Souls are groping in the night,

Daylight gone.

Lift your lighted lamp on high,

Be a star in some one's sky;

He may live who else would die;

Pass it on.

Topic for February 19. (Studies in Christian Experience). Making the World Acquainted With God. II Cor. iii, 2, 3; Eph. iii, 8-9. Hymns: 635, 654, 634.

The Bible is God's great Book to the world, but the world has closed this Book—they do not read the Bible; so Christ has sent "living" letters into the world, "to be known and read of all men." And the world is reading these letters; every Epworthian, every professed Christian is one of Christ's letters. What kind of letter are you?—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

The League is the place to teach Methodist history and doctrine. And by all means, this should be done. The story of Methodism reads like a romance, and there is much in it to charm youthful minds. Such lessons also enkindle a love for the Church and a commendable pride in what it has wrought. And this is one of the urgent needs of our people to-day. Let our pastors get into closer touch with their Leagues and plan for them such courses of study. A little effort in this direction will yield large returns.

There is much truth embodied in the sentiment of the song, "Take time to be holy." Activity is well, but to be active in the best sense and achieve the most, one needs a little time alone with his Bible and God. The Master required the early disciples to tarry at Jerusalem before they went out to battle for the world's redemption. Every Leaguer needs to form the habit of daily reading the Word and attending to his private devotions. Such a practice will make him strong, and immeasurably enrich his experience and life.

"We are saved to serve." There is an obligation upon every Christian to bring others to Christ. The greatest earthly joy next to that which comes from the consciousness of one's own salvation, is that which arises from bringing others into the kingdom. It is said that in some of the Korean churches an applicant for membership is asked, "What have you done to win other persons for the Lord?" This emphasizes the fact that every disciple is expected to be a worker. And if every professed Christian, young and old, would truly do his best, what an impetus would be given to the cause of Christianity! There must be active, tactful personal effort if the people about us are to be made "acquainted with God" as their Lord and Savior.

A dispatch from Natchez to the Times-Democrat states that Mr. Clifford R. Field, of that city, has been appointed President of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League.

LEAGUES IN THE COUNTRY.

Dear Brother Meek: We have two very active Leagues on the Buena Vista charge. Our League at Ebenezer has sent $20 to the Songdo school, and the one at Pleasant Grove has raised $50 to improve the church on the inside. These Leagues are both at country appointments. It is a mistaken idea that we cannot have Epworth Leagues out of the towns, for both of these are wide awake and doing a fine work.

T. J. DURRETT, P. C.
Buena Vista, Miss.

HOW THE INTEREST WAS REVIVED IN THE LEAGUE.

Dear Brother Meek: I send you a few lines concerning the Junior League of Seventh Avenue, Meridian. In 1906 and 1907 it was a live wire, especially spiritually; but there was a declension in 1908 and 1909 until the behavior was anything else but good at the services. So I decided, after serious thought and prayer, to try to do better things. Accordingly, I took charge, maintained strict discipline, had singing, related interesting religious stories, asked questions, and gave instruction in Methodist doctrines. This soon resulted in quickening the life of the League, the numbers grew rapidly, and after awhile we began to have an occasional conversion. The members improved, especially in singing, until it is an inspiration to hear them. At the last Annual Conference I procured a copy of Dr. Hamill's Methodist Drills, and made it our League text-book for 1911. It has proven a most interesting subject of study, and from it our members have learned all about the Wesley family, how far John Wesley traveled on horseback, how many sermons he preached, how many books and pamphlets he wrote, and scores of other facts of Methodist history. Along with these drills we still have our religious stories (often taken from the Advocates) and singing and prayer. On the night of January 30, 44 Juniors gathered at the parsonage and we had a delightful entertainment, followed by refreshments. This is how we revived interest in our League, and such are some of the methods by which we keep it going.

J. A. WELLS, Pastor.

STATISTICAL COMPLAINTS.

I have received complaints about the statistics of the following charges in the North Mississippi Conference: Eupora and Maben, Crawford, Moorhead, Waterford. A correction is due Eupora and Maben. Instead of being Foreign Missions assessed $80 and paid $66.50, it should read assessed $80 and paid $6.50. As to the remainder of these complaints, the secretary wishes to say they are what the pastor's report showed them to be. If there is an error, the pastor's report is to blame for it.

There was one error which I observed too late to be corrected—the report No. 3 for Como and Coldwater were interchanged. It is an impossibility to get a correct statistical report from the incomplete reports handed the secretary.

BE READY.

Wherever a pastor is holding or about to hold special meetings, need it require one or two or three weeks "to get the Church right?" No; no. Save that time. The preacher may pray down the fire in his study and the praying members may obtain it in their homes, and on the first night of the revival unconverted persons may be reached and saved.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

are so often associated with Gallstones or inflammation or clogging of the gall duct. Thousands of poor dyspeptics keep doctoring their Stomachs with this, that and the other thing and get only temporary relief, or none at all, simply because the trouble is with the Gall or the Liver, with Gallstones either already present or conditions favorable to their formation. Do you have Soreness, Fullness or Oppression over Liver or Stomach, Chronic Catarrh, Nervous Weakness, Symptoms of Chronic Stomach Trouble, Debility or Apathy! These are unmistakable symptoms of Gall troubles. Each person does not usually have all these symptoms at one time. But these are the symptoms Gall troubles are likely to produce at some time or other.

Letters like the following are received by us every day:

Rapid City, S. D., Oct. 18, 1910.
I have never been sick one day or had one Gallstone pain since I first took your wonderful medicine which was in May, 1907. I have gained 25 pounds in weight and am feeling fine.

The reason I have not written sooner is because I wanted to be sure I was cured before I said so. When I began your treatment I weighed 117. Two months later I weighed 139, now after 3 1/2 months I weigh 144, the highest I have weighed for 15 years. My general health is now better than it has been for 15 years. Your remedy did it. I cannot express the esteem in which I hold your medicines for the great good it has done to me, and for the relief of my Gallstone troubles.

A "SQUARE DEAL"

It is often argued that women do not have an equal chance with men, for enjoyment and usefulness, because women suffer so much from pain and weakness. In a general sense, it is true that women bear more physical pain than men. However, the belief that women must suffer regularly, on account of ailments and weakness peculiar to their sex, has been successfully contradicted by the relief so many women have obtained by the use of Cardui, that great remedy for suffering women.

During the past fifty years, many thousands of women have written us, telling of the immediate relief and permanent benefit they have received from Cardui. These letters cover a great many forms of womanly illness. Mrs. M. E. Allred of Hartford, Wash., writes: "Ever since I was 18 years old, I have suffered from female troubles. I had headache, backache and other troubles, every month. Some two years ago, I began to use Cardui, and since then I have had no backache, my other troubles have stopped, I don't need any medicine, and I am well."

What Cardui has done for Mrs. Allred and other women, it surely can do for you. Try it at once. Give yourself a "square deal." You will never regret it. Sold everywhere.

CORINTH-ABERDEEN DISTRICT STEWARDS' MEETING.

Dear Dr. Meek: On February 1, 2, the preachers and district stewards of Corinth and Aberdeen Districts held a joint session in Tupelo. About one hundred were present, and, I think, about the best and brightest program I have ever seen for a meeting of this kind was carried out. To the church in Tupelo the meeting was so full of meaning that, to pass it over unnoticed, would be to disregard one of the most significant events of the year up to this time.

We count it a great blessing to have had the privilege of associating in Christian fellowship and thought with one hundred of the leading workers of these two districts. By the touch of these men and women of serious purpose and consecrated life we have been enriched; and we shall think of their coming only to wish that they might come again—and for a longer time.

Then, in the presence of our own genial and gifted Bishop McCoy, we have still further reason to congratulate ourselves. Aside from the charm of his deliverances—they were timely and they had the old-time ring—he pleaded for a vigorous and aggressive evangelism after the old pattern; and in his advocacy of our missionary program, he found the authority for it in what our God is to the world. By his coming he has increased the circle of his friendships; and, if it needs not to be said, he will always be welcome to our city.

The last afternoon was given to a consideration of the Sunday school work in general. Under the lead of our own Conference field secretary, Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, we had a panorama of the field from the different angles and positions of the workers. And from the experienced, if not the veteran, worker we had messages of hope and cheer.

On the evening of the last day we had a great message on Adult Bible Study, by Mr. W. C. Pearce, of Chicago. He spoke of the place of organization, of the social, benevolent and other phases of the work; but with tremendous emphasis he presented, as first in importance, the purpose to grip and be gripped by the Word that makes us one in all the earth. From the inspiring tone of his message we take heart and begin our work anew.

DR. STEEL AT MACON.

Dear Dr. Meek: Dr. Sam Steel has been with us at Macon for two weeks in a revival meeting. As you know, he combines two rare qualities—eloquence and intellectuality. He has a wide and accurate knowledge of the Bible, is sweet-spirited, and, from any standpoint, a truly great preacher. Our people say he gave us the greatest series of sermons they ever heard. We can never be the same after hearing him. We will search the Scriptures more diligently and strive to be Bible Christians in a higher sense. We have been renewed and strengthened for better service. Our preachers would do well to keep this great and eloquent gospel preacher busy.

FIRST CHURCH, YAZOO CITY.

Dear Brother Meek: It is not often that I worry you with "copy," or ask for space in your valuable paper, but I am moved upon this occasion to drop a line because of increased and increasing interest in Church attendance. Beginning with the first Sunday in January, our congregations have shown a steady increase until now at the morning services they fill the main auditorium. Two weeks ago it became necessary to open the Sunday school annex. More persons partook of the bread and wine at the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper last Sunday morning than at any time during my pastorate here. We are putting forth an effort to make the last payment on our handsome organ, which was installed about three years ago, and the remainder of our debt (which is yet quite large) has been arranged in such a way as to make its payment feasible and practicable during the course of a few years. The Cotton Mill has resumed operations and our pastor, the Rev. B. F. Crook, is rejoicing in a larger interest among the people thereabouts, as well as at the other churches which compose his charge.

If at any time you can come to see us we will promise you large and appreciative audiences, and doubtless your presence would stimulate a desire upon the part of many who do not see the Advocate to become regular subscribers. Your fraternally,
THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, P. C.

TUBAL, MISS.

I want to state in the columns of the Advocate that I enjoyed the Annual Conference at Hattiesburg very much. I have been in Alabama the past four years in the pastoral work. I am at home this year recruiting my health and traveling and holding meetings. Since Conference I have been working some on Brother Hilary Westbrook's charge—the DeSoto appointment, Meridian District. I went to Salem Church by invitation by my dear old uncle, John Wesley Brasher, and preached at 11 a. m. and at 7:30 p. m., on the fifth Sunday in January, to attentive congregations, and much interest was manifested in each service; and on the first Sunday in February, by invitation of Brother Westbrook, I went to Manasses Church at 11 a. m., at State Line at 3:30 p. m., and at Theadville at 7:30, and preached to some very attentive people at each service. We had a number at each service to give their hands for prayer. We have invitations to go back. Brother Westbrook has been sick with la grippe about three weeks. I had the pleasure of spending the night with Brother and Sister Westbrook in their new parsonage home not long since. It was a great inspiration to me to be treated so kindly and to be so royally entertained in their home and to enjoy the company of little David, their only son. May God bless this home. I ask the readers of the Advocate to pray for me.—J. E. Brasher.

Delicate Women

"From a thin, nervous wreck, miserable and wretched, I am now enjoying splendid health, and it is all traceable to Dr. Miles' Nervine."

MRS. MAUD B. OPLINGER,
Philadelphia, Penna.

It restores strength to the entire nervous system.

Obituaries.

THOMAS QUITMAN, son of James and Mary Ann Roberts, was born September 12, 1855, and died November 1, 1910. Brother Roberts had been failing in health for some years before the end came. In his younger days he was robust and stout. All who knew him then never thought but that he would live to a ripe old age. He was the youngest of the famous Roberts brothers, whose examples and precepts have been such a help to the religious and moral life of this country. He was converted at the foot of an old pine tree not far from his parental home, at nineteen years of age, and joined the Methodist Church at Old Mt. Pleasant while Rev. U. B. Phillips was pastor. He was one of the best Sunday school workers Mt. Pleasant ever had. The young people always regarded him as their spiritual guide in Sunday school and prayer meetings, because of his knowledge of the Bible. He had great faith in the Trinity—God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. He was a man of prayer. Many are the people who were converted through his prayers and influence. Brother Jeff Havens, one of the local preachers of this charge, was led to Christ through his efforts, and is a "bright and shining star" in his crown to-day. He was married to Miss Angeline Lyons in 1874. Twelve children came to bless this union, two of whom preceded him to the heavenly home. He leaves to mourn his departure a wife, several children, two brothers, several sisters, relatives and friends. Methinks I can hear him as he sings up yonder: "All the storms at last are over, I have anchored in the harbor; I'm no longer on the ocean sailing, but at home beyond the skies."

JAS. M. LEWIS, P. C.
Van Cleave, Miss.

Mrs. SARAH RANDOLPH HENRY. Sister Henry was born near Vicksburg, Miss., about seventy-nine years ago and died at her home in Edwards, Miss., January 2, 1911. These dates mark the boundary of a life that was marked for consecration, piety and Christian influence. In early life she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was ever ready to offer herself for any work that needed to be done. Hers was a life of suffering, and for many years she was an invalid, but during these years there was not the sound of complaining against God or his dealings. Her Bible was by her side, and when the pastor would make her a visit he went away feeling that he had been in the presence of one who lived near to the throne of the Almighty. During the years of suffering she was attended by one of her daughters, whose fidelity was marked by that love that only the Christian can give. The Church is poorer because of her taking, but it brings the celestial city nearer and causes us to look forward to that reunion where there is no death nor parting. There are children and grandchildren who mourn the loss of this child of God, and many friends who join them in their tears, but the comforts of the Christian religion are theirs. We pray for them that they may follow in the steps of their loved one.

GEO. P. McKEOWN, P. C.

Mrs. EMMA CHICHESTER.—Mrs. Emma Chichester died at her home in Edwards, Miss., November 10, 1910, at a ripe old age. This servant of God had suffered many months and years with creeping paralysis, but during the suffering there was no murmur nor complaining. Cheerfully she bore the trials that came, enduring the affliction of bodily ailment until God said, "It is enough, come up higher." In early life she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and all during the years was a devout and faithful member. The Church has lost a true member, the community a Christian citizen, the family a devoted mother. The comforts of the Christian religion are theirs, for the mother and grandmother left the record of a life of consecration. To them we offer our prayers in their sorrow, and would point them to that home where death never comes. A son, A. T. Chichester, together with her grandchildren and many friends, are left to mourn, not as those who have no hope, but as those who look for the dawning of a brighter and more glorious day. We laid the body to rest in the old cemetery, but the Christian influences are going out through all the land, blessing those who knew her. We pray the blessings of God to rest upon the family and that they may follow the way that mother has gone. Especially do we pray that God may bless the one who watched by her bedside and for many years cared for her by watching over her and doing deeds of kindness. "We thought her dying when she slept, and sleeping when she died." GEO. P. McKEOWN, P. C.

A REMARKABLE WOMAN.

Old age, after all, is not a thing to be looked forward to with fear and trembling, as the majority of us are inclined to do; that is, if old age is to deal as leniently with us as it has with Mrs. Francis B. Bowers, of Laneville, Texas.

While Mrs. Bowers is a remarkable woman, and unusually well preserved there is no reason why every body should not be equally so. Mrs. Bowers is now in her seventy-sixth year, is the mother of eleven children, the oldest being fifty-odd years of age and the youngest, thirty. She does all of her own house work, washing and ironing, works her own garden and flowers and attends to her chickens; can sew with a fine needle without glasses and walks three miles a day.

Mrs. Bowers attributes her present remarkable good health to the use of W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron and justly so, because it is the very best blood purifier in the world to-day, and has been for the past thirty years. W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron makes pure blood, invigorates the nerves, restores all organs to normal health, insures proper digestion, creates a hearty appetite, is laxative in its effect and can be had from your druggist in 50c and $1.00 size bottles.

Get a $1.00 bottle of W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron and if you can't see any improvement in your general health after using two-thirds of it, return the remainder to your druggist and he will refund your money on the whole bottle. If your druggist can't supply you, send his name and $1.00 to the W. H. Bull Medicine Co., St. Louis, Mo., and they will send you a bottle direct with the same guarantee of results.

SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSIONARY MONTHLY REPORT.

We have just finished our first month's work as Sunday school missionary, including visits to Colfax (twice), Pollock, Montgomery, Selma, Jena, Eden, Trout, Rochelle and Opelousas, all in the Alexandria District under the direction of the presiding elder.

The work being new, it was somewhat a question of what was to be and could be done, but finding every pastor and Sunday school worker cordial to the visitor and anxious for the best in modern Sunday school work, we decided that the thing to do was to "diagnose" each school by the highest standards of work, and to "prescribe" this as the goal to which everyone should attain. We found but few of the schools in any real sense graded, and none using the graded literature, and practically no Home or Cradle Roll departments in active operation, some Magazines, and fewer Adult Students, and but few Visitors and Boys and Girls. But after the matter of these and other equipments, such as maps, blackboards and screened off departments, were discussed in addresses, and in workers' conferences, in almost every case the decision was to appropriate all of them. Some fruitful children's services were held, and at nearly every place either pastor or superintendent ordered (or already had) Lawrence's "How to Conduct a Sunday School." Only one new Sunday school was organized—at Rochelle, where the pastor had done fine work in preparing for it.

We are living in a moving age and none but active leaders need expect to keep up, and to hold our wonted Methodist glory in Sunday school work, our pastors and superintendents must "give attention to reading," attending institutes and conventions, and in every way to studying the latest organizations and methods of working in the modern Sunday school. We stand ready to help in the work, and are reading the best books, and trying to find out the best things that need most to be done. Call on us for local information, and Mr. E. E. French, of Nashville, for general information and samples and catalogues of literature. It is his work to educate in Sunday school matters, and my business to help in every local way. No need in up-to-date Sunday school methods to "perish for lack of knowledge." We are not weeping "for more worlds to conquer," but are earnestly desirous that where the disciplinary requirement that "where ten persons can be found a Sunday school shall be organized" in Louisiana, and that every one of them may be worthy the name of school in the modern meaning of the word. The Methodist flag that has always led, must never drop behind.

P. Q. LOWREY.

Mrs. F. N. Parker has taken charge of the primary department of the Alexandria Sunday school and is planning a forward move in the work.

At the recent Preachers' Meeting of the Alexandria District, Rev. P. M. Brown gave due consideration to the Sunday school work and quite a number of new schools were promised by the pastors for needy and unorganized places.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Mr. Marion Lawrance reports: Two hundred and eighty-five thousand Sunday schools in the world to-day, 28,000,000 persons in Sunday school, 800 Sunday school members join the Church for every day of the 365 of the year, 20,000 members join Sunday schools every Sunday in the year. Thus the great movement grows by leaps and bounds and "The Sunday School" is the "Golden Gate" to the Church's Promised Land.

Are you tactful, are you unselfish? Tactlessness is simply the failure to think sufficiently about others to enable us to touch them in a helpful way, a considerate way, a sympathetic way. Have you ever attended a Teachers' Meeting where a cruel, tactless word jarred the members out of harmony with all Christ love and gentleness and ruthlessly marred the lesson study, and did away with the desired fellowship? Tact is more easily acquired than either writing, reading or speaking, and it is one in the catalogue of real Christian virtues.

In quotation marks below you find the estimate of the graded lessons by a woman of fine judgment and broad experience. "I crave the privilege of presenting the great good, the broad opportunity, the immense possibility to be found in and developed by the graded lessons. They are the very lessons for the conscientious teacher, as well as for the lazy one; for even the latter can scarcely help being helpful and interesting when using the graded lessons. To the teacher who wants to study, they are a never-ending joy; to the teacher inclined to shirk, a boon, for they, with the accompanying helps, can more easily be made interesting than the uniform lessons. If every Sunday school teacher in Southern Methodism would become informed as to the plan and purpose of these graded lessons, and get into the spirit of them, our Sunday schools would be revolutionized and a great blessing to our children and young people would result."

"It is an odd thing that even love does not seem to be as swift to aid, in a crisis, as professional training." That sentence burned into my heart and mind from out the paragraph of a fine short story—the story is half forgot—but this sentence—never.

Love is wonderful, beautiful, all comprehensive; but it cannot staunch a wound as can a skilled surgeon nor resuscitate a drowning man as a trained nurse, nor can just the "love" teacher save and help and hold her pupils as does the trained teacher or the trained parent.

Training is necessary. President Taft takes an hour every morning, to train his body to keep pace with all the calls upon him, and his trainer is inexorable. Mr. Taft does not like the training or its regularity, but he trains one hour every day none the less.

The simile holds: to be fit and ready for the Master's use, we must be trained workers. It will take some minutes every day, some prayers every day, some struggles over weariness, cares and indifference and indolence, but it must be done.

'Twas Sunday morning—two heads bent low over a letter, poorly written and blotted with tears and two pairs of eyes were lifted from the page, by and by, aglow with interest.

Let's step behind the scene. A woman and not an old one either, as women go, had lost all her family and had let her friends slip, too, in her sorrow and feminine helplessness, when all seemed to go wrong. She lived on a barren, joyless half dozen acres and life was a mere making ends meet—a struggle against inefficiency, sorrow and loneliness.

On Christmas, good, loving people hunt up just such aching, numbed hearts, and a teacher and two sisters from a Young Women's Bible Class fixed up a Christmas box for this lonely, needy woman, and they were the only ones of all these vast American millions who gave her a thought, save the great God up in heaven. The letter contained the stumbling, grateful words she wrote in reply. Do you know into her life has crept not only the prescience of spring in the air, but the perfume of love and interest and life?—And some soon Sabbath morning a heart unused to love and friendliness will open up and out in this class—an inevitable and beautiful sequence.

The joint meeting of the District Stewards of the Corinth and Aberdeen Districts was a notable occasion, especially in its accentuation of the Sunday school work. The field secretary conducted a Round Table on Thursday afternoon. The talks were short, pointed, helpful and visionful. Rev. R. P. Neblett, chairman of the Sunday School Board for the North Mississippi Conference, gave an inspiring talk on "The Vision of the Sunday School Work in the Conference." Mrs. S. T. Harkey spoke of the graded lessons, and Mrs. Jones of the progress of the work in New Albany. Mrs. V. T. Hoyle spoke of the splendid work along all lines of the Alpha Wesley Class of Tupelo—a great mixed class, whose good works stand as a record of their excellent organization and teacher. Mr. Jacob and Mr. Felts made fine inspirational talks. Mr. H. Ledyard gave a unique, helpful and broad-visioned talk on missions, which will be published later. Mr. W. C. Pearce, of Chicago, Adult Bible Class Director of North America, was introduced by Mr. R. M. Weaver, Corinth, Miss., and made a magnificent talk on "Organization," and Bishop McCoy closed with an uplifting prayer for the Sunday school work in the Conference and the world. Mr. Pearce spoke again at night and thrilled his hearers with the possibilities of this great field of work. Rarely has a speaker come with a more appreciated message.

THE HARD FIELD.

Let the flashlight fall on the man who is hammering away at his Christian tasks in some depleted town from which most of the young people have gone, but which still harbors human souls—some of them the most cantankerous, and some among the world's sweetest saints, but all of whom need the ministrations of the gospel. Many of these churches have contributed their best blood to our metropolitan pulpits, to our nation's leadership, to the ranks of foreign missionaries. It would be the height of ingratitude now for us to abandon them.—Congregationalist.

A Valuable Suggestion

Important to Everyone.

It is now conceded by physicians that the kidneys should have more attention as they control the other organs to a remarkable degree and do a tremendous amount of work in removing the poisons and waste matter from the system by filtering the blood.

During the winter months especially, when we live an indoor life, the kidneys should receive some assistance when needed, as we take less exercise, drink less water and often eat more rich, heavy food, thereby forcing the kidneys to do more work than Nature intended. Evidence of kidney trouble, such as lame back, inability to hold urine, smarting or burning, brick-dust or sediment, sallow complexion, rheumatism, may be weak or irregular heart action, warns you that your kidneys require help immediately to avoid more serious trouble.

An herbal medicine containing no minerals or opiates has the most healing influence. An ideal herbal compound that has had most remarkable success as a kidney and bladder remedy is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by mail, absolutely free. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and mention the Christian Advocate.

Editorial

We feel the thing we ought to be beating beneath the thing we are.—Phillips Brooks.

It is announced that the very Rev. William Mor-daunt Furneaux, dean of Winchester, has been entrusted by the Convocation of Canterbury (England) with the task of abridging the Ten Commandments. Doubtless it would please many if the learned gentleman would abrogate some of them altogether.

A friend remarked in conversation not long since upon the fondness of the American people for the adoption of resolutions. And truly it does seem that no body of any kind can assemble and adjourn without spreading them upon its minutes and scattering them over the land. Yet most of them amount to little or nothing. It is not what we resolve to do, but what is actually done, that counts. As has been most pertinently said: "The ACTS of the Apostles" is the title of one of the books of the New Testament; their RESOLUTIONS have not reached us."

The Rev. Charles Henry Prather, in his recent volume entitled "A Handbook of Classics," relates an incident which is said to have occurred on the occasion of the coronation of King Edward VI, of Great Britain. Three swords were brought to the Monarch, symbolizing his sovereignty over England, Scotland and Wales. But the King is reported to have said: "There is one sword lacking." "What is it, your Majesty?" was the reply. "The Bible, the sword of the Spirit," he answered, "and it is to be preferred before these swords." So he commanded the sacred volume to be brought and carried before him. And Edward was right. The swords of kings and warriors pale into insignificance compared to this sword which for nineteen hundred years has battled for human redemption. The most splendid victories recorded in the annals of time it has won, and the hope of the race lies in its power and protection.

Zion's Herald recently observed that a Methodist member of the British Parliament in making a public address advised the Wesleyan preachers and workers to cultivate the fervor of their fathers, stating that they need to do so because Methodism in England is not reaching outsiders now so effectively as in former days. In our judgment, this is good counsel for Methodists everywhere. Earnestness is essential to success in any great undertaking. No public speaker can hope to impress and move the people without it. When a minister's manner indicates that he is not much concerned, those who listen are certain to be comparatively indifferent to his message. Hence, the first essential qualification for Christian work is a profound conviction that all out of Christ are lost and rushing to destruction. This alone can give birth to that ardor and persistent effort that should characterize the disciples of him who is the world's hope. The fervor of the fathers we can never have without also having their faith and clear experiences of the guilt of sin and joy of salvation.

THE WASHINGTON CITY CHURCH.

The campaign for funds to erect a representative Southern Methodist Church in Washington City is now under way, directed by Dr. George S. Sexton, of Texas, who for about two years has been in charge of the movement. This enterprise, as has before been stated, has been approved by the General Conference of our denomination and has the most hearty endorsement of all our Bishops and leaders. The reasons why we should have an imposing and well equipped church edifice at the National Capital are so obvious that we think it scarcely necessary to recite them. Washington is the political center of the country, and is also becoming more and more an educational and social center. There the representatives of the Southern States in Congress and their families gather and remain for months at a time, some of them acquiring permanent residences; there also live the employees of the various executive departments of the Government, many of whom are our members. We ought by all means to maintain Southern Methodism at the great seat of national power, upon such a scale that our own people whose duties call them there will not be ashamed of it. To do this, we must have a building that will compare favorably with those of other denominations.

We should also remember that representatives of all the powers of the world are assembled at Washington, and that travelers are constantly coming thither from every quarter of the globe. Most of them visit New York, and perhaps one or two other Northern cities, and the National Capital, and then speed back across the Atlantic. They see little or nothing of the South. What kind of an impression does our Church, as now represented at the Capital, make upon these visitors, many of whom are persons of eminence and far-reaching influence? And if they come from pagan countries, where our missionaries are at work, is not their respect lessened for our operations abroad by the pitiable aspect which our enterprises, as they see them, present at home?

Moreover, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, owes it to the nation to increase to the utmost in her power her equipment and influence in the city which is the seat of our Federal Government. Property and all things considered, she is easily the foremost denomination in the southern section of the republic, and it is her duty to contribute all that she can to make the moral and religious atmosphere that surrounds the men who shape our governmental policies pure and wholesome. Not a few of these are worshipers at her altars, and are more open to her instruction than that of any other denomination. We have contributed to the public service many of the most majestic figures that have been connected with it. The two greatest men that the South has had since the Civil War—the patriotic and broad-visioned Lamar of Mississippi and the brilliant Ben Hill of Georgia—were Southern Methodists. A Church which has the strength, resources, and record of ours cannot afford to discredit herself by appearing to be poverty-stricken and weak where she is most conspicuous and widely observed.

Nor is it pride alone which calls us to the support of this project—already too long delayed. Denominational self-respect demands that we give it assistance—patriotism demands it, and likewise the welfare of the Church at large. It would hurt us less to appear to disadvantage in a score of other cities than in Washington, where the national sovereignty is enthroned and through which world currents sweep. We trust that not a single Methodist to whom Dr. Sexton appeals for a contribution will fail to make a generous response. The cause is certainly a worthy and important one. The National Capital is situated on the northern border of the South, where our Church is comparatively weak. Our people in Washington are doing their best; but it is unreasonable to expect them to bear the whole burden of a connectional enterprise like this. The obligation to help is upon every Southern Methodist beneath the flag. And for our part, we would not care if the structure were to assume the proportions of a cathedral, though nothing of that kind is in contemplation. The chief religious edifice of a Church of nearly two million members, which is growing at the rate of 200,000 a quadrennium, could not well be made too imposing to symbolize its present strength and serve as a fitting prophecy of its future.

Nor need any brother withhold his gift because of the suggestion made by some of our editors that all of the Methodisms of the United States should join in building a great house of worship at Washington to be used in common. There is no prospect whatever of such a thing being done. Indeed, the movement toward the unification of the Methodist bodies in America is yet too nebulous and vague to allow it to influence to the slightest degree our course as an independent denomination. There is a mere possibility that something may come of it—nothing more. No matter what far-coming decades, in the providence of God, may accomplish, those of us now upon the stage of action are pretty certain to live and die in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. And for aught we know, our denominational integrity may be maintained until the end of time. So let us unite in constructing in the fair city of the Potomac, where modern architecture is seen in its beauty and perfection, such a building as befits the numbers, the wealth, and the intelligence of our people, and which will endure as long as the American Republic shall last.

One of the urgent needs of the day is a revival of respect for Church law. Too many of our preachers and people feel privileged to set aside at will the requirements of the Discipline, and conduct the worship and transact the business of the Church to suit themselves. Particularly is the ritual administered in various and sundry ways. Some little latitude of procedure must, of course, be allowed to meet unusual conditions, but as nearly as possible the directions of the law-making body should be carried out. The crystallized wisdom of decades and centuries is embodied in the forms, ceremonies and legislation of Methodism, and presumptuous, indeed, is he who rashly undertakes to revise them. Let us "keep" and not "mend" the rules of the Church, as we promised to do.

A STRONG AND TIMELY DISCOURSE.

One of the largest congregations that has attended St. John's Methodist Church in some time was present last night and heard the pastor, Dr. H. M. DuBose, deliver a masterly discourse upon the power of the Gospel and its relation to the ultimate salvation of men. Dr. DuBose's sermon was pitched upon a high plane of Christian logic and practical doctrine. Upon the preacher and his teachings rests a great responsibility; preaching "is the reiteration, in the spirit of a passionate experience and personal consecration, of that revelation whose end is the present and eternal salvation of men from sin"; Christ is the Way, and the Bible is the very Word of God, and men are to be judged out of that Bible; were the fundamental principles of Dr. DuBose's discourse. Special music was rendered by the choir and the entire service was greatly enjoyed. St. John's Church is increasing in membership rapidly. Since Dr. DuBose became pastor, less than three months ago, there have been received nearly 100 applications for membership, 70 of whom have already been admitted into the Church.

Dr. DuBose's sermon last night was in part as follows:

Text: "Whom we preach, warning every man and teaching every man; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus."—Colossians 1:28.

"Next to the home, the pulpit is the oldest institution in the world. With the Cross and the Bible, it constitutes the trinity of great agencies used in the propagation and maintenance of the gospel. Upon it rests the pledge of the world's civilization and continued spiritual enlightenment. It is through preaching, the legitimate voice of the pulpit, that God will save the world, that is, convict of sin, spiritualize, and then translate the men who dwell on earth.

"The responsibility of the preacher is a tremendous one, since both he and those who hear him are to be judged by the word he preaches. It is important, then, to ask what preaching is. It is not mere hortatory declamation, however honestly framed or correctly delivered. It is not ethical and social philosophizings, though the subject were large and the ideal praiseworthy. Preaching is not sensational opposition to evil, nor a professional defense of right and truth. What then is preaching? It is the reiteration, in the spirit of a passionate experience and personal consecration, of that revelation whose end is the present and eternal salvation of men from sin. The preacher who himself does not know the power of godliness is doing worse than nothing to attempt to preach it to others. True preaching comes out of the heart of the man who preaches and is aimed at the hearts of the men who hear.

"The perpetual and pertinent theme of preaching is Jesus Christ, the crucified Savior of men. The word 'whom' here refers alone to Jesus, who, in the body of his flesh through death, wrought salvation for the whole world. This Christ is a Savior from sin. An old English prelate, in the years of his age, and in the spirit of the holy St. John, used to say to his friends, who asked for the news: 'The news is that Jesus the Son of God, has died on Calvary to save the world from sin.' And is not this the best news that can come to men—you men here in Augusta, so beset and imperiled by sin?

"The blood which washed away sin in the old dispensation can wash away the sins of men in this evil day. O, the men to preach the gospel of the blood—the blood of the Crucified! A Savior from sin! What is sin? It is a disease, an ulcerous, destructive, deathful disease.

"A man suffering from a cancer on his face was carried into a hospital. The disease ate away his cheeks; it ate away the bones of his jaws and his teeth. The attendants had to put handages over their faces and burn disinfectants while they ministered to him. At last, the man died in unspeakable agony. Men, that is sin. It is an indescribable malady. It fills the world with rottenness and death. But Jesus, the crucified, is a Savior from sin, from the foulest, the blackest, the deadliest of sins. He can save the skeptic from his Christless doubts; the profane man from his polluting blasphemy; the drunkard from his swill cups, the lecher from his villainess, and everyone from the sin which is in his bosom. This He does through the penitence of the sinner and the merits of his own royal blood.

"The old painters sometimes painted pictures of Christ with his heart pierced with an arrow, resting against the bosom of his robe. This is the version which redeemed men forever have of Jesus. A bleeding Savior seen by faith, Christ is a Savior unto holiness. He not only forgives men their sins but he helps them into high and purified lives. Best of all, he is ready to do that to-day. The devil once said to Martin Luther: 'Martin Luther, you are a sinner.' 'That I know is true,' said Luther. 'You will be damned in hell,' returned the devil. 'That I know is false,' returned Luther, 'for I trust in the blood of Jesus Christ; I am saved; I shall be made holy.'

"The first essential of true preaching is the faithful warning of men. First, of a judgment to come, and also of the peril of delaying preparation therefor. 'The faithful pulpit does not fail to warn men of the dangers of hell—a hell that is now, a hell that is to come. Teaching is also an essential of faithful preaching. This teaching is, first, of the value and use of that immortal thing called life. It also relates to the truth of the teachings and doctrines of that great revelation called the Bible. I believe the Bible is the very word of God, and that it is truth from cover to cover. I also believe that men are to be judged out of that Bible. Hence, my haste to warn you that I may present you perfect in Christ Jesus at that great assize before which we shall all appear.'—From the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle of February 13.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF MY CONFERENCE. NO. III.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

I have recently read a book—"Letters by an Old Methodist to His Son in the Ministry." It is a very readable volume. I would suggest that every young preacher who has not read the book, procure a copy and give it a careful reading. Bishop Mallalieu says, "I wish ten thousand Methodist preachers might read it. I am sure it would be an inspiration and help." He then adds, "Possibly it might be a good thing for an equal number of official members to read it." Bishop Fowler says, "It is a healthy book for any minister or layman to read; it is full of good sense." Bishop Merrill says, "All young preachers, Methodist and others, will be profited by reading the book, and its quaint descriptions will furnish useful hints to all church members." You can get the book from Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn. Get the book; read it; study it; profit by it. "A Circuit Rider's Wife" would be helpful to you to read when you have the blues, if ever you do. Also, "Eve's Second Marriage."

Let me suggest that you do not get into the habit of reading your sermons. Be so wonderfully charged with the Holy Ghost and the subject matter contained in your text that you will not have time to read. Have your head and heart full of sound Gospel truths.

My wife was in one of our southern cities a few months ago, and on Sunday morning she went to the First Methodist Church, hoping to hear a good, inspiring Gospel sermon. She noticed when she entered the church the pews in front, even down to the middle of the church, were unoccupied, and but few in the rear. The young "D. D." read a beautiful essay, or sermonette; but he was a poor reader, and failed to make it interesting and helpful to his hearers. Be sure you have a message for the people. Be sure God is in the message. Be sure God is with you in the delivery of the message. Then you will not be reduced to the necessity of reading your message. I like to kneel and listen to one lead in prayer whose heart is brim full of love and gratitude to God, who is so full he just "bubbles over" occasionally while praying. I enjoy hearing a brother read and expound the word of life whose heart is full of love to God and a warm message for the people. What if some good sister does get happy and praise God aloud? It will only add to the spiritual interest of the occasion. Sometimes a good old-time "hallelujah," "praise the Lord," coming from the heart and lips of some good old saint in Israel, is more inspiring than a sermon, especially when the sermon is read by a poor reader. What we need in our day is a Holy Ghost baptized ministry. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." Zech. 4:6.

When you leave a county and go to another to preach take your tax receipt. A poll tax is about all some preachers have to pay; and for one to leave his charge without paying his tax is about as bad, unministerial like, as leaving a charge with a drug bill or store account unsettled. What I have formerly said about "non-debt paying preachers" has caused some who belong to that class to look a little sour at, or turn the cold shoulder, to me. I do not expect to benefit that class by writing as I do; they, or some of them, I fear, are past all hope; but I do want our young preachers to be honest. Pay your debts. I know misfortune befalls preachers as well as other people sometimes. When such is the case, you may be compelled to buy without a probability of paying soon, but be sure you pay when you can.

THE PREACHER IN THE PULPIT READING.

By Rev. C. W. Carter, D.D.

Dear Timothy: One day you stood before the chancel of the Church and in presence of the Conference and the congregation the Bishop handed you a Bible and said: "Take thou authority to read the Holy Scriptures in the Church of God." I wonder if you have studied out the real meaning of that? The highest officer in the Church has given you "authority" to do a specified act and that act is "reading the Holy Scriptures in the Church of God." Look at this a little. When a man is authorized to do a certain thing the supposition is that he can do that thing. If he can't do it, then the supposition is that he will learn HOW to do it. The authority to do carries with it the obligation to do the required act in the best possible manner. No sane man ever gives authority to do anything in a wrong way. I suppose there is a wrong way to do everything. It is my observation, Timothy, that there is more unedifying reading in the pulpit than in any other public place in the world. The reason for this is not hard to discover. The general view is that anybody who has gone to school at all can read English; but the real fact is the schools don't teach pupils to read. They teach everything else and leave the pupils to learn how to read well as best they can. The preachers—some of them at least—having imbibed this notion never make any specific preparation for their pulpit readings. Now, what is the purpose for which the Scriptures are read in the Church? Scripture reading is a part of public worship and public worship is for the purpose of edifying the people in the things of God. But how can people be edified if the reading is done so bunglingly as to destroy the sense? I hold that no man can read a sentence so as to bring out its beauty and power, if he is ignorant of the meaning of that sentence. If he does not know its meaning the emphasis and intonation will be wrongly placed, and the hearer will listen to something which is really not in the Book. The preacher, who stands up in the pulpit to read the Scriptures without having studied the reading lesson to find out its meaning, is abusing the authority given him to read. I always pity the preacher who has to look up his lesson after going into the pulpit. This is one reason there is so much poor reading in the pulpit. I would have you study your reading lesson thoroughly so that your people may be edified, remembering always that what you read is about all the Scripture some of them ever get. The Bible contains one verse where this matter of reading the Scriptures to the congregation is fully, thoroughly and yet succinctly treated. If you will study that verse as you study a text for a sermon, you will learn a good lesson on pulpit Scripture reading. That verse is: "So they read in the Book in the Law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading."—Neh. 8:8. In my view, the simple meaning of the verse is this—the reading was done in such a way that the hearers got the sense in the very reading itself. That is true reading.

There is reading of hymns also in the pulpit. I suppose this custom came into vogue when hymn books were few and the preacher had to "line out" the words in order that the people might be able to sing. Since churches generally are well supplied with hymn books, there is no reason that this custom should be continued. It ought to be discontinued for the reason that not one preacher out of twenty can read a hymn. Some hymns are peculiarly difficult to read, and these difficult ones are "mouthed over" to the dismay and affliction of the long-suffering people. I will venture the assertion that there is not a preacher in your Conference who can read, so as to give the congregation a true sense of its beauty, Bickersmith's fine hymn, "Peace, perfect peace," etc. So, Timothy, don't try to show off your fine elocutionary powers by reading your hymns in the pulpit, for if you do you will make yourself ridiculous. Once after a good sermon had been preached and the congregation was in that state of mind to start right off on a hallelujah chorus, a brother got up and began to read the Coronation hymn, and he read it so blunderingly that when he got through nobody was in the mood to sing. If he had arisen and in a clear, ringing tone, began to sing, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," the congregation would have been swept into an atmosphere of praise that would have refreshed all hearts. Let me tell you what I witnessed at a District Conference, and as I am the only one left of that Conference, I may be permitted to do so. A brother appointed to preach at the morning hour selected as his reading lesson a chapter in Nehemiah. Scattered along through that chapter are several verses of proper names. He did very well until he came to one of those verses of names, and he attacked them with commendable courage, but nobody knew what he was doing. After getting through them as best he could he went on and presently came to another verse of hard names. Now what do you suppose he did? He looked out upon the congregation and said, "Here we have the names of the same fellows mentioned above." Now the real fact was, they were an entirely different set of names. Evidently the brother had not read over his lesson before he went into the pulpit. I recommend you to get a book called, "The Vocal and Literary Interpretation of the Bible," by S. S. Curry, and from it learn how to read the Scriptures.

IS THY HEART RIGHT WITH GOD?

By Rev. Robt. B. Downer.

Just at present, throughout Southern Methodism, considerable is being said in favor of heartfelt, pure and undefiled religion.

There is a growing spirit, more or less undefinable, that greater dependence is being placed upon the externals of religion, than upon the spirit and strength of God. Of course, in some places the camp fires of an agonizing company burn bright, betokening the presence of the Lord of Hosts; then again, in other places, Zion seems weak and discouraged, and twelve months will pass without the addition of one new-born soul. The chief shepherds of the Southern Methodist Church are evidently impressed with the fact that the love of self in the members largely displaces love for Christ and immortal souls, and have sounded an alarm, calling the Church to prayer and investigation. The prophet Malachi asks the question, "Will a man rob God?" Every declension in religion arises through individual indulgence of spiritual theft. Zion's normal state is holiness unto the Lord. Holiness is, therefore, not a luxury to be possessed and lived by a favored few, but a necessity to be possessed by every individual member of the King's earthly family.

Not to be holy, wholly sanctified to the Lord's use, indicates at once the spirit of Achan, the ancient troubler of Israel. The stringent rule regarding the spoils of Jericho, was considered harsh and unwise by one of the Lord's warriors; so he challenged the rectitude, wisdom and love of Israel's God. Infidelity of the heart soon found expression in act, and when the treasure spoil was securely hidden under the tent, Achan felt perfectly secure, forgetting meanwhile the warning to all sinners, "Be sure your sin will find you out." The defeat at Ai that followed, overwhelmed Joshua with surprise, causing in him a great declension of faith in God, and when inquiry was made of the Lord, "Why has Israel fled before her enemies?" this startling answer was returned: "There is an accursed thing (not things) in the midst of thee, O Israel. Thou canst not stand before thine enemies until ye take away the accursed thing from among you." From this extract of ancient Bible history we learn the exceeding heinousness of sin, as viewed by "the High and lofty One, whose name is Holy." God would not abide in the camp nor give victory, until a perfect cleansing had transpired. Allow me to ask the question, Does time, condition or environment change the nature of sin? Is God's hatred and declared punishment of it, minimized or abrogated by any cause whatever? Many are the excuses and palliations for twentieth century violations of the holy law of God. Some from the pulpit declare that the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, and the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians exhibit the beautiful ideals, but impossible of realization in practical life and the twentieth century environments. They say, "it is impossible to live without sin," and that Christ's robe of righteousness once thrown around a repentant sinner, effectually avails for all future violations of the law of holiness.

Strange to say, while many Methodist members, and possibly some preachers, deny the truth of the above statements, yet the life lived (of imperfect consecration, and not wholly sanctified) speaks louder than words.

Note another fearful truth taught by Israel's defeat at Ai. The sin of one man is treated as the sin of all Israel, until publicly repented of and repudiated. You now see the pertinency of the heading of this article, "Is thy heart right with God?" As the hymn says:

"Have thy affections been nailed to the cross,
Dost thou count all things for Jesus but loss;
Hast thou dominion o'er self and o'er sin,
Over all evil without and within;
Are all thy powers under Jesus' control,
Does He each moment abide in thy soul;
Art thou now walking in heaven's pure light,
Is thy soul wearing the garment of white?"

Let Bishops, connectional officers, college presidents, editors, presiding elders, pastors, Sunday school superintendents and helpers get their hearts right with God, and speedily there will follow a revival, exalting God's holiness, antagonizing all sin, a lifting up of Christ, and sinners will seek safety under the cross-atonement of Calvary.

FROM THE COLPORTER.

In surveying the past and looking to the future we find very much for which to be grateful and to inspire hopefulness.

Our report for last year was as follows:

Book sales, North Mississippi Conference...	$1,588.17
Book sales, Mississippi Conference.....	1,119.17
Church papers and Sunday-school periodicals .....	389.68

Total .....$3,097.02

This falls short of the year preceding, but considering several existing conditions in the country, it is quite gratifying, for which we are sincerely thankful to God and to all friends who aided in the work. We hope to more than regain this year the loss of last year, and, by the grace of God and the practical co-operation of the preachers and church members of the two patronizing conferences, it shall be done. Thus far in the new year the business is encouraging. At the Conferences and since, the demand for books and papers has been good; the income of cash fairly good. It only remains for these streams to continue to flow more and more and all "equivalents" to be forthcoming on time and all will go well and success will crown our labors.

Next to the Holy Scriptures, the Discipline, 1910 edition, is the leading book for the year. Let special diligence be given to its circulation among the people. No preacher with a few copies in hand, to show and read extracts to his people, can fail to sell a goodly number during the year. Read on page 3 the Bishops' address to the members of the Church. They say: "We wish to see this little publication in the house of every Methodist. Far from wishing you to be ignorant of any of our doctrines or any part of our discipline, we desire you to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest the whole. You ought, next to the Word of God, to procure the articles and canons of the Church to which you belong." We are glad to say the book is going rapidly. Price, 40 cents per copy by mail; $3.60 per dozen by express not prepaid.

Don't forget other current books, such as Lipscomb's "Conscience and Its Culture," (85 cents net, postpaid), "Cole Lectures," 1910, by Bishop McDowell ($1.25), "Bildad Akers," by T. N. Ivey, (85 cents postpaid). These net prices are for a limited time. Send us your orders for the above named or any good books wanted.

Yours for service,

G. W. BACHMAN.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

Dear Brother Meek: I spent last week in a revival meeting with the students of Whitworth College, preaching to them twice each day and closing after three services on Sunday. My object in writing this is to speak of the delightful moral and religious atmosphere of the college, and the care with which the higher natures of our girls are being looked after by Dr. Cooper and his consecrated corps of teachers.

The lives of the girls at the college are happy and beautiful. One of the most attractive features of their lives is their earnest personal work for each other. During our meeting, prayer circles met each day in different parts of the institution, attended by nearly the entire student body. After the evening services, personal workers visited interested girls in their rooms, and helped them to make a surrender to Christ. Their prayers and testimonials in the services were an inspiration to me. There were a large number of professions of conversion, and, while most of the students are church members, there were five applications for membership on profession of faith.

One must see the college life to know what Whitworth College is doing for our Methodism. Our Conference could make no better investment than to double our capacity there in all departments. If we are to compete with other girls' schools we ought to raise $50,000 to be spent in new buildings and equipment there. We have no investment that is bringing us larger returns. The people who are interested in Christian education for our young women must get ready to spend some money in giving Whitworth increased facilities and equipment for larger things.

Our girls' schools are running without endowment and are doing as well by our girls as Millsaps is by the boys, by means of the proceeds from their boarding departments. They ask for no endowment. Can't we afford to equip them and double their possibility for usefulness? It is practically impossible that a girl should go through Whitworth under its present management and come out as aught else than a great blessing to her community and to her Church.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

To the Members of the Patronizing Conferences.

I am glad to report that the work of the Programme Committee is progressing favorably, and the prospect is that it will be ready for publication in a short while. I am happy to say that the high standard of excellence of the past will be maintained in the platform and class-instructors of the present session. Every man I have secured so far is first-class in his department, and we are warranted in looking for the very best results.

I have had some inquiries about the date of the School, and for the benefit of those interested, will state that the School will begin its third session on the evening of June 27 and conclude with the evening of July 6.

The Conferences adopted the report of the Board of Directors, and in this report there was a request that no meeting of any sort be conducted at a time that will interfere with any man attending the School. I trust that the presiding elders will keep this in mind, and urge their men to attend the School.

The young men, especially, need the benefits of the School, and if the presiding elders will encourage them they will be present. The directors, as managers of this worthy institution, need, and ask for, the co-operation of all the sub-bishops of the four Conferences patronizing this School.

The Conference committees of examination are respectfully urged to send the names of their representatives to the Dean, Rev. F. N. Parker, Alexandria, La., so that he may distribute the work for the joint committees in time for them to be prepared to do the best work possible for their classes.

It will be gratifying to all to know that the contract has been let for a new tabernacle on the Camp Ground, and this will be completed before we meet this summer.

In behalf of the Board of Directors,

ROBT. SELBY,
President.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE TRAINING SCHOOL AT MONTROSE, MISS.

Some of the friends of this institution are in a special and particular way interested in its welfare. They seem very much interested in the farm which the trustees have bought in order that boys of moderate means may take one or two acres of this land and use it to pay expenses while here at school. One-half acre of this land in strawberries, or an acre in sugar cane or sweet potatoes, will send a boy to school for a full session. A little chicken farm, well cared for, would pay some boy's expenses for a session. As we have good pasture lands with the farm, some enterprising boy could take four good milch cows and pay expenses. Other things can be enterprised wherewith young men could pay expenses, but I have mentioned these that the friends of the institution and friends of the young men of our country and Church may think of the possibilities before us. Here is a list of those who have remembered the school in a financial and substantial way since January 1, 1911: W. D. Ratliff, M. D., W. W. Walley, M. D., W. H. Mars, M. D., J. O. Marler, Basil Fowler, H. S. Stevens, W. M. Dorsett, J. P. Evans, W. D. Barrett, Rev. R. T. Nolen, G. W. Mars, Miss Zula Harrington, W. A. Morrow, William Hart, Brother Shoemaker, F. B. Dewees, Rev. H. E. Carter, D. S. Colwell, A. Dees, G. F. Henry, L. C. Freney, A. Dewees, J. V. Welsh, J. W. Wicker, J. M. Kennedy, J. A. McLeland, M. Summer, M. Ross. Many thanks to all of these for their aid. I was so kindly received by the following brethren that I can never forget their kindness to me: Rev. R. P. Fikes, Rev. W. E. Dickens, Rev. M. M. Black, Rev. W. J. Dawson. As a Church, a great work is committed to us, and we must meet it wisely and bravely. I believe we will do it. A great and effectual door is opened here for men and women of moderate means as well as to the rich. It would almost make one weep to read some of the letters I have received from young men who are waiting to get the benefit of this little farm. Let us help the boys.

Church News

The press dispatches report that Pope Pius X is seriously indisposed with influenza.

Rev. Charles Thorpe, rector of the Episcopal Church at Mansfield, La., died on the 10th inst. He was 73 years old.

The Book Concern of the Methodist Episcopal Church is one of the largest publishing houses on either side of the Atlantic. It is said to do a business of approximately $10,000,000 a year.

After the 4th of March the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn., will have three of her alumni in the United States Senate—LeRoy Percy and John Sharp Williams of Mississippi and Luke Lea of Tennessee.

Dr. E. G. B. Mann, of the Central Methodist Advocate, is conducting a revival for Rev. James A. Chandler at Henderson, Ky., in which much interest is being manifested. On Sunday, the 12th inst., there were twenty-four additions to the Church.

Rev. M. H. Holt, pastor of the M. E. Church, South at Troy, Ala., has declined to accept the position of financial agent of the Woman's College at Montgomery, to which he was recently elected by the Alabama Methodist Board of Education, composed of representatives of the two Annual Conferences of that State.

A revival campaign, led by Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander, was begun in Brooklyn on February 2, and is to be continued through this month. Simultaneous meetings are being held in a number of places in the city, and the services are said to be awakening great interest. It is as true to-day as it ever was, that faithful preaching and earnest personal work will bring men to Christ.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke, the distinguished Presbyterian minister, has recently had conferred upon him by President Fallieres of France the cross of the Legion of Honor. It was bestowed upon him "in appreciation of his merits as an author, teacher, thinker, and poet." The Honorable lecture was delivered by Dr. Van Dyke last year, and evidently must have made a great impression upon the men of letters at the French capital.

Rev. H. M. Blair, editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate, has laid hands upon "a friend of exceptional literary taste and culture" who will pass upon the poetic compositions that find their way into his office. Happy man to have such a friend! Dr. Blair does well, however, to keep unknown the name of his valuable assistant. Evidently our confere in the Old North State is an accomplished diplomat. If we were President, we should be tempted to appoint him Ambassador to the Court of St. James.

President Taft has appointed Cardinal Gibbons a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners in place of the late Archbishop Ryan. We suppose that Mr. Taft felt that the Roman Catholic Church must have representation on this Commission. And, perhaps, also this conviction was accentuated by the fact that the second-term bees are buzzing about the head of our Chief Executive. The itch for Federal office generally awakens a feeling of high regard for the Roman Catholic Church in the bosom of politicians.

The Methodist Recorder and The Southwestern Methodist Protestant, papers published under the direction of the Methodist Protestant Church, have effected a consolidation. The first-named journal is issued at Pittsburg, Penn., and the home of the discontinued organ was Texacana, Texas. Hereafter The Recorder, which is ably edited and most creditable weekly, will have a "Department of the South-west," conducted by the Rev. T. L. Garrison, who is a resident of the Lone Star State and is in touch with the work in that section.

Bogalusa, La., is now said to have one of the most complete and attractive Y. M. C. A. buildings in the South; the gift of Mr. Frank Goodyear, of Buffalo, N. Y., as a memorial to his father who was the founder of Bogalusa, and the first president of the Great Southern Lumber Company and the New Orleans Great Northern Railroad Company. It has a parlor, reading and dining rooms, gymnasium, swimming pool, and every desirable convenience. The structure was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies on Wednesday evening, February 11.

The next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church will meet in Minneapolis in May, 1912. Such was the decision of the Book Committee in session at Chicago last week. The other places competing were Atlantic City, Columbus (Ohio), Des Moines, Indianapolis, and Saratoga Springs. Chicago also proffered her hospitality, but made no fight to secure the gathering. The victorious city is to provide a suitable auditorium and all the necessary conveniences for the meetings, and to bear all local expenses of the General Conference except the board of the delegates and the printing of the Daily Advocate.

The Rev. Patrick John Ryan, Archbishop of Philadelphia, died in that city on February 11. He was born in Ireland February 20, 1831, and was educated chiefly in that country, though he pursued ecclesiastical studies in Carondelet Seminary, in St. Louis, after coming to the United States in 1853. He was one of the most widely known Roman Catholic prelates in America, and was possessed of extraordinary gifts as a public speaker. It was he who delivered the address of presentation when Mr. Cleveland gave a copy of the Constitution of the United States to Pope Leo XIII.

Dr. Henry N. Couden, the blind chaplain of the House of Representatives at Washington, recently celebrated the silver anniversary of his wedding, and was presented by the members of Congress with a silver offering of $300. It is to be hoped that the two branches of the national legislature provide more adequately in a financial way for their chaplains than they did a few years ago. We shall never forget the shock of surprise it gave us, when, in 1899, Dr. W. H. Milburn, then the renowned chaplain of the United States Senate, informed us that his salary was $75 a month.

The report of Miss Ransome, the agent of the Travelers' Aid Society at Jackson, Miss., for the month of January, shows that this organization is doing a most excellent work. Miss Ransome says: "There has not been a day, or scarcely a train, without some woman, girl, or child, coming into my care of their own volition, or being brought by some official of the depot." A rest room has been provided near the railway station, and assistance is promptly given to ladies, young and old, who are traveling alone, or who are weak or indisposed, and to children when they need it. The following are the officers of the society: Mrs. Charles B. Galloway, president; Mrs. C. M. Williamson, vice president; Miss Henrietta Mitchell, secretary, and Mrs. W. E. Pleasant, treasurer. The work of this organization is maintained by public contributions, and persons desiring to give it financial assistance may remit to any one of the officials. The cause is certainly a worthy and deserving one.

The Book Committee of the M. E. Church, which has hitherto in holding its sessions alternated between New York and Cincinnati, met in Chicago on February 3. The members of the Committee were entertained at the Auditorium Hotel, and held their meetings in one of the spacious banquet halls on Michigan Boulevard controlled by the hotel proprietors. Among other things it was decided to reincorporate the "Methodist Book Concern" in New York City and the "Western Book Concern" in Cincinnati under the common name of "The Methodist Book Concern." The establishment will be incorporated in both States and there will be no change in the management of either branch. The earnings of the New York Concern and its allied depositories during the past year were $230,861.09, and those of the Cincinnati House $221,375.24, an increase for the latter over 1909 of $62,973.74, or over 39 per cent. $200,000 was set aside for the superannuate preachers of the Church, to be distributed equally by the two houses.

The "Men and Religion Forward Movement" of which so much is now being said, and of which much more will be heard within the next two or three years, originated with a group of men, who in May, 1910, met in New York City to consider the question of how to reach the men and boys religiously and enlist them in the work of the Church. Another meeting was held at Niagara Falls in August, which arranged for a General Conference that convened in Buffalo in October, with 262 delegates who came from 72 cities and 33 States and Provinces. At this Conference a plan of work was formulated, and a committee of 97 was appointed to put it into effective operation. The scheme is to conduct an evangelistic campaign among the male population in ninety of the leading cities in the United States and Canada. A capable committee will be appointed in each of these cities and the work will be largely done by local leaders, though the general directors will furnish forceful speakers and lend active assistance. From these cities it is expected that the movement will spread to the towns, and that the whole country from ocean to ocean will be influenced by it. It is claimed that the women and girls in the Churches outnumber the men and boys by more than 3,000,000, and the object of the undertaking is to bring more of the latter into the service of the Master. The campaign is expected to cover a period of at least two years. It is interdenominational, and is being actively promoted by the Young Men's Christian Association and the Brotherhoods of the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Episcopal, Disciple, and Congregational Churches. New Orleans is in the list of ninety cities selected by the committee having this work in charge.

GIVE US THE DOCTRINE.

Mr. Editor: I read in last week's issue of your ably edited paper the article under the head, "A Timely Enterprise," which I beg to heartily endorse. Especially do I wish to emphasize that part of it which treats of the need, by the Church, of tracts setting forth succinctly the doctrines of the Methodist Church. You are, I think, correct when you say therein, "Our Church to-day has no duty more imperative than that of informing and indoctrinating her membership." You utter another strong truth when you say, "It is our conviction that the lack of denominational spirit is one of the weaknesses of Methodism, and we fear an increasing weakness." I beg to relate an illustration of the lack of "being grounded in the doctrine," which came under my observation some years ago. I was then principal of one of the city schools of Mississippi. Among my other teachers was a staunch young lady who was a teacher in our Sunday school. A protracted meeting of another denomination was then in progress in our town, and the minister had emphasized the doctrine of his Church on the question of the "Final Perseverance of the Saints," or, once in grace, always in grace. We were discussing the question, and, to my utter surprise, she told me that she believed that a person once saved is always saved, and that this minister had convinced her on that question by his sermon the night before. His meeting closed. I went to my pastor and told him what I had learned. He preached, three sermons, on that subject on the three Sundays following that meeting. In them he forcibly set forth the Methodist doctrine on that subject. He won this young lady completely, and she almost censured her former pastors in a conversation afterwards with me, because they had not taught her in this matter. To-day that lady is one of the most prominent Methodists in the North Mississippi Conference and one of the very best church workers in it. If by chance she reads this little article, she will, I know, forgive me for writing it.

By all means let our "doctrine" be taught. Not that doctrine is religion, but that we may be able to defend the holy principles for which our Church stands. In other words, let us be able to give a ready and intelligent reason why we are Methodists.

An aggressive campaign is being made by commercial organizations throughout the country against a parcels post. The Convention of Southern Merchants, to be held in Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 23, will have this for the principal subject of consideration. Nevertheless, it is probable that the great majority of the people believe that the parcels post would be a great boon.

On Feb. 16, Representative Macon, of Arkansas made a sensational attack in the House on Commander Peary, denouncing him as a "fakir," and declaring that he should be "driven from the naval service." Peary's friends quickly came to his defense and claimed for him the rank of hero. The unfortunate polar controversy is apparently still far from being settled.

Something of a sensation was created last week when Hon. Champ Clark, in a speech before Congress, referred to the subject of the annexation of Canada in a way that gave great offense, both in America and England. The distinguished Congressman from Missouri explained later that he spoke merely in a spirit of fun and had no thought of suggesting the union of the United States and the Dominion.

The standing finance committee in Mississippi for the American Red Cross Society is composed of R. W. Millsaps, Jackson; J. R. Bingham, Carrollton; T. M. Evans, Gulfport; Patric Henry, Brandon; L. B. Relief contributions may be sent to the treasurer, or any member of the committee, and the same will be forwarded to the national treasurer. This information may be of interest to those who desire to contribute to the famine fund for China.

Herbert Knox Smith, commissioner of corporations, in the first installment of his report on the lumber industry in the United States, calls attention to some startling facts. Forty years ago, at least three-fourths of the timber now standing was, it is estimated, publicly owned. Now, about four-fifths of it is privately owned. Three concerns alone own nearly 11 per cent of all the privately owned timber

One-half of the privately owned timber is in the hands of 195 holders. At the present rate of consumption, without making allowance for growth or decay, the present timber supply will last about 55 years. In the South, sixty-seven holders own 39 per cent of the long leaf yellow pine, and 29 per cent of the cypress. This ownership of the timber carries with it also the ownership of land, and, according to the report of the commissioner, this timber and land monopoly is one of the most serious conditions confronting the nation.

BROTHER LAKE DEAD.

I read this announcement in the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It saddened my heart, though I felt sure the dear, venerable brother had been transferred to a brighter home and greater happiness. "The blessing of God; it maketh rich and he addeth no sorrow with it." I felt assured of this by the divine word. Brother Lake needs no praise of man; he has the reward for which we should all strive by faith and fidelity. Often when making his business journeys for Armour and Company, he stopped in the office along the railway route to exhort the young clerks to a life of purity and integrity, and to remember the Lord in their services; and all appreciated his sincerity. He was the Lord's servant while he was Armour's, and his life will illustrate to traveling men that they can combine the Lord's business with any and all others. The Lord's reward is sure and loving. He confers it upon faithful ones who rely on the Lord Jesus Christ and keep his commandments. It was beautiful to witness upon other traveling men the effect of Brother Lake's presence on the cars. They seemed to dismiss at once all fear of accidents, while he slept as calmly and quietly as on his bed at home.

He was noted for his liberality and his promptness in serving the Church. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver. He seemed always ready and willing to praise others for their gifts and good deeds. In these things and many others his example is a most commendable one. He was dear to me and my family.

ASSESSMENTS IN FULL.

Dear Brethren: At the recent Mid-Year Meeting of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions the month of March was set apart as a time for a missionary campaign throughout our Conference, at which time we expect to raise our entire missionary assessments.

We had with us in this meeting every presiding elder of the Conference except one, our Conference lay leader, and three district lay leaders. The session was harmonious and full of interest, as we planned for the extension of the Kingdom of our Lord and the salvation of every soul in our reach. We hereby appeal to every minister and layman in the Conference to co-operate with us to this glorious end. Brethren, let us all resolve that by the help of our Heavenly Father, who has so abundantly blessed us, every dollar of the missionary assessments from our respective churches shall be in the hands of our treasurer by the last of March.

The practical plan suggested is that of the every member, canvass by the missionary committee of each church, the presiding elders, pastors and lay leaders planning the work and leading in the forward movement.

Please remember our motto is, "We can do it and we will." Your brother in Christ,

WM. H. COLEMAN,
Chairman Louisiana Conference Board of Missions.

IN OTHER LANDS.

In winter the Eskimos live in snow houses half buried in the drifts. These houses are neither comfortable nor clean, but they protect the people from the terrible cold, and are the best homes they know. Sometimes as many as fifty people live together, and you can be sure they must be very good-natured to do this. In summer they live in tents and wander about the country, keeping pretty close to the seashore. This is their harvest time, and they fish and hunt, so as to get skins for clothes and food to lay by for the winter.—The King's Builders.

AN UNFOUGHT DUEL.

How the Father of His Country Avenged a Blow. It is narrated that on one occasion in his early manhood Washington came very near the settlement of a dispute, so common in those days, by fighting a duel. But as he was the one who should have issued the challenge, he had the still greater courage to apologize and admit that he was in the wrong.

It was in the town of Alexandria, where the young Virginia colonel was quartered with his troops, that an election dispute occurred, and in the heat of the party excitement Washington told a Mr. Payne that he lied. That gentleman at once replied with a blow that knocked the young colonel down. Word having reached the barracks that their beloved commander had been killed, his soldiers rushed to the city to avenge him. He met them, however, quieted them, and they returned to their quarters.

Mr. Payne, on receiving a note from Washington the next morning asking him to call at his lodgings, supposed it was, of course, to give the colonel opportunity to demand "satisfaction" for the blow he had received the day before. Imagine his surprise when, instead of finding pistols or swords ready for a duel, Washington greeted him with outstretched hand, saying, "I believe I was wrong yesterday. You have already had some satisfaction, and, if you deem that sufficient, here is my hand; let us be friends!"—From H. A. Ogden's "Washington's Ten Narrow Escapes" in March St. Nicholas.

PEN POINTS.

By Rev. L. C. Calhoun.

"Be not many masters," says the apostle. With some of these "masters" it is either "quit, rule or ruin." This reminds this writer of Bishop Fitzgerald's account of the old preacher out in California who preached on the choice of Moses. He said: "Brethren, I want you to notice that choice particularly. He chose to suffer with the people of God, and I tell you God's people are very aggravating sometimes; they like to have aggravated Moses to death."

The mind of Diogenes took a unique turn when he conceived the idea of taking a lantern in the day time to look for a man; he then voiced a need that has continued to be felt to the present time. His search is ever full of suggestion. The outlook for a country is indeed gloomy when the light of a lantern has to be added to that of the sun in order to find a man.

The observation of this writer is that if a man falls out with one preacher and stops attending upon God's ordinances, "he is more than apt" to do so with another. A preacher, though, may have sufficient discretion "to rub him the right way" so as to keep him quiet during his pastorate. There are a good many church members that require a great deal of coddling to keep them in a good humor. This is indeed an unpleasant business.

A Bishop does not appoint preachers arbitrarily, for the authority to do this he receives from the Church. It is his duty to make appointments; and it is as much the duty of members in every pastoral charge to accede to the appointments and conduct themselves accordingly as it is for the preacher. Loyalty is as much required of those in the pew as of those in the pulpit.

If all people were as good as they think that a preacher should be, there would certainly be an orderly citizenship all over the land. It is astonishing what a high moral standard some people hold up for a preacher and what a low one they hold forth for themselves. It shows downright stupidity.

The following has been told of Mr. Webster, the great statesman. He was speaking when a young man, of entering the law business. Some of his friends spoke discouragingly of it to him, saying: "There are so many already in the business that you will not be able to distinguish yourself." He replied: "There is always room at the top."

Concerning Missions.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE W. F. M. S.

Sisters and Friends: I am giving you below a letter which the following facts will cause you to enjoy all the more. It comes from one of our own daughters; it shows the basis of success, which is trust in God while discharging duty, and it gleams hope born of earnest prayer, faithful labor and unwavering confidence in God's promises. This was written in response to one from a Hebrew merchant (a Jew if you will) in Kosciuszko, Miss., who in her earlier years, had helped her in a financial way.

Mark her fearlessness in portraying Christ as the only way of salvation; her confidence in the saving power of the Gospel founded upon the lives of converts to Christianity in China; and for abiding trust in the uplifting and preserving power of God. Let us fellow-workers at home, with united hearts and voices pray that she and all who are upon the "firing line" in that far country, may be used of the Master to accomplish still greater things.

With love, your fellow worker,

MRS. J. P. EVANS.

MISS WASSON'S LETTER.

My Dear Mr. Lowenberg: I did enjoy your letter very much. It would have done me good at any time; but especially when my heart turned to home and friends. (Upon the death of her brother's wife). God was so good in it all and our Savior's promise, "I am with you," was truly fulfilled every day. The same God who called me to leave home and loved ones, and gave me strength to obey, keeps me from being overcome. Not to have felt sorrow would have been inhuman, for I love my people, if possible, more than ever; but there has never been one moment when I have wanted to go back. It was not I but God who chose this life for me, and if I ever change, it will be because He called me to do so.

How I wish you knew some of these splendid Chinese that I know. There would never be, if you did, a doubt of the sincerity of their profession. Some of the most genuine Christians I ever knew have been right here in China. We have in our school now a young woman who gave up a good home, a father well able to provide for her, but who disowned her; everything, in fact, that she might gain Christ, who is to her all in all.

Near Hoochow there is a Buddhist priest who is putting himself on the side of Christianity, and has declared his purpose to confess Christ publicly at the next service. One has already done this. There could certainly be no other than pure motives prompting these men, for it means ostracism by all who have ever cared for them. From a financial standpoint, it means ruin. There is nothing they know how to do. Specializing among the laborers is carried to perfection in China. A coolie can do nothing but a coolie's work, a cook can only cook, a gatekeeper can do nothing but keep gates, and so on through the list. These priests will have to begin at their late age to learn a trade, and it will be hard to find any one to teach them, and harder still to get a place to work.

I wish you could know for yourself the capability of this people. I find them intellectual so far as I have had anything to do with them, or have learned anything about them. As to their moral life, that is of course below par, or we would not need to be here; but they are capable of great development in that respect. It is unfair to judge China and her people by newspaper discussions. These are based upon Chinese as seen in America, who, with the exception of students who go there, are from the lower classes. I should dislike very much for America to be judged by some of her people seen in China.

I am happy to say that my health has been almost perfect since I came here. I hope nobody will be uneasy about me. I am not about myself.

As to uprisings among the Chinese, I am not one bit afraid. Even if there should be an attempt at violence, there is such a strong foreign volunteer force here in Shanghai that it could be stopped at once.

Any way, my Father will not forget His child. I shall depend upon Him, and I know He will guide me right. Even if He should call me to heaven before I consider my work on earth finished, it will be all right.

The paper comes regularly. Thank you for sending it and keeping me in touch with my home county affairs. * * * Only two years till I may hope to be back in dear old Mississippi. That time will soon pass, and I'll be going home before anybody is thinking of it. Sincerely,

JULIA WASSON.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER HARBIN.

The winter vacation is drawing rapidly to a close, and soon work will begin again. I find myself straining at the leash, and getting more anxious every day to get back into the field, whither God has called me. So strong was this call of the work that, despite all resolutions to the contrary, I cut my rest time a little short to get in a meeting otherwise impossible.

The work last year was greatly blessed of God. It was my fortune to labor in some very difficult places, and in places where nearly every one belonged to some Church, yet nearly six hundred people, most of them adults, united with the Church in my meetings.

Personal work becomes every day more important. Nothing will ever supplant or approach the power of the preached Gospel as the God-given power to win souls. Yet, as the battle grows closer, and victory nearer, and the enemy more desperate, hand to hand methods are more and more necessary. In planning for my work for the ensuing year I have cast about for a man to help in my meetings in the important field of personal work. Such a man must be well chosen. A great deal is needed—character, consecration, tact. I think I have found the man, by the direction of the Holy Spirit. In the meeting last winter at Centenary College I was especially impressed with the vigorous Christian character, and direct, sympathetic and powerful manner of dealing with his fellow students, of a young man in the college. This young man has been seasoned by a year of experience in pastoral work in one of the hard fields of the Alexandria District. He will begin with me at the close of the present session and continue with me through the summer. Pastors who secure his services will be fortunate. I append a note from Dr. Hill in regard to him.

I have a few periods of time vacant for the summer. Pastors desiring the services of Brother Boddie and myself will please address me at once. Brother Boddie will assist in each of my summer meetings, in personal work in and between the services.

I pray that God may grant in each of our charges a gracious outpouring of His Spirit, and a mighty revival of religion.

WALTER G. HARBIN.

DR. HILL'S TESTIMONIAL.

Rev. Baker D. Boddie is one of our ministerial students at Centenary College. He is an earnest and excellent young man, and I believe that he has special adaptation to evangelical work. I am pleased to learn that he is to work next summer with my highly esteemed brother, Dr. Walter G. Harbin.

"FACTS WORTHY OF CONSIDERATION."

By Rev. George S. Sexton, D. D.

Bishop A. W. Wilson, addressing an audience in our Fourth Avenue Church, Louisville, Ky., said:

"Excepting, perhaps, Foreign Missions, there is no greater cause before our Church to-day than the effort to erect a representative church building for our people in Washington City. All loyal Methodists should take this matter to heart and respond to the appeal for funds which is now being made."

This same opinion is held by many others, as the short articles which follow will show.

BISHOP JAMES ATKINS, D. D.

Washington is the National Capital, and we are a large and influential part of the nation, so that both religiously and politically, we are under strong obligations to build and ably maintain a representative church there.

We are the dominant religious influence in that region which is destined to re-Americanize America, and save it from foreign influences. We need, on this account, a truly great church in the National Capital.

When the game of political finance, now for some forty years on the stage, has been played out to the ruin and disgust of the common people, they will turn to the South again for leadership, and will get it.

The first work under this order will be to call the people back to religion, as the source of all civic honesty and national welfare. When that time comes it would not look well if, in the interim, we had not shown faith in our gospel, and destiny by rightly founding our Church in the capital.

GOVERNOR G. W. DONAGHEY:

Our Church should erect a great house of worship in Washington, D. C.:

1. Because the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is one of the leading denominations in America, and should be worthily represented in its building at the nation's capital.

2. Because many of our own people are in Government service and deserve the best church opportunities at the capital.

3. Because our people who are well served there will return to their respective homes with greater love and respect for our Church, and better able to render valuable service on their return.

4. Because as patriots we should seek to make the nation's capital spiritually strong, that the highest and best ideals may prevail in our civic life.

5. Because the representatives of foreign nations, where our missionaries labor, will be more likely to secure the respect and co-operation of their own governments for our missionaries.

6. And finally, but first in real importance, because we should honor our Christ with the best that we have, in the best way, before our own people and the world.

BISHOP E. R. HENDRIX.

We should erect a representative church building in Washington City:

1. Because it is OUR capital, "the clearing house of the nation."

2. It is to be the Church home of many Congressmen and Senators and their families, who support their own churches elsewhere. We are honored by having Southern Methodists among the nation's law makers and should house them.

3. Such a church properly interprets our whole Church to the nation as one of the great churches, the second largest Protestant Church of America.

4. The loyal and faithful flock in Washington are worthy of such recognition and help.

5. In great national functions our Church is entitled to a proper share as well as in important national positions.

6. Washington is our national metropolis, where every great Church should be represented by a representative building.

7. Our present church building in Washington is not representative of our whole Church.

We should make common cause of this noble enterprise for it to be representative, and we stand committed to it by General Conference action.

WOMEN WANTED ON SCHOOL BOARDS.

Dear Editor: The Era Club of New Orleans is going to make a determined fight at the 1912 session of the Legislature to have Article 210 of the Louisiana State Constitution amended.

Said article prohibits women from being elected to serve on any board in the State.

It is under this article that women are disqualified from serving on School Boards. They feel sure that the people throughout the State will agree with them, that the interest of the child would be better advanced if women formed part of the Public School Boards.

As the first step towards success, their intention is to bring about organization in each parish of all the men and women in favor of the amendment.

In order to do this they require a chairman for each parish to circulate the petitions the club will send; and they ask through the medium of your paper for the name of intelligent, earnest, volunteers, who will undertake the work, to accept the chairmanship in your town or parish.

The interest in Orleans parish is very intense on this question and the Era Club feels, that if the women of Louisiana will join hands now and work, the fight is won.

Will the women in your parish aid the club in this very important movement? If so, please send their names and address AT ONCE to the Chairman of the School Suffrage Committee, MRS. O. W. CHAMBERLAIN, 214 State Street, New Orleans.

Signed by: Mrs. O. W. Chamberlain, chairman; Mrs. Edgar Whitehead, Mrs. Wm. McCorkendale, Miss Jean M. Gordon, Miss Lillie Richardson, Miss Florence Loeber, LL.D.

GIVE YOUR SUNSHINE TO THE LIVING.

Give your sunshine to the living,
Do not wait till they are dead;
O, there's joy in constant giving,
Human hearts are comforted,
And the giver feels the sunshine
Of the heart's responsive smile,
Knowing that another's pathway
Has been brightened all the while.

Give your blossoms to the living;
Let them have their fragrance now,
Ere their eyes are sealed in slumber
And like marble is their brow.
Often for some loving token
Human hearts have ached and bled;
Give your blossoms to the living,
Do not wait till they are dead.

Give your sunshine to the lonely,
Though they seem but cold and proud,
Oft, perchance, some hidden sorrow
Makes them shun the cheerful crowd,
Give a loving word or token,
Just a pressure of the hand;
Let them know your heart is tender,
Though you may not understand.

Give your heart's love to the fallen;
Oh, they need the tenderest care;
Though you see not their temptation,
They must meet it everywhere.
Oft a word, a smile, a handclasp,
Gives the needed strength and cheer,
Helps them in the bitter conflict,
When the tempter lingers near.

Give your sunshine to the living;
Scatter flowers with eager hand;
You may wake the chord responsive
That will vibrate o'er the land.
Lavish smiles upon the aged;
Cheer the sad ones on their way;
You can make this world an Eden
By the kindness of today.

—Mrs. Mary B. Wingate, in the Christian Guardian.

PROPER CONVERSATION.

Keep clear of personalities in conversation. Talk of things, object, thoughts. The smallest minds occupy themselves with persons. Do not needlessly report ill of others. As far as possible, dwell on the good side of human beings. There are family boards where a constant process of depreciating, assigning motives, and cutting up character goes forward. They are not pleasant places. One who is healthy does not wish to dine at a dissecting table. There is evil enough in man, God knows. But it is not the mission of every young man and woman to detail and report it all. Keep the atmosphere as pure as possible, and fragrant with gentleness and charity.—John Hall.

ANYWAY YOU PLEASE.

"Mamma, I wish you'd call the baby in; he's so cross we can't play!" cried Robert one day as he was playing in the yard with his sister and the baby.

"I don't think he would be cross if you were not cross to him," said mamma, coming out. "He does just as he sees you do. Just try him and see. Put your hat on one side of your head."

Robert did so, and presently the baby pushed his straw hat over on one side of his head just as Robbie had done.

"Whistle," said mamma.

Robbie did, and the baby began to whistle, too.

"Stop mocking me," said Robbie, giving baby a push.

Baby screamed and pushed Robbie back.

"There, you see," said his mother, "the baby does just as you do. Kiss him now, and you see how quickly he will follow your example."

Robbie did not feel exactly like doing this, but he did, and baby hugged and kissed him back very warmly.

"Now, you see," said his mother, "you can make a cross or a good boy of your little brother, just which ever you choose. But you must teach him yourself."

A FINLAND BOY'S BATH.

When the boys of Finland want to take a bath, this is the way they do it, we are told by a writer in one of the children's papers:

In the first place, it is very, very cold in Finland, and the bathroom is not in the house at all, but in a building quite separate.

It is a round building, about the size of an ordinary room. There are no windows; so light and air can come in only when the door is open. Inside, the benches are built all along the wall, and in the center is a great pile of loose stones. Early on Saturday morning wood is brought in, and a great vessel, standing near the stone, is filled with water.

Then some one cuts ever so many birch switches, and these are placed on the floor of the bath house. Next a fire is made under the stones, and it burns all morning. In the afternoon, when the stones are very hot, the fire is put out, the place is swept clean, and all is ready.

The boys undress in their houses and run to the bath house. As it is often thirty degrees below zero out of doors, they do it in double-quick time.

As soon as they are in the bath-house they shut the door tight and begin to throw water on the hot stones. This, of course, makes the steam rise. More water is thrown on, and there is more steam until the place is quite full.

And now comes the part I think you boys would not like at all. Each boy takes a birch switch and falls to whipping his companions. This is to make the blood circulate; and, though it is a real hard whipping, no one objects, but all think it great fun. At last, looking like a lot of boiled lobsters, they all rush out and have a roll in the snow.—Apples of Gold.

HER BEST PRESENT.

Effie Stevens.

Jessie felt very happy as she walked down town that bright Saturday morning. In the little red purse which she carried were three shining new nickels, and with them she intended buying a pretty valentine for Miss Foster, her dearly loved Sunday school teacher.

"It was good of mother to give me so much money," Jessie was thinking joyfully as she sped along.

During the past week Nina Roberts had learned that Miss Foster's birthday came upon St. Valentine's Day. She had lost no time in imparting the delightful secret to the six other members of the class, and together they had made the plan to surprise their teacher by each of them giving her a valentine for a present.

As St. Valentine's Day came on Sunday, the girls decided to give Miss Foster the valentines directly after Sunday school.

"Hello!" called Grace Owen, a member of the class, from her own doorstep, as Jessie was passing. "I've got my valentine for Miss Foster. Are you after yours?"

"Yes," Jessie replied with a smile as she hurried on her way.

When Jessie came in sight of Mr. Warren's store, in the window of which was displayed a gay assortment of valentines, she saw a shabbily dressed little girl, whom she knew, standing before the window.

"Going to buy some valentines, Maggie?" Jessie asked thoughtlessly, as she halted beside the other little girl.

Then, as she saw the pained look upon Maggie's face, she wished she had been more thoughtful. Of course Maggie wasn't going to buy any valentines. She was too poor. Her father was dead and her mother had to work very hard to procure the bare necessities of life for her little family.

Maggie shook her head soberly.

"I just wish I had the money to buy a cheap one for my little sister," she said, longingly. "She's sick, you know. I read her a story in the paper I get at Sunday school about a girl who had a valentine sent to her by some unknown friend, and ever since Bessie has been talking about it and hoping that some one would send her a valentine. She will be so disappointed when she doesn't receive one. She's so little she doesn't know that valentines cost a lot."

Jessie's sympathetic little heart was so touched that she wished that she had money enough to buy a valentine for little Bessie; but she only had the fifteen cents and that was for Miss Foster's valentine.

Then an idea came to Jessie that quite startled her.

"Oh, I couldn't do that!" she thought. "I don't want to do it."

But in a moment she had bravely put her own selfishness aside. Miss Foster would have six valentines anyway, and if she knew about Maggie's little sister she would rather she had the valentine than to have it herself. Yes, she would give the valentine to little sick Bessie instead of to Miss Foster.

Her voice trembled, however, as she said: "Come on in and help me pick out a pretty valentine for Bessie. I am going to send her one."

Maggie's thin little face fairly glowed with delight as she followed Jessie into the store, and Jessie felt repaid for her sacrifice.

The next day Jessie sat soberly at the farther end of the pew while the other girls crowded around Miss Foster to give her their valentines.

Of course she was glad that she had made little Bessie happy. Still, the sacrifice she had made seemed harder now than it had yesterday.

She could not bear to have Miss Foster think that she did not love her as much as the other girls did; and yet, since she didn't know anything about Bessie, wouldn't she think that, when Jessie was the only member of the class who had not remembered her birthday?

Jessie could scarcely keep back her tears when she saw the look of pleasure upon Miss Foster's face as she thanked them for the pretty valentines.

"Why, Jessie, where's your valentine for Miss Foster?" asked Grace Owen, suddenly.

"I—I haven't any," stammered poor Jessie in a choking voice.

"You told me you were going to buy her one yesterday," said Grace, accusingly.

"I know I did, but I bought one for some one else instead," Jessie replied, with quivering lips.

Then, unable to control herself any longer, she burst into tears.

Miss Foster came and put her arms about Jessie.

"What is it, dear?" she whispered. "Teacher doesn't mind if you didn't get her a valentine. She knows you love her, anyway."

Then Jessie sobbed out the whole story of Maggie's little sick sister and her longed-for valentine, and how she had given her the valentine intended for her teacher.

"That's the very best birthday present you could have given me, dear," Miss Foster said, her eyes shining, as she gave Jessie a little hug. "I shall always remember it, for it cost more than money. It meant sacrifice to a little girl with a loving, sympathetic heart."—From Zion's Herald.

NOW IS THE TIME.

Many of our pastors and friends have done efficient work for the Advocate within the past few weeks, and we assure them of our appreciation and most hearty thanks. But much yet remains to be done. In quite a number of charges clubs of subscribers sent in last year are now expiring, and unless they are promptly renewed hundreds of names will soon have to be stricken from our lists. This means the loss of much to the Conference organ, and we believe that it also means a distinct loss to the Methodist homes into which the Advocate will no longer find its way. Bishop Morrison in an article, recently published, said: "Next to the Word of God there is nothing more helpful to the intelligence and moral and religious growth of the family than the weekly visits of the church paper." We do not think that this statement is one whit too strong.

We desire to repeat and emphasize that now is the best time to present the claims of the Advocate. The record of years shows that the first three or four months of the year are the ones that bring to us most of our subscriptions. Money will be scarcer a little later and it will be more difficult to induce the people to take the paper. To put off securing renewals and postpone the effort to secure new subscribers, will mean in most cases that the work will not be successfully done.

As we have said over and over again, our reliance is upon our busy, burdened pastors. We know the many tasks they have to perform, and not the slightest disposition have we to find fault with them. But we desire them to know that, along with the other interests of the Church, the Conference organ is chiefly dependent upon their efforts. Upon this point we quote Dr. James Cannon, the editor of the Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate, who has had large experience in the field of religious journalism:

"The only certain way to get subscribers to any Conference paper is by personal effort. The two Georgia Conferences, at their recent sessions, pledged an increase of 2,500 subscriptions to the Wesleyan Advocate. The pledges were made very largely by the pastors, and will be redeemed by their personal effort. Premiums and letters get a few subscribers, but nobody can reach the membership like the pastor, who presents the paper in every pulpit on his charge, and follows the public statement with private effort. But the private appeal is more necessary than the public statement."

We have been talking of 10,000 subscribers as the number we should strive to reach during the present year. If we are to realize this aim, substantial gains must be made during the next two or three months. Hence, we appeal to every pastor to make a faithful effort in behalf of the Advocate at the earliest day possible. The Wesleyan Christian Advocate is asking of the 200,000 Methodists of Georgia, 20,000 subscribers; the Texas Christian Advocate is asking of the 250,000 Methodists of that State, 30,000, and surely it is not unreasonable for us to ask of the 145,000 Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi, the modest number of 10,000.

We desire to iterate that it is not for ourself we make this appeal. The number of subscribers means little to us personally. We expect our connection with the New Orleans Advocate to be of brief duration. It is solely because of our conviction that the welfare of the Church in this territory imperatively demands that a strong organ shall be maintained and circulated, that we are importuning with such urgency our preachers and people to rally to the support of their paper. If every brother will lend a hand in this important campaign within the next three or four weeks, there is little doubt that the results will be highly gratifying. Shall we not make this movement a success? We can, if we will.

BOOKS GALORE.

If Solomon said in his day, "Of making many books there is no end," what would he have said had he lived in this time of the linotype and steam and electrical printing presses? Indeed, the output of our large number of publishing houses is now so great that it is utterly impossible for any one man, no matter what his wealth or mental equipment, to read even approximately the current literature of the passing year. The New York Independent, in its issue of January 16, shows that to read all of the authors who annually issue a book, one would have to average five volumes every hour from January 1 until the last day of December. This ably edited periodical says:

"Last year broke the record for book production in the United States. With a total of 13,470 for the first time passed the English total of 10,804 and became a close second to the German, which, calculated on the same basis as ours, is probably about 14,000. France comes fourth in the list, with about 9,000. Taking into consideration the immense mass of our periodical literature, only part of which ever gets into book form, there is no doubt that we do more reading than any other nationality. About one-third of the books appearing in the United States are by English or other foreign authors."

But what kind of books are our presses turning out? This is an interesting question, because it gives some idea of the mental pabulum upon which our people are feeding. According to our great contemporary, fiction leads with 1,303 publications, and 935 books for young people which might properly be included in this class. Next comes theology and religion with 894 new works, which is said to be the closest rival of fiction in popularity both in the United States and England. The Bible continues by far to be the "best seller" of any volume in existence; and "books of a new genus, that might be called 'the literature of optimistic suggestion,' have become amazingly popular within recent years."

We offer two reflections upon this instructive summary showing the variety and volume of our national "book crop," furnished by The Independent:

1. There is cause for encouragement in the fact that there is such a widespread public demand for religious literature. It proves incontrovertibly that our people are still immensely interested in the supreme question of man's relation to God and eternity. Men are not apt to go wholly astray so long as they think on such subjects. It is when the Infinite Being is shut out of their reflections that they become given over to depravity and corruption. When the Psalmist "thought on his ways," he "turned his feet to the testimonies" of the Lord.

2. Where there is such a multiplicity of books one needs to be careful to read only what is worth while. He should select with painstaking discrimination the volumes which are most helpful, and guard against wasting his time upon those that are of little value. It is not enough that a work should merely please and entertain; it belongs to the best class only when it instructs, inspires, and leaves the mind and heart strengthened, enriched and ennobled. The young minister has scarcely a more serious problem than that of determining what he shall read. And happy, indeed, is he if he has an older friend capable of giving him wise counsel in the settlement of this question. Nor is this a matter which concerns the young preacher alone. In it every boy and girl in the land is also vitally interested. Thoughts lose none of their power to bless or curse by being embodied in type. Characters and lives may be largely made or marred by one's reading. By means of the printed page we may commune with the choicest spirits of all time, until that fellowship transforms us and qualifies us to be their fit companions, or we may keep the company of the impure until our souls are as soiled and groveling as theirs. Christian parents have no more imperative duty to perform than that of properly directing the reading of their children.

UNMASKED IN ETERNITY.

We sometimes hear it said that the world appraises men at very nearly their true moral worth; that as the months and years pass one is very apt to rise or sink to his proper level in society. But scarcely any statement could be further from the truth than this. Even if its standard of measurement were correct, the finite mind could not rightly estimate character, because its vision is largely limited to the realm of outward conduct. It cannot look into the inner depths of the soul and discover and weigh the motives and purposes of an individual, which are the things that disclose his real personality. The human spirit, which is really the man, is veiled by the flesh, and of it we catch only occasional glimpses; we can communicate with it only by means of signs and symbols. It is doubtful whether any two persons on earth fully know and understand each other. People living in the same community only signal as they pass, like ships at sea. What lies covered in another's breast, no one can with certainty tell. This power of man to maintain secrecy so far as his fellow-beings are concerned, enables many who are vicious to pose as if they were virtuous and command a measure of confidence and respect, when if their true characters were known people would shrink in horror from them. The undetected murderer walks abroad with hands as white and unstained as those which have been stretched forth only to bless humanity; the thief, with ill-gotten gains in his possession, associates with upright men and prelates of honesty, and the lecherous beast, who in the darkness stealthily finds his way to the brothel, mingles in the social circle with the pure and good.

But this is only for a brief time. Sin will in every instance ultimately be exposed. Hypocrisy belongs to time—there will be none of it in eternity. Death will tear from every man his mask and his real self will stand forth clear and manifest so that none can mistake it. The Master said, "There is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known." It is not to God that our sins will be disclosed in the judgment—he knows them already as well as we will ever know them. It is to an assembled universe that they will be laid bare; not by any inquisitorial process—that will not be needed—for spirit will be able to secrete nothing from spirit. Most impressively does Theodosia Garrison set forth this tremendous truth, that all deception as to one's character and life must end at the tomb, in her somewhat weird poem entitled "Stains:"

The three ghosts on the lonesome road
Spoke each to one another,
"Whence comes that stain about your mouth
No lifted hand may cover?"
"From eating of forbidden fruit,
Brother, my brother."

The three ghosts on the sunless road
Spoke each to one another,
"Whence comes that red burn on your foot
No dust nor ash may cover?"
"I stamped a neighbor's hearth-flame out,
Brother, my brother."

The three ghosts on the windless road
Spoke each to one another,
"Whence comes that blood upon your hand
No other hand may cover?"
"From breaking of a woman's heart,
Brother, my brother."

"Yet on the earth clean men we walked,
Glutton and Thief and Lover;
White flesh and fair it hid our stains
That no man might discover."
"Naked the soul goes up to God,
Brother, my brother."

PRESIDENT W. H. SMITH.

By a unanimous vote the Trustees of the State Normal College of Mississippi, which is to be located at Hattiesburg, have elected Professor W. H. Smith of Holmes County to the presidency of that institution. In our judgment, a more capable and worthy man could nowhere have been found, and those charged with the responsibility of launching this new enterprise are to be congratulated upon the choice which they have made. Beginning as a teacher in the small public schools, Professor Smith has steadily forged his way upward until to-day he easily takes rank with the foremost educators in Mississippi. Everywhere that he has worked he has left behind a good record. As the superintendent of Education of Holmes County, he exhibited administrative abilities of so superior a character that they attracted the attention of the managers of the Peabody Fund, who opened to him a wider sphere of service by naming him for his present position—that of supervisor of the rural schools of his State. Mr. Smith is a studious, practical, and growing instructor, who believes in keeping abreast of modern methods, and holds that the mission of education is to reach and uplift the masses. He is a man of correct habits and life—a Christian gentleman, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. We predict that the Mississippi Normal College will soon attain to a high degree of efficiency under the guiding hand of this strong and aggressive leader.

GENERAL CONFERENCES IN ABUNDANCE.

The Alabama Christian Advocate, of February 16, says: "Our exchanges are having much to say about Methodist union or federation. Many and various are the opinions expressed. We believe that the solution, and the only solution, is five General Conferences, four white, and one colored, with a federal council supervising all." To be sure! Why not divide a plenty while we are at it?

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Bishop W. B. Murrah, who is formally to open the new Parker Memorial Church of this city on April 16, will preach at Felicity Street Church at the evening hour of that day. An unusual treat is in store for these two expectant congregations.

Rev. A. H. Williams, in charge of the Shuqualak work, reports that at Cooksville, Miss., one of his appointments, the people are spending several hundred dollars to improve and beautify the church.

Rev. W. R. Williams, who is serving the Mt. Pleasant charge, North Mississippi Conference, finds his work pleasant and encouraging. He says, "Everything is progressing favorably. The people have been kind to us in every way, and we are expecting a year of large success."

Rev. W. A. Hays, of Bay Springs, Miss., serves an appreciative and responsive people. The outlook for the year is encouraging, and the pastor is faithfully laboring for the spiritual uplift of his people.

Rev. H. R. Singleton, the presiding elder, requests us to state that the Shreveport District Conference will open Tuesday night, April 18, with a sermon by Bishop Murrah, who will preside over the meeting.

We regret to learn of the death of Mr. James Brice Theus, a member of our Church at Arcadia, La., and a brother of Mrs. H. R. Singleton. He died on Friday, Feb. 17. We extend our sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family and friends.

Rev. M. M. Black, of Philadelphia, Miss., continues to show his interest in the Advocate and to prove his efficiency, by sending us a splendid list of subscribers. The Mississippi Conference has no more capable member than Brother Black.

Rev. R. E. Rutledge, of the Mississippi Conference, desires us to call attention to the fact that his post-office address is Daleville, Miss., instead of Vimville, Miss., as it appears in the Conference Journal. His correspondents will please take notice.

The subscription notes to the endowment fund of Millsaps College are now in the hands of Major R. W. Millsaps, Jackson, Miss. Many of them are past due, and those who possibly can, are urged to pay at the earliest day possible. This is a matter of great importance.

Rev. C. Wesley Baley, of Courtland, Miss., has had sickness during the winter, which has interfered somewhat with his work, nevertheless he reports that all goes well in his charge. We trust that returning health will render even more efficient this faithful servant of the Church.

Rev. E. J. Coker, of Taylorsville, Miss., is delighted with his work. Under date of Feb. 15, he writes: "This is our first year on the charge, but since our arrival we have been the recipients of such kind consideration at the hands of our people that we feel very much at home among them."

The work in Tupelo, Miss., continues to prosper under the wise leadership of Rev. Wm. L. Duren. He has our thanks for a large list of subscribers recently sent in. He states that Mrs. S. A. Ford and Mrs. D. W. Robins deserve the credit for this good work. To them also, we express our sincere appreciation.

The Picayune is now devoting a full page of its Monday issues to the sermons delivered by the New Orleans pastors the Sabbath preceding. And in so doing, it is giving its numerous patrons some excellent reading matter. We know of no other secular paper in the South that devotes anything like this amount of space to homiletic literature.

Dr. S. H. Werlein's sermon last Sunday evening was on "The Reign of the Beast"—the sin of unchastity. It was a strong and stirring arraignment of this widely prevalent vice and a plea for virtuous living. The Doctor's series of discourses on current evils has been of a very high order, and these vigorous and timely deliverances have no doubt accomplished much good.

Rev. J. D. Wroten, who is attending Millsaps College and filling the pastorate at Duck Hill, Miss., summarizes the situation in his charge as follows: "The prospect is gratifying in my field of labor. I have recently organized an Epworth League at Duck Hill with 20 members. Our Sunday school is wide-awake and promises well. I am pleased with the general interest that is being manifested."

The Methodist parsonage at Grand Cane, La., was the scene of a splendid banquet given by the popular pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. W. R. Harvell, to the official members of the charge, twenty in number, on Thursday evening the 16th inst. The occasion was the first Quarterly Conference, and after the banquet good reports were made concerning all departments of the church. A good year is promised.

We acknowledge the reception of 19 subscriptions from the Lula and Lyon charges, sent in by the pastor, Rev. J. J. Garner, who reports that the people have given him a cordial welcome and that his work is moving on smoothly. Brother Garner adds, "These Delta people know how to do things." In this he is correct, and the more he knows of them, the higher will be his appreciation of their many fine qualities.

In a recent personal note to the editor, Rev. Robert B. Downer, now a resident of Jackson, Miss., says: "I am quite feeble physically, but am able to sit in my chair all day long. I long to hear of the presence in power of the coming revival. I think I hear a stir in the mulberry tops." The statement in last week's Advocate concerning the hand of praying women at Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, greatly cheered my heart. May God bless them, and may bands be formed elsewhere!"

Rev. George Jackson, who is a beloved superannuate of the Louisiana Conference, desires us to state that his present address is Temple, Texas.

Mrs. Charles B. Galloway, of Jackson, Miss., is visiting friends at Tampa, Florida, where it is reported she will spend the remainder of the winter.

Rev. C. C. Miller, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office this week. The editor regrets having missed him.

The following brethren have sent us subscribers recently, for which they have our sincere thanks: R. H. Barr, J. H. Jamieson, W. DeLoach, David Ulmer, Thos. E. Yancey, W. W. Perry, W. S. Crook, W. J. Porter, Jas. G. Galloway, S. M. Thames, F. A. Howell, E. L. Alford, J. W. Ward.

Mrs. J. W. Mason, of Benoit, Miss., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, favors us with the following items of interest: "Our pastor, Dr. J. W. Price, is popular and growing in the esteem of the people. Mr. Mason has just passed his 75th birthday, and is as full of energy as ever." Brother and Sister Mason are among the true and tried Methodists of the Mississippi Delta, and their home has long been a shelter for weary itinerants.

The old church building has been torn away at Aberdeen, Miss., and bids have been invited for the construction of a new house of worship to cost between $30,000 and $40,000. The following gentlemen constitute the building committee: Dr. W. G. Sykes, Mr. J. F. Plant, Judge J. M. Acker, Mr. Gaston Therrell, and Mr. C. L. Tubb. Brother Murrah is in high favor with his flock, and we trust that he will soon be discoursing to them in such a church as will do full credit to the historic Methodism of the Monroe County capital.

The Epworth Methodist Church of this city continues to prosper under the leadership of its energetic pastor, the Rev. L. A. Sims. Six members have recently been received into the church, and there have been 57 additions to the Sunday school within the past three weeks. On Sunday, the 12th inst. (an inclement day), the number present at Sabbath school was 178, and the Sunday preceding, the attendance was 201. Mr. W. C. McElroy is the capable superintendent of this growing school. Brother Sims will begin a series of revival services on April 1, which will be conducted by Rev. W. G. Harbin.

Rev. J. W. Honnoll, of Tunica, Miss., under date of the 13th inst., writes: "I am very much encouraged in my work. Our congregations are good and growing, and our Sunday schools are all doing well." It would be a strange people who would not respond to such a ministry as that of this noble veteran, who both as a preacher and pastor measures up to an unusually high standard. More than we have words to express we thank Brother Honnoll for the following statement: "I think of you continually and pray for you by name every day." One can have no better asset than the prayers of a godly man.

Rev. W. L. Duren, president of the North Mississippi Conference Board of Missions, is making an earnest effort to increase the circulation of missionary literature among the preachers and people. He is offering The Missionary Review of the World, published by Funk and Wagnalls and the most comprehensive missionary periodical issued in America, for $1.50—new subscriptions. The regular price of this journal is $2.50, and this reduction is by a special arrangement with the publishers and can be taken advantage of only when orders are sent through Brother Duren, whose address is Tupelo, Miss. The Corinth and Aberdeen Districts have already sent in 26 subscribers.

We have it from an authoritative source that Rev. T. W. Lewis has made a great impression upon the congregation of First Church, Memphis. He is having magnificent audiences, and the people are said to be disappointed when even a Bishop preaches in his stead. A gentleman who has been connected with this flock for twenty years and is a competent judge, was recently heard to say that not since he has been waiting upon the ministry of the Word from this pulpit has it been more acceptably filled. None of this surprises us. We have long known that all Brother Lewis lacked of being one of the most sought-after giraffes in the connection was a willingness to roam around.

The Committee on General Conference entertainment will hold its initial meeting in Nashville, Tenn., on March 29, according to the announcement made in this issue by Mr. T. B. King, of Memphis, the chairman. By every token, New Orleans is the place for the next session of the General Conference. It has magnificent railroad facilities, hotel accommodations second to no city in our territory, and can easily provide every needed convenience. The Louisiana Conference at its last session unanimously adopted a resolution inviting the great law-making body of Methodism to hold its next meeting here, and appointed Dr. J. M. Henry, Dr. S. H. Werlein, and Dr. F. S. Parker a committee to present properly the claims of the Crescent City.

From the Jackson Daily News of the 16th inst., we appropriate the following: "Water from the River Jordan was used yesterday in the baptism of the children of Mrs. Wilbur F. Gibbs of Huntsville, Tex., Bishop W. B. Murrah performing the interesting ceremony. This water from the Jordan was brought to Jackson sixteen years ago by the late Bishop Charles B. Galloway. During his visit to the Holy Land Bishop Galloway secured five or six bottles of this water, had it filtered and sterilized and brought it the long journey to his home in Jackson, where some of it still remains. Most of his own children and those of several of his special friends were baptized with it. Mrs. Gibbs was formerly Miss Annie Nugent, a daughter of the late Col. W. L. Nugent, of this city, who was a warm personal friend of Bishop Galloway; and Mrs. Galloway took great pleasure in furnishing the water."

Rev. J. C. Mimms, of Fort Worth, Texas, and Mr. A. F. Fitch, city passenger and ticket agent of the St. Louis Southern Railway Company, at Dallas, have organized The Southern Tourist Company, which has its headquarters in the latter city. Brother Mimms will personally conduct a party upon a European tour beginning June 17th and ending August 5—58 days. The countries visited will be Scotland, England, Holland, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Italy and France. Mr. Mimms has been abroad before, and is an experienced traveler. We know him to be thoroughly trustworthy, his terms are moderate, and persons interested would do well to write him at Fort Worth. Mr. Fitch is arranging for tours through the western and northwestern parts of the United States and Canada, and any one contemplating such a trip may address him at 814 Commerce Street, Dallas, Texas.

We acknowledge the reception of a copy of the report of the secretary and treasurer of the board of stewards of the Methodist Church at Clarksdale, Miss., which position has been filled for many years by Brother J. H. Johnson, one of the leading business men of that city. This booklet presents a neat appearance, and furnishes much interesting information. It gives a list of the officials and entire membership, contains an address from the pastor to the people, shows where every dollar collected during the year came from and how it was applied, and even has a memorial page to honor the dead. We have seen many Year-Books issued by pastors, but this is the first time that we have known such a pamphlet to be published by a layman. Brother Johnson is the most methodical and efficient manager of church finances with whom we have ever come in contact, and under his splendid leadership the Clarksdale Church is moving steadily forward. It now pays its pastor $1,500, and the indication is that in a few years it will scarcely be second to any charge in the North Mississippi Conference.

FERRY'S SEEDS.

We acknowledge the reception of D. M. Ferry & Company's "Seed Annual for 1911," a most interesting and attractive pamphlet, and of a choice collection of seeds for planting. This firm, whose headquarters are at Detroit, Michigan, is one of the oldest of the kind in the United States, and has long enjoyed an excellent reputation. They handle products second to none in quality, and are in every way reliable. Gardeners will make no mistake to order their seeds from this house.

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over two hundred words in length will be published free of charge. All over two hundred words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around.

The 25th of December, 1910, was the saddest Christmas that ever came to our home; for it was that day that our little darling ALLIE, while enjoying her fruits, caught fire, and after nearly a week's suffering, she passed from this earth to join the redeemed throng and sing redemption's holy song. We miss her, Oh, we miss her! We know not why God saw fit to take her, but we know his purpose was good. We cannot hear her sweet voice in the home any more; her place in the Sunday school is vacant; she cannot run to meet papa now. But thank God, when this weary life is ended and the chilly tide is crossed, I shall see my little darling! She will meet me at the gate and her smiles will be much brighter and her voice will be much sweeter. Heaven seems so much nearer and the crown so much dearer that we can only count it a blessing in disguise that our little one has gone to rest—both the rest of the body and the rest of the soul. She is ours still, and soon we shall be with her to part no more.

"Her papa," A. H. STEELE.

On December 25, 1910, Mr. A. R. STEVENSON, who soon would have been 76 years of age, entered into rest. He was a devoted Christian, true to his God, loyal to his church, and kind in his home. He lived and practiced what he believed to be right. His every day walk was an evidence to his friends that he was a fit subject to meet his Savior. Now this dear one is missed, no one can ever know except those who have gone through a similar experience! But it draws us all nearer heaven to lose loved ones, if we have faith in the precious one who said, "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God; believe also in me." He was a member of the Methodist Church, having joined years ago. His membership was at Lebanon, in which neighborhood he had lived for half a century. He leaves six boys, three girls and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss. His dear companion and one daughter preceded him to the other shore some years ago. May the God of the living ever watch and comfort the bereaved until they join our ascended brother on high. H. W. SCOTT.

Mr. EDWIN MATHIS was born in Henry County, Ga., Oct. 7, 1825, and died at Middleton, Miss., Jan. 16, 1911, aged 85 years, 3 months and 11 days. He came to Mississippi in 1844, and settled in Lauderdale County. In 1854, he came to Clarke County and settled in the home where he breathed his last. In 1851, he was happily married to Miss Caroline Houtwell, of Choctaw County, Ala., who still survives him. To this union eleven children were born, all surviving him except one son. Their names are: George W., of Middleton, Miss.; John C. and Mrs. R. A. McLemore, of Petal, Miss.; Jas. B., Mrs. J. D. Fisher and Mrs. A. M. McLemore, of Quitman, Miss.;

Mrs. L. A. Irby, of Energy, Miss.; Mrs. L. C. Williams, of Stonewall, Miss.; Dr. E. J. Mathis, of Enterprise, Miss.; Mrs. Dr. H. P. Smith, of New Augusta, Miss., and William Breckenridge who has already gone to his reward. He was the grandfather of ninety-four children, and great-grandfather of twenty-four. Seventy-two of his grandchildren survive him. He joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1847, with a determined resolution, as he was often heard to say, of serving his divine Master. He was a consistent member of the Church throughout his long life. He was a diligent student of the Bible, always taking it as his guide. He did his own thinking, doing it honestly, and he lived as he thought. He was very conscientious in all his dealings with his fellow-man. He could always be relied upon to meet his obligations, for he considered his word as binding as his bond. He was never known to utter an oath. He would often go to his loved ones and friends and talk to them about the welfare of their souls. His chief pleasure was in ministering to the wants of others. He was always willing and ready to help those who were in distress. He was liberal in giving to every good cause. His influence lives to-day in the lives of his children and grandchildren, for they are all following in his footsteps. He was in poor health for about two years, during which time his sufferings were very great. But he bore them with Christian patience and fortitude. When he knew that death was at hand, he conversed with his family and said that he was ready to go. He could look back over his past life and say there was nothing to regret, and that all was well. He told some of his children who were present good-bye and exhorted them to meet him in heaven. His last words were: "Bless the Lord; O my soul; bless his holy name. Lord, come and bear me away to my immortal home." His pastor, Brother Hilary Westbrook, performed his burial service in the presence of a large concourse of people who had gathered to pay their last tribute of respect to him who commanded their love and esteem. We sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we believe in Him who "is able to keep that which we have committed unto him against that day."

A DAUGHTER.

Brother GEORGE W. JERNIGAN, the subject of this sketch, was born near Old Bethlehem Church, Marshall County, Aug. 9, 1841. When he was about nine years of age his parents moved to Pontotoc County and settled six miles west of Pontotoc town, where little George grew up to manhood. He made a profession of Christianity when but a youth, and joined Palestine Methodist Church, where he held his membership at the time of his death. He was for many years an active worker in the church, serving as trustee, steward and teacher of the Bible class in the Sunday school. He gave three years of loyal service to his government, during the Civil War, after which he settled down to farming. On March 8, 1866, he was married to Miss Fannie Newell, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Newell. There came to this union eleven children—four of whom preceded the father to the spirit land. Seven are left to mourn the loss of their devoted father, as well as also to comfort their loving mother. This union must have been made by the Lord—a model father, a model mother, and a model family of children. I don't think I ever saw a happier family, and I have known them for twenty-nine years. Brother Jernigan was stricken with pneumonia, and six days later, Jan. 15, at 11:40 o'clock a. m., he fell asleep in Jesus, and went home to live with God. On the following day he was carried to the family burying ground, and with Brother J. T. Lockhart officiating, he was laid to rest, to await the general resurrection. We shall meet again.

Tidings from the Field

Wilson, La.:

Dear Doctor Meek: We feel like that our lot has fallen in a pleasant place on the Wilson circuit. The people have received us kindly. I have visited every home in Wilson since coming here. My congregations are increasing at every service. We have had ten accessions to the Church. We are arranging for a meeting to begin here the third Sunday in this month. Brother D. E. Kelly, of Purvis, Miss., will help me. I am not forgetting the Advocate. I send two renewals and hope to send more soon.

Yours fraternally,

F. N. SWEENEY.

Louisville, Miss.:

My second year here opens up most auspiciously. Never in all my ministry has the outlook been brighter. There is an increased attendance on all church services. The attendance in Sunday school is 25 per cent larger than at any time last year. We organized a Sunday school class of ladies, which we named "The Housekeepers' Class," on the fifth Sunday of January, with eighteen members, and the Sunday following the number had increased to twenty-six. We are arranging to organize a Baraca class for the young men and a "Busy Men's Class" for the older men of the church. We are very much handicapped just now in our Sunday school work for lack of room, but we have plans on foot for enlarging the church, which we hope to accomplish soon.

We have been busy with other interests of the church, and have not had time to stress the interest of The Advocate, but will get busy in the near future and send you some subscribers.

S. B. MYERS, P. C.

Pollock, La.:

The work here has had some recent developments, which, I think, are worth mentioning. Arriving on Tuesday after Conference adjourned, I went to work visiting the folk, filling the appointments, and looking after the Sunday school interests. Our school at Pollock being without a superintendent, we elected that indefatigable worker, Mr. W. A. Brown, bookkeeper for the Iron Mountain Lumber Company, and recently of Trout. In January Brother Lowery, our Sunday School Missionary, came to us, bringing new inspiration and a good uplift. The results are an organized school from the Cradle Roll to the Home Department, equipped with our graded literature. Our school, recently organized at Rochelle, had an auspicious beginning last Sunday under the superintendency of Mr. J. E. Gaar. It is organized from the Cradle Roll to the Home Department, and uses our graded literature. The board of stewards at Pollock met early in January and fixed the pastor's salary, arranging for half time. At Rochelle, our W. H. M. S., which is composed of as fine lot of women as I have ever met with, have a committee who have arranged for the salary to be paid monthly through the office of the Tremont Lumber Company. The pastor gives two Sundays here also. The work moves on, and we are hoping and praying for a revival and the salvation of many souls in these sawmill towns. Pray for us.

A. RUFUS HOFFFAUR.

February 14.

Logtown, Miss.:

I wish I could write you of all the good things that have come to us since we came to this delightful charge. The brethren who have served here will understand when I say the reputation of former years has been fully sustained. We are remembered almost every day in some pleasant way. Such kindness cannot fail to inspire a greater resolve to loving service, and a fervent desire to be a blessing to so kind a people. We are glad to report a large increase in attendance upon all services of the sanctuary within the last month, and the prospect for a successful year is indeed encouraging. On the fifth Sunday in January we began a series of services in the lovely little town of Pearlinton, preaching each night until the twelfth night had been reached, and some said, "Let the services continue." From the first the interest shown was good. The congregation increased in numbers until the house was filled. It was said by those who knew the place and people that we had more people to attend the services than had done so in six or eight years. As a result there were six valuable accessions to the church, one by letter and five on profession of faith. Two were baptized. A Senior League was organized with twenty-two members; a Sunday school with six officers and teachers and forty scholars, and last, but not least, nine new subscribers to the New Orleans Advocate were secured—H. Mellard, P. C.

Lanesville, La.:

With a grateful heart and joyous spirit as pastor of the Lanesville charge, I send greetings to the brethren, and ask them to rejoice with me. Just think of it! After an experience of sixteen years as a pastor, and seven long years as a superannuate, I again, my strength being renewed, have a charge with seven appointments, a good horse and buggy, and Christ within, the hope of glory. And am also just fifty years young, less forty-three days. I returned last night after four and a half days' pastoral work, having visited thirty-seven homes and prayed in twenty of them. I spoke at two temperance meetings, held one Church Conference, secured four new subscribers for The Advocate and one renewal. And last, but I trust not least, I preached to attentive congregations concerning Christian perfection, "Tithing," and "Hell." Praise the Lord. We have had with us Mrs. Stratton, the National Organizer of the W. C. T. U. Her work will doubtless result in much good. She organized unions at Lanesville and Dubberly, composed of excellent women.

W. J. PORTER, P. C.

February 6, 1911.

Oloh, Miss.:

The good people of the Oloh Circuit received us as brothers and sisters. I, being a young preacher, consider myself unusually fortunate to find myself among them. The spiritual interest is excellent. The Woman's Home Mission Society just met and planned to do a great work this year; they covenanted themselves to fast and pray on the fourth Wednesday of each month for a successful year. They made Mrs. Norsworthy glad with lots of new things for the parsonage. We had our first Quarterly Conference here the fourth Saturday in January, with Rev. M. B. Sharbrough in the chair. The services Saturday and Sunday, conducted by him, were spiritual feasts to all who attended them. Pray that our work may be to the glory of the Master this year.—H. Norsworthy, P. C.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Lena Liddell Magee.

Although called to Osyka by the removal of her husband's business from our town to that place, our sister, Mrs. Lena Magee, was ever faithful in her devotion to our society, and continued her membership with us, keeping in touch with our work by correspondence. One of her last acts was writing to our president a letter which was found unfinished after her death. Therefore be it resolved,

First, That the Wesson Home Mission Society feel that they have lost a good friend and a true worker in her death; that we bow submissively to our Father's will, knowing that he doeth all things well. She was truly his, and loved, honored and served him. Although we cannot see the wisdom of this sad dispensation, we can wait until the "day star" from on high shall reveal it all.

Second, That we will imitate her virtues and double our diligence to advance the cause she loved. Our sympathy goes out to the bereaved husband and mother. God only can comfort them. May his presence be manifest in this time of distress!

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in our minutes and that one be sent to the sorrowing family, and also a copy to the New Orleans Advocate.

MRS. L. H. WIMBERLY,

MRS. F. A. LEE,

For Committee.

Wesson, Miss.

DESOTO, MISS.

I have been in doors about three weeks, sick with la grippe, but to-day I'm up, and ready to resume my work again. The good people of this place were thoughtful of their pastor while he was ill. This year bids fair to be a good one on the DeSoto charge. We have a large number of people on this charge who have the experience of full salvation, and they know how to approach God in prayer. We are praying that the Master will send the Holy Spirit this way in convicting and converting power, and cause poor, lost sinners to think on their ways and of where they will spend eternity. Brethren, a revival of the unusual sort is needed in these parts. So will you pray that souls may be saved on this circuit this year. He is able and willing to save all that come unto him. He tells us in John vi, 37, "And him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." By God's help and leadership, I expect to be more earnest in my labors this year for the salvation of the lost, than I have been in the past. To-day finds me praising God for salvation and victory. Glory to his precious name.—Hilary Westbrook, P. C. Feb. 16, 1911.

Quick Relief From Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it
Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

MR. GILDER'S WORK AND HOMES.

Maria Hornor Landsdale, a life-long friend of the Gilder family, has written sympathetically for the March "Century" of the "Life-work and Homes of Richard Watson Gilder." The memoir will be illustrated from early photographs of Mr. Gilder and from drawings by Vernon Howe Bailey, of Mr. Gilder's birthplace and the homes of the family.

This Will Stop Your Cough in a Hurry.

Save $2 by Making This Cough Syrup at Home.

This recipe makes a pint of better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. A few doses usually conquer the most obstinate cough—stops even whooping cough quickly. Simple as it is, no better remedy can be had at any price.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. It has a pleasant taste and lasts a family a long time. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

You can feel this take hold of a cough in a way that means business. Has a good tonic effect, braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, too, which is helpful. A handy remedy for hoarseness, bronchitis, asthma and all throat and lung troubles.

The effect of pine on the membranes is well known. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norwegian white pine extract, and is rich in gualic acid and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup recipe has attained great popularity throughout the United States and Canada. It has often been imitated, though never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

—O. W. Holmes.

Topic for February 26: The Christian Goal. (Phil. iii. 12-14; Psalm xlii. 1). Hymns: 320, 91, 431.

Some one has said that "the largest room in the world is the room for improvement." Quite true. And this applies to man religiously, as well as intellectually and otherwise. There is no limit to Christian growth on this side of the grave; whether man will continue to progress in the heavenly home, we know not. Many think he will.

F. W. Robertson, the great Brighton preacher says:

"No efficient man ever entertained more than one great aim or purpose of being. Noah was a man of one idea. His idea was an ark. And though he did other things, yet the one great thought moving as a glorious dream through all his chambers of imagery, was something which would float upon stormy and shoreless seas. And this one thing he did—he built. Abraham was of this class. His one idea was a city. He, too, did other things—he trained his servants, commanded his household after him, etc.; but amidst his fairest dreams by the ancestral waters a great voice out of the heavens spake to him of 'a city which had foundations, whose builder was God.' And evermore afterwards he journeyed towards that city."

The Christian Goal—what is it? It is variously expressed in the Scriptures. In Ephesians iv, 13, it is called "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ;" in the lesson text it is called "the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." This goal can never be attained by mere idle dreaming. Only by "pressing" forward can it be realized. Every Christian should so act that each tomorrow will find him further on the upward way than to-day.

A writer in the Pittsburg Christian Advocate says: "I think that the greatest difficulty with the Epworth League work at the present time is that each society lives too much within itself. We should use our secretaries more, and keep out of the ruts." Does this apply to your League? Do you really care to know what other Leagues are doing?

The New Orleans Epworth League Union met at Epworth Church Tuesday evening, the 14th. The exercises, which were most enjoyable, were attended by a large audience.

Rev. W. J. Wroten reports the organization of an Epworth League of 20 members at Duck Hill, Miss.

Rev. W. H. Coleman, of Ruston, La., writes: "We have recently organized a Junior League with 72 members, and a troop of Boy Scouts of the Epworth League, with three patrols and thirty boys. The membership in both will soon be largely increased."

"THE BIBLE MODE OF BAPTISM" GOING INTO ALL THE WORLD.

The latest publication on the subject of Baptism, a booklet of 64 pages by Rev. J. E. Mahaffey, proving beyond the shadow of a doubt that Sprinkling was the original, Apostolic and Scriptural mode of baptizing, is already making its way to the uttermost parts of the earth. Hundreds of letters testifying of its merit, pronounce it the best thing of the kind that has ever been printed, exactly suited to the needs of our time, and urge that a copy be placed in every Methodist home.

The retail price of the booklet is 15c a copy, but in order to further introduce it, the author has reserved a few to send out to the first persons who enclose $1 for 15 copies. This is less than 7c each, postpaid, and the supply will not last long. It handles bravely and forcefully one or two of our most perplexing problems. Every adult mother of our Church ought to read it."

The Sunday School.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

A letter lies before me from Rev. J. E. Sampley, of the Harrison charge. He states that at Cane Ridge Church on this charge, a Home Department has been organized with eighteen members and more to follow. He is also organizing an Adult Bible Class. At Mizpah, another church on this charge, a Home Department has been organized with twenty members. The same organization is being effected at Harrison, and will soon have Martin included. This will include the entire charge save one point. Brother Sampley adds this significant sentence: "It is working fine in the country. It fills a need in Sunday school work nothing else can."

Programs and circulars have been sent out for the series of Sunday School Institutes to be held during the month of March, in the western section of our Conference. It is earnestly desired that all Sunday school workers avail themselves of this opportunity of getting in touch with trained workers and up-to-date Sunday school methods. The following places will be visited: Canton, Fayette, Prentiss, Collins.

It is to be desired that every Sunday school in the Conference send a delegate to the State Sunday School Convention to be held in Columbus, Miss., March 21-23. The finest available talent will be found on the program. The State work is no detriment to denominational work. The two are interdependent. The State organizes no schools, but does help those already organized.

Have you introduced the new Graded Lessons for Primaries into your school? If not, write to-day for full information. Nothing like them has ever been offered the Sunday school worker before.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

The Church at Ecru, Miss., has 67 members and out of these 57 belong to the Sunday School. Brother Evans is working his school and pupils up to the highest point of efficiency, and such work is a great inspiration.

Get the Pocket Worker's Testament, with its helpful references, marked verses and helps. It was wrought out of the hearts and minds of men filled with the intensest desire to help and to save, and is invaluable to personal workers and helpful to all.

"Wrinkles should merely indicate where smiles have been"—will you remember that? Oh! the deep, cruel, smileless wrinkles in so many faces! Temper and irritation write their hieroglyphics on a face that all can read, and this without a Rosetta Stone to assist in the translation.

The Gideons did a great work putting Bibles in all the hotels in Chicago, and the plan is not a bad one for towns as well as cities. How many times a little Testament with two or three marked verses, given in traveling to some chance acquaintances, has wrought their conversion! The Bible is the great world treasure and why should we keep it away from any needy, heart-hungry living creature?

Have you ever thought what a special delivery stamp could do in the scheme of things? Write a loving letter to the member of your class who has been away for some time, and has become a bit indifferent or careless—tell him you need him, and put on that long blue business stamp and see what will follow. You will seldom fail to find that member present, early and with a smile, too, for he knows he is wanted and for some real purpose.

THE AGGRESSIVE SUPERINTENDENT.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Since the Sunday school has been established as a genuine school—a religious educational institution—the question of who superintends it is of no little importance. It is not sufficient to have a harmless, long-faced, orthodox, pious man, because he has no enemies. Other schools require examinations along different lines before employing a principal. To be sure, the Sunday school is the teaching department of the Church, where Christian character and Church loyalty and intelligence are the chief aims but it is a school nevertheless, and must teach; and the superintendent must be capable of directing all of its affairs and the ideal can only be attained when he has been educated and trained in some school of religious pedagogy, such as we are to give in our (or some one else's) Vanderbilt University, when the funds for this special chair have been provided. But in the mean time what are we to do? At present our superintendents are unpaid love-servants (like the preachers) of the Church who have had but little opportunity for special pedagogical preparation and, who, with the burden of business cares upon them, cannot undertake extensive present preparation. But can they not, at least, come up to the following standard:

(1) In addition to being genuine, loyal Christians who love the Church and a lost world, can they not, at least, read one of the many excellent books setting forth the work of the present-day Sunday school, by such men as Marion Lawrence, H. Clay Trumbull or Henry F. Cope? Such a book costs but little and can be read almost in one Sunday and used for reference thereafter. Such a volume would give visions to many of our mediocre superintendents that would set their souls and minds aflame with new desires and their life astir with new plans. Should not our pastors, the "general superintendents," bring this matter before them? A good book represents the best of a man's life boiled down to its condensed cream, and is lived over in the life of its readers.

(2) Our superintendents can also study studiously their own schools, knowing intelligently each teacher and the needs and activities of the several departments. If he is to run in Sunday morning five minutes late without a prepared program, and run through an off-hand performance like he is anxious to get the burden off his mind, all managed, or mismanaged, at long range, with no definite, sane effort at really superintending, then people, young or old, who are used to decency and order and to respecting official supervisors, will be put to a great strain to still reverence such a school as he superintends. The superintendent of an institution should be capable of taking charge of any department in an emergency and carrying it forward without very great confusion, and in Sunday school he should know all the literature and methods of class work of the teachers, the condition of the treasury, the secretary's book, etc. This any worthy man can know in due course of time.

(3) Another wise and helpful thing in reach of most men who want to magnify their office is to take a few days off and attend a good institute, where the best workers bring the treasures of their studies and experiences, to their fellow workers in face to face discussions of things worth knowing and doing. Without this the State now refuses to allow teachers to teach in our public schools, and after the Church has provided as good institutes for her teachers and superintendents, she might enforce attendance mildly in the same way. But every Christian worker should aspire to be the best in his line and need only the compulsion of opportunity. Another good plan is for superintendents to leave their work occasionally with their assistants and take a Sunday off and visit the best schools within reach. In some instances they might go as far as Mr. Greene's famous school at Opelika, Ala., or Mr. Pepper's at Memphis, Tenn. Seeing is believing and when theories prove practical in practice, a superintendent who sees them work and still continues cannot longer claim exemption from censure. Visit the good schools, attend good institutes and put in practice what you learn.

(4) Finally, an aggressive superintendent superintends and puts the others to doing the work. This is his mission and if he does not fulfill it his official name should be changed to something else. His office is executive. He is neither teacher, secretary, choirster, usher, doorkeeper nor sexton. The members of his school can do the work, if some one will plan it and entrust it to them. And if the superintendent proves incapable of doing this, then let another with the gift of leadership and zeal for making the Sunday school up-to-date, take his place. The interests of the school are above every individual consideration, and the consideration for its welfare should be paramount. The world moves and the Church that furnishes the motive power for the highest type of progress must keep her teaching force to such a standard that the world will respect it.

The Baptist Chronicle says: "The three greatest gospel preachers since Paul were Robert Hall, Spurgeon, and MacLaren, and that all three were Baptists." And the first two were open communio-

Evil is progressive—its tendency is from bad to worse. This is seen even in the fashions of the day. The "hobble skirt" is to be followed by the "pantaloon skirt," which has already made its appearance in gay Paris. What further affliction the arbiters of dress will impose upon a suffering public, we dare not conjecture.

From an old volume we quote the following: "When a certain pastor, whose ministry had been very highly blessed in the conversion of sinners, was asked the secret of his great usefulness, he replied, 'We have a praying church.' May it not also be true that the unfruitfulness of the labors of many ministers is due to the fact that they do not have the prayers of their people? Let those in every congregation who know God remember their preacher daily at the throne of grace.

"Look up, lift up!" It would be difficult to find a nobler motto than this one, chosen by the Leaguers of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Looking up brings inspiration and high ideals. The Psalmist said: "I will lift up mine eyes to the hills whence cometh my help." It is when he looks down upon the things that are base and low that man degenerates. And surely every one should aspire to be a "lifter," and not a "leaner," in the busy, struggling world. Indeed, it is only by seeking to lift up others that we ourselves may hope to rise.

Are we not too much disposed to undervalue or forget God's every-day blessings and to think of him as aiding us only in the time of calamity? When disaster threatens and we escape, we praise him as our deliverer; but does not his power sustain us every moment, and is not every good thing in life the gift of his generous hand? The air, the sunshine, the water that we drink, and the vegetation that springs up to feed and clothe mankind, come so quietly and regularly that we are prone to accept them as a matter of course, and lose sight of the fact that they are the thoughtful provisions of the Heavenly Father's watchful eye and loving heart. It is better, like Elijah, to hear God's voice in the wake of the storm than never to hear it at all; but happier is he who can discover it in the whispering breeze of the cloudless morning, and in the evening zephyr—the parting benediction of the perfect day. We hang our laurels upon the brows of human benefactors; shall we not give the tribute of praise to him whose unflinching philanthropy has stretched across all the centuries and has left unblest no member of the race?

"God's boundless love and arching sky
Above us when we wake or sleep,
Above us when we smile or weep,
Above us when we live or die."

THE DAVIS MONUMENT.

Through the courtesy of The Daily States, we present our readers this week with a picture of the Jefferson Davis Monument, which was unveiled in this city on the afternoon of Feb. 22. The broad and substantial base is of South Carolina granite and rises to a height of 14.2 feet. This is crowned with a bronze figure of the Southern chieftain, 8.8 feet high, which is the work of Mr. Edward V. Valentine, of Virginia, who sculptured the famous recumbent statue of General Robert E. Lee, and the one of Audubon recently set up in New Orleans in the park bearing his name. The total height of the Davis monument above the level of the sidewalk is 25.10 feet. It is imposing in appearance, the design is striking and suggestive, the inscriptions are appropriate, and the general effect is pleasing and impressive. The credit for this worthy achievement belongs to the women of the Crescent City and of Louisiana. Beginning in 1898, for more than twelve years they addressed themselves to this task with persistency and unwearied diligence, and have well earned the success which at last has rewarded their labors. Too much cannot be said in praise of the noble service which they have rendered. The women of the Old South helped to write the brief but brilliant history of "the storm-cradled nation," and it is fitting and beautiful in their daughters to seek to preserve and perpetuate it.

It scarcely needs to be said that it is appropriate that Jefferson Davis should have a monument erected to his memory in New Orleans. It is the largest of the distinctively Southern cities, and around it are clustered many of the unfading recollections of the Confederacy. Here he often came in life, here he breathed his last, and here for a time his honored remains reposed. It is the metropolis of the southern half of the State of which he was a citizen, and whose people well-nigh idolized and ever delighted to honor him; and not far away was the quiet home, bathed by the waters of the Gulf, where he spent the beautiful evening of his illustrious life. Having years ago reared a lofty shaft to honor the memory of Lee, it is fitting that the Crescent City should likewise honor his majestic compeer.

Nor need we apologize for venerating and exalting the memory of Jefferson Davis. Viewed from any standpoint, he attained to the proportions of greatness. As a young soldier, he won imperishable renown in the Mexican War. In the United States Senate, where sat Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Benton, and Douglas, he achieved distinction as a statesman. As Secretary of War in the cabinet of Franklin Pierce, he showed himself as wise in council as he was brave upon the field of battle. As President of the Confederacy, he exhibited executive ability of a high order, and though the cause for which he stood went down, Robert E. Lee said he knew no one who could have done half as well in that difficult position. The gift of commanding eloquence, stainless character, and high moral purpose, all were his. There was about him not the slightest trace of demagoguery—more patriotic heart never beat in human breast. There could be no more unjustifiable misrepresentation than the charge that he sought unworthily to disrupt the Union. He was not a frenzied secessionist, preaching the doctrine of sectional hatred; he sought no place of leadership in the new nation—that was thrust upon him. Courageous, patient, firm, he ever stood for what he conscientiously believed to be right, and nothing could make him betray a principle. For no word of his spoken in public or private, need excuse be made. He was clean in speech and life, a devout and earnest Christian who fed upon the Scriptures and prayed in his home. In honoring such a man, we honor ourselves. As the war recedes into the past and the clouds of prejudice lift, the larger looms his towering figure. And as the fleeting years come and go, his fame will continue to grow brighter, and his name will be spoken with respect and reverence as long as virtue and genius command the admiration of mankind.

WISE LEGISLATION DELAYED.

For some time there has been pending in the United States Senate a measure known as the Scott Bill, which has for its aim the abolition of gambling in cotton futures. We regret to state that owing to the pressure of urgent legislation during these closing days of Congress, it has been sidetracked and probably will not be allowed to come to a vote. That such legislation is imperatively needed, we do not think there is the slightest doubt. And yet it has the uncompromising hostility of practically all of the cotton exchanges in our cities. Indeed, the manner in which these speculators in the fleecy staple rush to Washington and fill the newspapers with prophecies of dire calamities that would result from the adoption of a measure of this character, whenever such action is proposed, would be really amusing, were it not so positively discreditable.

But these gentlemen need not think the people have little enough sense to be deceived by their unsupported affirmations as to what is best and their desperate efforts to create an alarm. The contention that a legitimate business, such as the cotton industry, cannot prosper unless propped by legalized gambling is too ridiculous to admit of serious discussion. It is possible that with such speculation done away with, cotton would not be bought and sold for six or nine months in advance; but where is the proof that such a method of conducting business is a necessity or advantage? Why cannot the spinners come into the market and purchase their supplies of cotton when it is actually on sale, as the buyers of many other commodities do? The truth is, the great majority of those who dabble in cotton futures have no legitimate connection with the cotton business. The pandemonium that reigns daily in our city exchanges is not the product of normal commercial transactions, but of reckless speculation which in most instances is nothing else but gambling. And sooner or later the enlightened moral sentiment of the country will stop this pernicious practice. Despite the temporary delay of the movement to abolish it, it is doomed. "The stars in their courses fight against Sisera."

All Fools' Day in the Crescent City is Mardi Gras Day.

THE NATURE OF SIN.

By Rev. S. S. Sims, in the Methodist Recorder.

I have been much interested in the articles from the pen of our beloved brother, Rev. C. H. Hubbell, the secretary of the Board of Young People's Work. As I write I have before me the last week's issue of The Recorder in which Bro. Hubbell has written under the caption, "The Children For Christ."

This dear brother, like all the lovers of Christ, realizes that the future of the Church depends upon the training of children in early life. After reading his able article I feel constrained to write an article for all, but especially the young people, under the above heading, "The Nature of Sin." The word sin is very short, but it expresses something very fearful. Indeed, it is the seed from which has sprung that mighty tree, the fruit of which is seen in all the crimes and sorrows known upon the earth or in eternity. Let me describe at least some of its nature:

1. Sin is attractive. It clothes itself in the most beautiful manner possible. Balls, parties, picture books of vice, horse-racing, attractive drinking saloons, gambling dens, theatres, etc.

2. Sin is deceitful, like the rainbow, beautiful at a distance, but vanishes as you approach it, like the apples of Sodom, golden without, but dust within. How attractive to Achan were the wedge of gold and the costly Babylonian garment. He seized them, contrary to orders, but they destroyed him and all his family. The throne of his father was very attractive to Absalom, but his attempt to seize it resulted in his death. It attracted only to betray.

3. Sin is corrupting. As some diseases affect the blood, the flesh, the brain, the nerves, the whole nature, so sin pollutes the mind, filling it with evil thoughts, the affections, filling them with evil passions, the will, inducing it to form evil purposes, and to be governed by the vilest motives, until, as the Bible says, the whole heart is sick and the whole heart faint. When a sinful course is first commenced it is like a decayed spot in an apple, which enlarges, until the whole mass is corrupt. It is like leaven. Judas, who betrayed the Savior, was once a little innocent boy, but how thoroughly depraved he was when he became a man; he became so by degrees. So it is with all other wicked men. Sin corrupts us gradually and imperceptibly. Leprosy is a disease that comes on gradually, but sooner or later it brings death. The continual dropping of water will wear solid stone.

4. Sin is hardening. When a person is tempted to any particular sin for the first time, he has scruples of conscience. He feels that it is wrong, that he ought not to yield. Something within him says, resist. But if he yields, he can do it much more easily the next time, and he won't feel so badly. His conscience becomes weaker and weaker, until it ceases to speak. He can now commit sins from which he once shrank with horror. There was a man, whose name was Burke, who committed murder. It made him feel terribly. But he committed another and another, and with less feeling every time, until he had put to death some twenty persons. He became so hardened that he said he could kill a man with as little feeling as a butcher kills an ox. A boy stole a small amount of money and escaped detection. That encouraged him to steal again, then again. Then he united with others as had as himself, became a burglar and midnight robber, until he was at last detected, and is now serving a long term of years in prison. There are many such.

5. Sin is contagious. There are certain diseases which one person can give to another by touching him. There are other diseases which are diffused in the atmosphere. They are called infectious, and in these ways, one disease, like the plague, the yellow fever, or the small-pox, can, in a short time, be diffused throughout a whole community. Sin is just like that. The example of one affects many, until a whole community is led astray. One bad boy will corrupt a whole circle of children. Ahab led all Israel astray by his bad example and influence.

6. Sin is fatal. It is the forbidden fruit, it is poisonous and deadly. There is a plant called the fly-catcher. It produces a nectar. Flies enter the blossom for the nectar, and then can not get out, and so they die. We have read of a tree called Judas tree. Its blossoms also attract flies. They sip the honey from the leaf, and then fall dead to the ground. Thus will sin act. Gamblers first began for enjoyment, without the least thought of becoming gamblers. Our drunkards all started as moderate drinkers, never expecting to become drunkards, but when once in the coils of the serpent were led captive at its will.

"Sin is a poison—hath its bolts and chains;
Brings into bondage whom it entertains;
Hangs shackles on them, bends to its will;
Holds them as Sampson grinding at the mill;
We blind them, make them deaf, yea will them gag;
And down to death their precious souls will drag.
Therefore, look to it, keep it out of door;
If once its slave, thou may'st be free no more."

WHY SAY "DISMEMBER?" WHY NOT "REMEMBER."

Another Insider.

In Zion's Herald for Jan 22, there appeared an article from "An Insider" attacking the plan of "Unification by Reorganization," as a dismemberment of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It would better be denominated a plan for the "rememberment" of the great Methodist family. He contends that the plan would deprive the Methodist Episcopal Church of much strength, and would be radically wrong, in that the negro would be "set adrift."

As to the first contention, it seems to me that we would gain much more than we would lose; surely the great cause would be the gainer.

But the negro problem is a different matter, and that on which "An Insider" places most stress. For the negro's sake and for our own, let us ask ourselves a few pertinent questions, whether we are able to answer them or not.

Are we to keep the negro in the Methodist Episcopal Church as an integral part of its membership forever? If so, is he to be a real vital part of us, as eligible to every position in the gift of the Church as his white brother? As a member of our Church, may he be a part of our official, of our general officers, outside that part of it which has to do with his own people? Shall he edit, if competent, our Church papers, preside, when competent, over our colleges for white youth, and be elected to the episcopacy? Or, if we retain him in our membership, is he to be dependent, paternalized, governed, to keep him from being wronged, and from doing wrong, and to develop him, certainly, but still as a sort of separate part of the Church?

Is it treating him right to hold him up, or compel him to let us hold him up forever, if we are merely holding him to keep from "setting him adrift"? There comes a time when a child ought to be set on his own two legs and left alone to walk. It is wrong to go on leading him forever. If we are to permit the negro to walk among us, let him have a free field, and such position as his capacity will permit, regardless of color; then we will do him no wrong to keep him with us.

But does "An Insider" suppose that is ever to be? The negro is more completely shut out from the inner circles of society in the North than he was forty years ago, and the lines are growing closer for him. No white church, even in New England, would welcome a negro as pastor, even though appointed by the Bishop, and as well qualified for the position as the strongest white man in the Conference. His color debars him. No parents in New England would send their children to a college presided over by a negro. Where is there a church in New England with a negro on its official board? And we are no nearer a negro Bishop than twenty years ago. And why not a negro Bishop? Is not M. C. B. Mason a general secretary of the Church, and as efficient in that office and as capable, so far as administrative ability is revealed by his work among us, as the white men who have been elected for that position? Is not Bishop Scott, entrusted with the white sons of black men in Africa, who delivered the most stirring address in a given General Conference, capable, mentally and spiritually, of being a Bishop? Yes, all but in color. These men are black, and white men will never elect them to preside over themselves. Negroes must remain negroes, and they must find their most intimate society among negroes. The Church affords the opportunity for the best in that social line. But if it be a white man's church with a negro in it, what chance has the negro? He would be better off with his own church—good society among his own people.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has done well to help the negro to learn to walk; but it will do him irreparable wrong if, at the proper time, it does not permit him to walk alone, unless it can literally absorb him. He must manage affairs, develop a splendid social atmosphere, and learn to lead; and he cannot do that if led forever.

There is such a thing among negroes as "running away," both before emancipation and now. In our Methodist Episcopal Church there are about 300,000 negroes, while in other Methodist bodies, managed by colored people themselves, there are over 1,600,000 members, and these latter bodies are growing tremendously. Our own negro members are clamoring for their rights among us, and they will clamor more loudly directly than now, if they are not granted. They ought to do so, unless, indeed, they be permitted to walk alone before they snatch their hands away from us, and walk without our permission. It is better to let them, willingly, than to be compelled to permit them their right.

Leaders of our own as well as Southern Methodism met at Baltimore and suggested a plan which has been denominated, "Unification through Reorganization." It does not propose to set negroes adrift, but to provide them a place where they may sail, as equals, under a common flag, in a common cause, in the great Methodist fleet, to the one port.—From Zion's Herald.

SENATOR-ELECT LUKE LEA.

By H. M. Du Bose, D.D.

It too seldom happens, even in free countries, that the approval of majorities is passed upon men who act with the uncalculating courage of conviction. The defeat of courageous honesty is more common than are the easy and just triumphs of motive. But this, it must be seen, is often providential. The hearts of those who are to serve destiny must be searched and tried. The man of policy is useless in the last outset of truth. But if it is refreshing to find a man who stakes his hope of preferment upon the naked cause he serves, it is equally refreshing to find that the arbitrament above him is often no less courageous and just.

A happy and reassuring exception to the perverse and misguided judgment of majorities—even political majorities—was that of the recent election of a United States Senator in the Legislature of Tennessee. Mr. Luke Lea, the senator-elect, embodies all the fine qualities that go to make up the higher type of educated American gentlemen; but he is also an example of that bold, outspoken, courageous man who, as a rule, has either eschewed the habits and bents which lead to public office, or else has been outstripped in the race political by a more bizarre and less frankly committed competitor.

Luke Lea belongs to that generation of men who in all times and places follow principle and conviction in the light of their own leading, and this with no other plea or excuse than principle's own steadfast record. While the opportunist babbles his sciolistic reasons to the stars, these go on toward their goal with purpose and a flint-like face.

Better than all, Luke Lea is the type of that young American manhood prophetically commissioned to lift great public questions, like the prohibition of the liquor traffic, correction of the standards of public education and the elevation of official responsibility, from the atmosphere of cant and misrepresentation into the more practical and national light of public policy. Luke Lea is a prohibitionist of the new order, that is, a man opposed to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors from the standpoint of enlightened statesmanship, as a fiscal measure of government, and as a protection to commerce as well as morals. This class of publicists see that the millions prostituted to the whisky trade will, when redeemed to the uses of legitimate commerce, yield a larger and safer revenue to the government than is now realized in the whole internal levy on spirituous and malt liquors. The modern statesmanship of morality and of responsible personality in legislation will have no finer embodiment in the new Congress than the youthful, tall and big-brained Tennesseean.

Luke Lea is now thirty-two years of age, one of the youngest men ever elected to the exalted office of United States Senator. When I first became intimately acquainted with him he was in his latter "twenties," only a few years out of college, but enjoying a lucrative law practice and admired by everybody for his correct and religious life, his many ideals of thought and his perfect fearlessness of spirit.

Even then his hands were full of large concerns. He had just projected a great newspaper enterprise and was meditating the statesmanlike plans which have since made Tennessee a prohibition State, and which caused his newspaper, The Tennessean, to suddenly become the most influential journal ever published in Tennessee. About this time I had with him, in his office in the big Stahman building, the first of a number of interviews touching prohibition and civic righteousness in the city and State. The man of twenty-nine, or less, impressed me as one dowered with the wisdom of a sage of sixty. From that moment he was in my mind, a man marked for large public action, and as an instrument of destiny. His promotion comes, therefore, only as a clearly indicated sequence.

In the stirring moments and events which have made history in Tennessee during the past two or three years, the personality which has counted for most in the scale of direct influence has been that of Luke Lea. When other men faltered, he stood firmly, and when other influences paled, his rose and shone triumphantly.

Possessed himself of ample means, he used his purse freely, and inspired others to join him, in promoting and maintaining a great newspaper whose voice, never changing, never faltering, held together the forces of right and at last organized them into an invincible army.

At one time, when the Daily Tennessean seemed near the verge of financial ruin, his competitor offered to buy the plant at an advantageous figure. "No," replied Lea, "I will see it go to the scrap pile rather than give up the fight, to save my own purse." The Tennessean did not go to the scrap pile, but some time later bought its morning competitor at a bargain sale. Perhaps there has never been anywhere a more conspicuous example of the triumph of right than is furnished by this bit of history.

The presence of Luke Lea of Tennessee in the new Senate is comforting and reassuring to the champions of purity in politics and personal responsibility in legislation. It is also a distinct sign of the coming to the front of a new generation of courageous Christian statesman.

LOUISIANA METHODISTS AND MISSIONS.

By Rev. John M. Moore, D.D.

Louisiana Methodists number 32,620. They raised for missions last year, home and foreign, thirty-three cents per capita. They raised on the foreign assessment of $3,350 the sum of $5,050; on the home assessment of the same size only $4,011, or less than 50 per cent. Some churches raised specials amounting to $1,550, which brought the total amount to $10,611. The total assessment was $16,700.

Have Louisiana Methodists done their best? Whatever the answer, the showing is distressing. The assessments for the year 1911 are $11,000 for foreign missions and $11,000 for home and conference missions. Evidently some one believes Louisiana can materially change the record of last year—boll weevils or what not. If the churches are to have a clean record on missions at Conference next fall, some one must get deadly in earnest. There must be careful planning, much stimulating and faithful and vigilant attention to the working out of the plans. It is hard to say what men can do if they once get in earnest, become confident of success and determined to arouse their colleagues to victorious action. It is entirely possible for Louisiana Methodists to raise $29,000 for missions this year. That would mean assessments in full and a special of $1,000 on each district. How can it be done?

Put system into the money-raising such as is outlined by the Discipline and the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Read paragraph 381: "It shall be the duty of the preacher in charge to preach frequently on the subject of missions, to organize a missionary committee, to hold missionary mass meetings annually in every church in his charge, and to see that a canvass is made of every member early in the Conference year for a missionary contribution," etc. That is the law. Is every Louisiana preacher carrying it out? "Do not mend our rules, but keep them." A quarterly conference has been held in every charge and the pastors have answered the questions: "Who is elected church leader?" "Has a missionary committee been elected for each church?" In the church conference, which according to the law should have been held before this time, the question was asked, "Who are elected a missionary committee for the church or churches?" Some preachers may not have realized the importance of obeying the law, and so it may be that in some charges no leader and no missionary committee have been elected. If so, let such pastors, after some conference with the laymen, whom they can readily reach, appoint at once a leader and a committee for each church and notify them that the Board of Missions of the Louisiana Conference has asked that an every-member canvass for home, conference and foreign missions be made in every church in Louisiana, during March. Such appointments can be ratified at the next quarterly conference.

If such action is not wise, then call a church conference and have a committee appointed.

How large should the committee be? That will depend upon the nature of the community. Two persons, according to the advice of the Laymen's Movement, should canvass together, and they should have ten to fifteen places to which they may be expected to go. The work of the canvass should be done within one week. Should the committee be composed of men only? Yes, if men can be found who can be induced to do the work, as the object of the canvass is to develop the laymen as well as to get money; but if enough willing men cannot be found, use the women, who are always willing, faithful and competent. Should a public collection be taken? No; the law orders an every-member canvass. Many members of the Church need the personal visit which the canvass will compel. How should the subscriptions be made? Weekly; the cards furnished specify "per week," as it is the Scriptural system of weekly offerings that the Church wishes to develop. The payment may be made at any one time for as many weeks as the subscriber may prefer.

This is the plan of the Church and the plan of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. The Laymen's Movement is not something independent of the Church or the pastor. The laymen should raise all the missionary money. The pastor is to "organize the missionary committee" with the church leader at its head. The pastor must not get the idea that the laymen are to do this without him. He must help the committee get at its work and keep them inspired until they do it. He must not hold aloof and watch the laymen make this every-member canvass, but he must lead them and co-operate with them in making it. He is not to do the canvassing, but he is to encourage the committee until it is done.

The committee must have its treasurer and all subscriptions should be paid to him. When the money is in he should pay to the conference treasurer the assessments for foreign, home and conference missions, and what is left will be the special for missions. No church should want credit for a special until its assessments are paid in full. But every Methodist church in Louisiana that will diligently, intelligently and conscientiously carry out the every-member canvass will have a special. Any church may direct its special, should it so choose. All churches that are now supporting special missionaries or enterprises will have credit in this campaign for their specials. All undirected specials, and they are preferable, will be divided equally between the home and foreign work, just as the assessments are now divided.

The Board of Missions of the Louisiana Conference at its mid-year meeting at Alexandria, February 8, voted to ask the pastors to have their every-member canvass in March. A similar campaign will be on in all Texas during March. Will the Louisiana pastors do this, or will they decline with the declaration that they will await a more convenient season? The every-member canvass is possible in every church, and it always succeeds if carefully carried out. The presiding elder, his district leader, and the members of the Board of Missions in his district should form a committee at once for his district to make the canvass a success. Every pastor and every church leader in every district should be stirred and no charge should be allowed to come short of its full privilege and responsibility. The conference lay leader should use his pen diligently to stir up any inactive district leaders, and each district leader should do the same for each church leader. This is a time for action. The will finds the way. "We can, if we will." Every man's best endeavors in March will be sufficient to put Louisiana on the honor roll. Many of the conferences have forgotten about an assessment for missions, as they passed it so long ago. The laymen ask for $2 per member for foreign missions. There will be rejoicing at conference, if Louisiana raises $1 per member this year for all missions. It can be done and should be done.

A BEAUTIFUL LIFE OF SERVICE.

By Rev. W. E. Underwood.

To one reared in the country where there is neither vast wealth, nor abject poverty, where everybody in the community has a sufficiency of the necessities of life at all times, the city presents a most striking contrast. Such a vast horde of wealth as is there gathered cannot be conceived by the ruralist. If perchance he has an opportunity to spend a few days in one of our great American cities, he is overawed by its splendor and magnificence, and he thinks of it thereafter as a vast treasure-house, populated by people of opulence only. Such, however, is far from true. If here we find much wealth, here is also found much poverty, as I had occasion to learn during a few months' residence in the great city of New Orleans a few months since. I presume that what is true along this line in this city is true in every other city, and in some, probably even to a greater degree.

The people of New Orleans deserve much credit for the work they do along charitable lines. There are numerous organizations for the purpose of alleviating the misery and suffering of the needy. Of work of this kind that came under my observation, I was especially impressed with the labors of a noble woman, who I know devotes her entire time and energies to rendering such service. She is a woman of no wealth, and yet she is the richest person I has ever been my happy lot to meet, for she has perfect content in her condition; and labors without ceasing to raise the fallen and to minister to the destitute. Perfect peace is imprinted upon her brow, and there is actually a radiant glow upon her countenance and a brightness that pervades the surrounding air as a result of her devotion to the suffering, and her entire consecration to God. I am no skeptic, and yet, I doubt if any one could be in her presence and not feel that they were near something more noble and glorious than ordinary clay. My first real acquaintance with her was on stopping at the mission, where she resides, to make some inquiries. She was seated on a low stool, dressing the wounds of a poor sailor boy. The boy was as much a stranger to her as he was to me. He had just arrived in the city wounded and had taken quarters where drinking and gambling were indulged in most freely. After his wounds were dressed, he was dismissed with kind words and pleasant smiles, and a request to return on the morrow. The morrow arrived, but the sailor lad was too busily engaged in revelry to care for his wounds. The day following he was hunted up by this woman. Oh, what a condition she found him in! What did she do? Turn away in disgust and leave him to be further degraded? No. Not a word of reproach passed her lips. No scorn was upon her brow. Instead she spoke to him gently and insisted that she be allowed to dress his wounds. He could not resist. Such appeals are ever thus. If we are scorned, we can easily retort, but such a touching appeal as she can make is irresistible. Two days later this young man was sent to his mother many miles away, as the only hope of saving him from further contamination. Once while passing a saloon of drunk and drinking men, she discerned a man on the floor of the saloon receiving heavy blows from no less than a dozen rough hands. She walked in, and made them desist from their cruel treatment as though by magic. I could cite an almost unlimited cases of rescue, did space permit.

But most of her work is of a different character. By six in the morning, she is out doing. Sometimes she returns at five in the evening, sometimes at ten, sometimes not at all that day; it depends entirely on whether or not her services are needed by others. She visits the destitute, and, if she can procure a morsel, she gladly shares it with them. She goes to the homes of the sick, does what is in her power to relieve their physical maladies, and then reads some soul-comforting passage from her Bible, talks to them of the great Comforter, and the home where sickness and death enter not. She seeks out the friendless, the despairing, the prodigal and the reprobate and unto them gives good counsel, hopeful words, and loving smiles.

The glory of Solomon may perish; the name of Caesar fade from history, and those of Alexander the Great and Napoleon become as tinkling brass; but the deeds of this woman will ever illumine the pages of the Lamb's Book of Life. I write this, not simply as words of praise, but that others seeing her good works may emulate her example.

MATTERS OF INTEREST.

Dear Brother Meek: It should please you to know that the sowing of yourself and other Hospital Commissioners issued in a successful meeting of the Hospital Trustees in Memphis. Nothing indicated more interest than the large attendance, nineteen-twentieths of the trustees being present. Personally, I count it a great pleasure and benefit to have had fellowship with those choice spirits.

It is cause, not for boasting, but for rejoicing, that the first contribution was from the Home Mission Society of North Mississippi, through its worthy representative, Mrs. Robert Somerville. This elect lady is one of the most active, as well as one of the wisest members, of the Board of Trust. With Millsaps College on the south, the Hospital north and Grenada College in the center, North Mississippi takes pride in her position and possessions.

My visit to Memphis gave to me opportunity to visit Grenada College, where I found President Counties, his faculty and pupils healthy, happy, busy and successful. This session is beyond any we have had. The music department has made a phenomenal record this year, the Glee Club, of the voice pupils affording the most attractive feature. Other departments of the school are entitled to praise equal to that given to the department of music. If everybody will help as some have done, Grenada will soon be one of the greatest schools in Southern Methodism. Speed the day! Amen!

Last Sunday was a fine day with us in Carrollton. Brother Thames received a member on profession of faith and there was heard the "shout of victory in the camp." It was a precious season.

Yours truly,

J. R. BINGHAM.

Church News

Billy Sunday is reported to have recently conducted a great meeting at Portsmouth, Ohio, in which there were more than 2,000 conversions. He is beyond question one of the most forceful and effective revivalists in America.

Mr. John A. Rice, Jr., son of Dr. J. A. Rice, who served the Rayne Memorial Church of this city so acceptably for a quadrennium ending last December, has been appointed to a Cecil Rhodes scholarship at Oxford, England.

Bishop Mouzon and Dr. John M. Moore will give the month of March to a missionary campaign in Texas. Their itineraries will be arranged by the Rev. A. J. Weeks, superintendent of the Home Mission work for Texas and New Mexico.

Bishop John H. Vincent was one of the speakers at the recent celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. He knew and appreciated the great evangelist, and paid a fitting tribute to his character and work.

Headway is being made toward the liquidation of the debt on Hendrix College in Arkansas. Rev. E. H. Steel reports that he lacks only $1,900 of having in hand the $12,500 pledged by the Arkansas Conference, and Rev. James Thomas has given assurance that the $15,000 promised by the Little Rock Conference will be forthcoming.

Dr. W. N. Ainsworth, the hustling president of Wesleyan Female College, has succeeded in enlisting the following Bishops for service in the campaign to increase the endowment of that institution: Atkins, Hoss, Kligo, Murrah, McCoy, and Denny. Surely the movement will succeed with such an array of talent and eloquence to promote it.

The Central Methodist of Lexington, Ky., of Feb. 22, contains a fine picture of Rev. W. G. Sadler, who is the Kentucky Conference Evangelist, and who has lately conducted a meeting of unusual interest at Harrodsburg. Brother Sadler began his ministry in North Mississippi, where he is pleasantly remembered by many of the preachers and people.

On Thursday, Feb. 2, Bishop R. G. Waterhouse left Emory and Henry College for New York, where he will visit his daughter, Edith, a student in Columbia. From New York the Bishop will go to San Antonio, Tex., probably by Emory en route. There he will join his family for a short stay, and then proceed to hold conferences through Arizona and the Coast States.—Bristol Herald-Courier.

Mr. S. C. Mouzon, the venerable father of Bishop Mouzon, died at the home of one of his sons at McKinney, Texas, on Feb. 8. He was a South Carolinian, and was born May 10, 1824. Bishop Mouzon was in Old Mexico when the sad event occurred, and was unable to be present at the funeral. He will have the sympathy and prayers of a host of friends throughout the Church in his bereavement.

The Western Methodist claims the unique distinction of being the only paper in Southern Methodism issued in the home land which prints communications in more than one language. It numbers among its constituency a number of Indians in Oklahoma, and has lately been publishing some articles in the Choctaw tongue. Whether Dr. Anderson has been doing the proof-reading of these contributions, he does not tell us.

The Protestant Pastors' Association of Paducah, Ky., adopted resolutions a few days since against Sunday funerals and the custom of remaining around the grave until it is filled. That such a reform is needed there is no question; but the problem is how to effect it. It is easy to pass resolutions, but the enforcement of them is difficult. At any rate, such action by pastors should tend to have an educative influence.

Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, the distinguished editor of the Missionary Review of the World, recently visited our girls' school at Hiroshima, Japan, where Miss Nannie B. Gaines is the principal, and was so impressed with the work of the institution that he gave his personal check for $150 to aid in procuring an assistant for the overworked head of the school. In a letter to the Missionary Review he compliments the service which is being rendered by our faithful teachers, and adds, "Conversions are continually occurring."

Last week's issue of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate was a "Mission number," and a choice one it was in every respect. A feast of fat things was set before its readers, and we dare say the missionary cause was given a forward impulse throughout Georgia by this exhibition of enterprise by the Methodist organ of that great State. The Wesleyan grows on us as the months pass, and it is our judgment that there is scarcely a better religious weekly published in the United States. Dr. Loren has the editorial gift in a marked degree.

The Western Recorder (Baptist) has discovered that infant baptism is not dying out, as some of the universalists are given to stating every now and then. This enterprising journal says: "The official statistics of the Methodist Church show that in 1909 there were 139,622 adult baptisms and 106,293 infant baptisms. In the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches there have been more infant than adult baptisms within the past two years." The Recorder further remarks that "habit and tradition are mighty forces," and that it seems there is need for more Baptist preaching in the world. Our contemporary may be assured that it will take a vast deal of it to overturn this Scriptural doctrine, and that it will need to be more logical and convincing than the kind we have had up to the present.

The editor of the Midland Methodist came out squarely in favor of the organic union of the Methodisms of the United States in last week's issue of his paper. He desires, of course, to set the colored brethren off to themselves. Our worthy confrere says: "We are one in doctrine, and the most of us are governed by practically the same polity." The word "practically" will have to be made to mean a vast deal for the latter part of this statement to hold good. In his recent admirable address on this subject, Bishop Hoss pointed out a number of differences between the governments of the two Episcopal Methodisms which are far from being unimportant. We hope that Brother Shuler will write again at greater length and set forth fully the process of reasoning by which he has reached the conclusion that the polity of the two Churches is "practically the same."

From the Trinity College notes in the Raleigh Christian Advocate of the 23rd ult., we take the following: "The Avera Bible Lectures will be delivered this year by the Rev. F. N. Parker, D.D., of the Louisiana Conference. Dr. Parker is one of the most distinguished preachers in the Southern Methodist Church, and the college authorities are fortunate in being able to secure him for this series of lectures. They will be given this year in the Craven Memorial Hall on April 19, 20, and 21. This lecture foundation was established in honor of the late Mr. W. H. Avera by his wife, who donated a sum of money for the establishment of the Avera Department of Biblical Literature, under the auspices of which these lectures are given. The lectures have brought to the city a large number of distinguished churchmen who have been heard by large audiences of the college community and of the city. The former lectures have been delivered by Bishop W. W. Duncan, Bishop Warren A. Candler, Bishop Alpheus W. Wilson, Chancellor James H. Kirkland, Bishop Charles B. Galloway, and Dean Wilbur F. Tillett. The Rev. F. N. Parker is the son of Bishop Linus Parker, of New Orleans, who was elected a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1882. The Avera Bible Lectures are among the most important educational events of the city and have never failed to attract a large gathering of the city's representative men and women, as well as a good many people living within a short radius of the city."

A dispatch from Brookhaven to the Jackson Daily News on Feb. 22, says: "The Board of Trustees of Whitworth College met yesterday to consider a proposition made for a large addition to the buildings of the institution, which will practically double its capacity, making room for 500 students. Invitation was extended the directors of the Board of Trade, the Mayor and the Board of Aldermen and numerous citizens to meet and consult with the College Trustees. A proposition was submitted in writing by I. W. L. L., W. M. and T. B. Lampton, of Magnolia, to donate $10,000 toward the erection of an auditorium and dormitory, as a memorial to their mother, and to be known as the Mary B. Lampton Auditorium, on condition that a like amount be raised in Brookhaven and the same sum outside of Brookhaven, making a total of $30,000 for improvements. The Board of Trustees accepted the offer and adopted suitable resolutions pledging the Methodists of Mississippi to raise the portion expected of them. On behalf of the city of Brookhaven it was reported for the Board of Aldermen that steps had already been taken to issue bonds to the amount of $10,000 for the purpose. The members favor the issuance and only await legal advice showing they have authority. Leading members of the Board of Trade gave assurance that the amount will be raised by private subscription should it not be possible to do so by a city bond issue. An optimistic spirit pervaded the meeting, and it is practically certain that improvements of from $30,000 to $40,000 will be made on Whitworth campus during the summer of 1911."

CELEBRATION AT WESSON.

It was my great pleasure to meet with the ladies of Wesson, Sunday, February 19th, and participate in the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of their Foreign Missionary Society. Brother B. F. Jones of Shubuta, who was their pastor twenty-five years ago, preached a most inspiring and appropriate sermon at 11 o'clock. At the evening service a most interesting programme was presented, consisting of music, talks, exercises by the children and papers on different phases of their auxiliary life by Mrs. Wimberly and Mrs. Rembert, both of whom have participated in the work since its organization. A silver offering was made at the close of the service.

A part of the evening's exercises which had not been anticipated, but which added much to the pleasure of the occasion, was the presentation to the auxiliary of the sum of $20 with which to make Mrs. Rembert a life member. This was done by the sons and niece of Mrs. Rembert, and was an honor most worthily and lovingly bestowed upon one who has given years of faithful service to her Master through this society.

It was a happy thought of these earnest-hearted women to thus celebrate the beginning of their work. A backward glimpse over the path of service which we have trodden with the Master can never fail to awaken songs of thanksgiving for past mercies and blessings and to arouse new aspirations and purposes for future service.

No auxiliary has more reason to rejoice in its achievements for the missionary cause than this one at Wesson. In spite of many obstacles they have wrought faithfully and accomplished much, and have been for many years a shining example of devotion and fidelity. One of their most conspicuous services for the past eight years has been the support of a Bible woman, who labors in China and bears the honored name of Clara Chrisman. May many of those who participated in this twenty-fifth anniversary celebrate their jubilee with even greater joy!

A VALUABLE BOOK.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE, consisting of five Sermons on the Office of the Holy Spirit, by the Rev. W. G. Harbin.

Rev. M. M. Black, one of the strongest preachers of the Mississippi Conference, says:

"MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE" is one of the most helpful and stimulating books on the devotional line that I have read in many a day, and is worthy of a wide circulation among both preachers and laymen. The vital theme treated of in this meritorious little volume, not, however, in a controversial, or theological, but in a practical way, is the work of the Holy Spirit, whose divine office and mission are, alas, too often lost sight of, or minimized in this day of multiplied ecclesiastical machinery and dependence upon organized effort.

"I have seen some larger and far more pretentious volumes on the doctrine of the Holy Spirit that are not half so illuminating and desirable as this booklet, which is a gem of its kind.

"The earnest reading of this little book will in many cases mark an epoch in the life of him who reads it."

A destructive fire occurred at Donaldsonville, La., on Feb. 22. The loss is estimated at more than $250,000.

It is reported in the press dispatches that Canada has decided to stop the immigration of negroes into the Dominion, on the ground that they are undesirable citizens.

The threatened difficulty between Russia and China has been amicably settled by China's agreeing to observe strictly all treaty provisions between the two countries.

The epidemic of cerebro-spinal meningitis, which created something of a panic at Lucedale, Miss., is about over. Business has been resumed, and the schools, which were closed on account of it, were announced to re-open on Feb. 28.

General W. L. Cabell, former commander of the Transmississippi Department of the United Confederate Veterans, and one of the best-known ex-Confederates in the South, died at his home in Dallas, Tex., on Feb. 22. He was over 80 years old.

On account of much important legislation that remains on the calendar of Congress to be attended to, it is possible that the Lorimer bribery case will not come to a vote during the present session. Every attempt to fix a time for the vote has met with failure.

Three vessels from the French navy and three from the United States navy have been anchored in the Mississippi river at New Orleans during the Mardi Gras celebration. The latest type of battleship in commission by the two countries, is represented in the fleet.

The cold weather has greatly injured the prospects of the berry growers and truckers in some sections of Louisiana and Mississippi, according to reports that have been sent out. The truckers of Independence, La., claim that their damage will amount to several hundred thousand dollars.

The House of Representatives has voted overwhelmingly in favor of the policy of fortifying the Panama Canal. This is thought practically to settle the question, as the sentiment in the Senate is said to be more than 2 to 1 in favor of protecting the Isthmian waterway by seacoast batteries.

The Chamber of Deputies of France has voted in favor of two new battleships of the dreadnaught type. A total of $268,000,000 is involved in the naval program submitted for the next ten years. If peace is the result of being prepared for war, France evidently intends to do her part towards bringing about that great consummation.

The report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, according to an exchange, shows that the express companies make an annual profit of about 50 per cent on all the capital used in their business. The parcels post would probably reduce the profits of a few favored investors, but would greatly lighten the burdens of the people.

According to the figures of Prof. Walter F. Wilcox, the Cornell statistician, the monetary loss to the State of New York from deaths from tuberculosis during 1910 amounted to $64,000,000. Prof. Wilcox bases his figures on the average money loss per death fixed by the International Congress on Tuberculosis in 1907 at $3,828. It is stated that one-ninth of the deaths in the State of New York last year were due to tuberculosis.

The Masonic Grand Lodge of Mississippi, at its recent meeting in Gulfport, elected the following officers: Dr. John S. Brooks, of Lula, grand master; J. R. Williams, of Houston, senior grand warden; A. H. Bays, of Grenada, junior grand warden; Judge Frederick Speed, of Vicksburg, grand secretary; B. V. White, of Meridian, grand treasurer; Rev. J. M. Morse, of Jackson, grand chaplain, and Julius Yaretsky, of Shuqualak, grand tiler.

The President has laid before the Senate the text of a new treaty with Japan, designed to replace that of 1894 and drawn with the special design of eliminating the restrictions upon immigration contained in that treaty. The essential difference between the proposed treaty and the old one is said to be in the fact that the new one omits all reference to such restrictions and leaves to the national honor of Japan the enforcement at her own ports of the limitations upon emigration now expressly placed upon immigration into the United States.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, on Feb. 23, handed down its decision in the famous "eastern and western" cases, which are considered the most important ever brought to the attention of the Commission. The decision disapproves proposed advances in class freight rates in official classification territory, aggregating among all the railroads approximately $27,000,000. The Commission also declines to approve the proposed increase in commodity rates. The railroads naturally are not pleased with the decision, but shippers of freight hail it as a most just pronouncement.

THE JEFFERSON DAVIS MONUMENT, Unveiled in New Orleans on February 22d.

It is generally believed that it is cheaper to travel by railroad in Europe than in America. According to the figures of a recent tourist, however, this is a mistaken view. This American in Europe traveled 2,154 miles. The total fare paid was $76.55, and the charges for carrying baggage were $19.42, making a total of $95.97. Returning to America, the traveler journeyed 2,211 miles. The total cost was $62.90, including parlor car seats and excess baggage charges. This would make European railway travel about 55 per cent more expensive than American. If these figures are correct they furnish another strong argument that America is the most favored of all countries.

THE GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have finished just yesterday, the first round of quarterly conferences of the Greenville District. To say that I am pleased with the outlook of the work would be to express my feelings very mildly. I have never known a district where the prospects were more hopeful and promising. Not a discouraging note has been heard from either pastor or layman. In every appointment, both pastor and people are well pleased.

In the eighteen charges there was only one charge that reduced the assessment for the pastor, while eight made substantial increase. Greenville, under the inspiring leadership of Brother Lagrone, has wiped out its entire church debt, and the church is to be dedicated March 5th, by Bishop Murrah. We are expecting a great day in Greenville when our Mississippian Bishop comes to us. Boyle, Tunica and Friar's Point are at work paying off their indebtedness, and Brother Wasson is expecting to make some improvement in both church and parsonage at Friar's Point this year. A letter from Brother Wm. Connell tells me that they are planning to build a new church at Shelby, one that will be a credit to the congregation worshipping there and to the town. Brother Stormont has made a good start there and his success is assured. Brother Langley is hard at work on the new parsonage at Jonestown, and hopes to have it completed by June.

A meeting of the evangelistic committee was held at Greenville recently and plans are afoot for a revival campaign through the district in the latter part of the winter and early spring. There are two or three meetings in progress in the district at this writing. There were 20 new members reported at the conferences on the first round, and I know of others having been received since the conferences were held.

There is no man in Southern Methodism more beloved by his people than Brother Honnoll. The work he is doing and has done at Tunica and the other churches of his charge would compare most favorably with the work of the greatest pastors of the Church. There is a spirit of expectancy and hopefulness on the part of the people at Leland. Few pastors get a stronger grip on a people than does Brother McCafferty, and unless all signs fail, we will have a great year in that little city. The same is true of T. M. Bradley at Rosedale. At the first quarterly conference the officers and pastor made the best reports I have ever known of going to record there. That worthy and faithful Christian steward and physician, Dr. H.-L. Sutherland, has about regained his usual health, since the stroke of paralysis he had some months since. He is again able to attend to his practice and resume his work in the church. Rev. J. H. Smith has captured all hearts at Boyle, and with his cultured wife, is enterprising large things for the Master in that growing little city. One of the most religious and active congregations in the conference is within his charge, Shinman's Chapel. Two of the pastors of this district are closing out their quadrenniums: McKeown and Ingram. In both instances there have been four happy years for the pastors and churches.

Our district conference will be held at Rosedale, May 12-14. We are very anxious, Doctor, for you to come and be with us. You have a vast number of friends over this district who will be more than happy to see you again. Fraternally,

W. W. WOOLLARD.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LOAN FUND.

On the 26th day of April, 1907, at its annual session at Norfolk, Va., the Sunday School Board established a regular system of Birthday Offerings for our Sunday schools, to be used for such objects as the Sunday School Board from time to time deems most ready and worthy. For the first three years these offerings were directed toward the building of churches in Oklahoma, and much good accomplished thereby.

At its annual session, held in Nashville, Tenn., May 27, 1909, the Sunday School Board decided that, after March 31, 1910, all Birthday Offerings from our Sunday schools should be used to create and enlarge a "Sunday School Loan Fund," to be administered through the Board of Church Extension with sole reference to the needs of the modern Sunday school and only in the interest of those churches providing modern equipment for their Sunday school work.

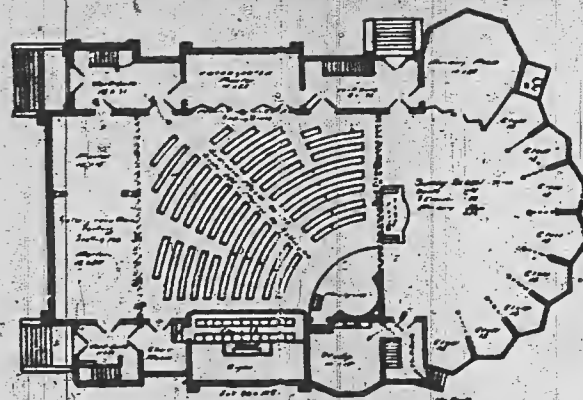

The Sunday school is the greatest adjunct and most fruitful field the Church has to-day, and she should spare no pains or expense to make it the most efficient arm of her service. The modern secular school is being thoroughly equipped and manned for the training of our children, and it is just as essential that our Sunday schools shall have modern methods and equipment for their work.

The modern Sunday school building has become a prime necessity, and should be found in more or less complete form in every church structure. It is the purpose of the Sunday School Loan Fund to emphasize this need everywhere, and to make it possible for many churches, otherwise unable, to remodel or build with that end in view. Many congregations desiring to build might with the help of such a fund provide themselves with such Sunday school facilities as would otherwise be impossible. It is to aid such that this Sunday School Loan Fund has been established.

As a matter of suggestion, we give herewith two views of a very attractive and convenient small church on the modern plan. It is of pressed brick, hollow walls, stone trimmed, with bowled floors, a basement with dining room and kitchen and a gallery. The Sunday school room has a capacity of 325, and cost $13,000. Mr. L. B. Valk, of Los Angeles, Cal., is the architect.

Exterior View.

Main Floor Plan.

The plan of the Sunday School Board contemplates a birthday offering from each scholar in every Sunday school once a year—a penny for every year of his age. Though a small matter for the individual, it serves to develop in the giver a spirit of grateful remembrance of past blessings and of lively interest in the future welfare of the Church. Every Sunday school superintendent knows the difficulty of working without a specially adapted place for the Sunday school, and the great advantages of modern Sunday school equipment. It is hardly possible, therefore, that any wide-awake superintendent will be uninterested in the raising of this Loan Fund. Every Sunday school superintendent should send for a Birthday Jar and enlist his school in the cause.

Birthday Jar.

The accompanying illustration shows the glass jar which the Board of Church Extension proposes to send, free of charge, to every Sunday school that agrees to take up birthday offerings regularly and remit same to this Board at Louisville, Ky., as directed by the Sunday School Board. The jar is made of clear flint glass, has patent metal screw top, and is furnished with perfect padlock and key.

We take pleasure in giving the following word of approval from our efficient Sunday School Editor:

Rev. E. B. Chappell, D.D.

The plan of the Sunday School Board to raise a Church Extension Loan Fund from the birthday offerings meets with my hearty approval. Such a fund will be a worthy monument to our Sunday school work, besides furnishing a permanent source of help to a great cause.

E. B. CHAPPELL,
Sunday School Editor.

It is desirable that every Sunday school in our Church give heed to this call. There is no more promising field in which our Church can make investments, and where the results will be larger and more lasting.

The invitation to join us in building this great Sunday School Loan Fund is also extended to the organized classes and several departments of our Sunday schools.

Order a jar and help in this good cause. For fuller information, literature and Birthday Jars address W. F. McMurtry, Corresponding Secretary, Board of Church Extension, Louisville, Ky.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren:

As was stated in last week's Advocate, it was decided at the mid-year meeting of our Board of Missions, the presiding elders present voting with the Board, to devote the month of March to the raising of our entire missionary assessments. The plan that has worked most successfully is that of having a well-trained missionary committee to make a canvass of the entire membership with the purpose of securing a contribution from every member. It is better to use a contribution envelope and secure a regular weekly contribution. Pastors so desiring might profitably use this system for the securing of all the benevolences and apply the first collections to missions, and thereby get all the missionary assessments in the hands of the treasurer early in the year.

Anyone desiring literature or help in this movement may write Dr. John M. Moore or Dr. J. W. Reed, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

Let us plan definitely, pray earnestly, and work assiduously for "assessments in full."

Yours in the Master's service,

WILLIAM H. COLEMAN,
President of the Board.

HOSPITAL DAY.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of the Methodist Hospital to be built in Memphis has set apart the first Sunday in May to be observed as "Hospital Day." On this day all of the preachers in the Mississippi, North Mississippi, the White River and the Memphis Conferences are requested and expected to take up a collection for the hospital. Also all Sabbath schools and missionary societies in the bounds of these conferences. The Executive Committee is now casting about for one of the strongest and most forcible men to be found in Southern Methodism to place at the head of the movement.

In the meantime, let all Methodists discuss the matter among themselves and with their friends and neighbors. This is a great humanitarian movement, not for Methodists alone, but for destitute and suffering humanity. Do not be timid about approaching people who are not members of the Church for funds, as this is a great philanthropic institution which appeals to every one. Some of the most liberal and kind-hearted people to be found are not members of any church. The Southern Methodists have only one hospital in operation in this country, which is located in Atlanta, Ga. It has six in the foreign fields. The one located in Suchow, China, treated over 20,000 patients last year, and the one at Monterey, Mexico, treated over 30,000. These two institutions have become self-sustaining and are no longer asking aid of the Mission Board. If they can accomplish such great things in a heathen land, there is no sane reason why they cannot succeed here. Hospitals, rescue missions and orphanages stand for practical religion. Medicine is a gift of God as much so as faith, and should be used in healing the sick. The test of true religion is its power to help men relieve the suffering and transform the lives of men. The Executive Committee will meet again in March in Memphis. All members should be present, and others who feel interested are most cordially invited to attend this meeting.

Make all remittances to John R. Pepper, Treasurer, Memphis, Tenn.

JOHN H. SHERARD, President,
Sherard, Miss.

February 20, 1911.

STATISTICAL CORRECTION.

In the Mississippi Conference Journal, page 130, Finance Table, Seashore District, Lumberton Charge, no entry appears for any item after American Bible Society. It should be as follows: delegates' General Conference assessed $1, paid $1; hospital commission assessed $2, paid $2; printing minutes, assessed $2, paid $2; objects not elsewhere reported, $706.50; total finance table, $2,787.50; grand total from tables Nos. 1, 2 and 3, $3,339.31. The omission was due to my failure to complete the tabulation from the report made by the pastor, Rev. T. W. Adams.

The Wesson charge, Brookhaven District, should be credited with $9 in the Finance Table for the Superannuate Endowment Fund. I beg the pardon of all concerned.

PAPA'S MISTAKE.

Papa distinctly said the other day,
That in the night, when I'm asleep so sound,
The earth keeps turning over all the time,
And every morning it's been half-way round.
I thought how grand to see this big round world
Go turning past this window in the hall,
And here I'm up at four o'clock to watch,
And there is nothing going by at all!
I thought that deserts, palm trees and giraffes
Might just be passing by the time I came;
And now, instead of all those lovely things,
Here's this old yellow rose bush just the same!

JAMIE'S SERENADE.

"Mamma, what is a serenade?" asked Jamie.
"It's a song," said mamma. "But why do you want to know?"
"A song!" said Jamie. "Why, I heard Uncle Jim say that he went out to give a serenade on Tuesday night. I thought it was something to give some one."
"Why, you give them a song, you see. When you are very fond of some one, you go at night and sing a song under her window. That is to show the person that you love her."
"Must you do it at night?"
"Yes, I think so."
"But s'pose your mother won't let you sit up late at night, or s'pose you fall asleep and can't wake yourself up."
"Oh, the people that give serenades do it secretly, and they commonly have no trouble in keeping awake at night."
"Oh!" said Jamie, as if he were perfectly enlightened about the matter.
Then mamma forgot all about the matter, but Jamie pondered long and earnestly.
Two nights later grandma was just settling herself for her nap, when she heard a sound that made her raise her night-capped head from her pillow in haste.
"Father, that's Jamie!" she exclaimed.
"Nonsense! Jamie was in dreamland an hour ago," said grandpa.
Then a shrill boyish voice arose on the night air:
"My kittle has gone from her basket,
My kittle has gone up a tree;
Oh, who will go up in the branches
And bring back my kittle to me?
Bring back, bring back,
Oh, bring back my kittle to me, to me!"
"Jamie Carroll, what do you mean? Come right in out of that damp air."
"Wait till I finish my song, grandma," said an aggrieved voice. "You oughtn't interrupt it, 'cause it's a serenade."
"Does your mother know you are here?"
"Of course not. Serenaders are secret."
"Let the boy finish his song," said grandpa, with a chuckle.
"Have you got all your clothes on?" demanded grandma.
"Why, of course."
"Well, put this scarf around your neck and finish your song. Then come to the kitchen door, and I will give you some refreshments."
"Oh, do you get refreshments for serenaders?"
"Yes, indeed. Now hurry."
The shrill refrain was taken up again, and the music finished in double-quick time. When he finished, he found grandma at the door waiting for him, with a plate of the little chocolate cakes that Jamie thought were the very best things in the world to eat. Grandpa was there, too; and, when the refreshments were disposed of, he escorted the small serenader home.
"Good-by, dear," said grandma. "I enjoyed your music very much."
But mamma collapsed with a string of incoherent exclamations when she opened the door to the runaway. "Why didn't you tell me about it?" she demanded.
"Why, mamma, you said yourself that they were secret. And I love grandma the best after you, and I wanted to surprise her. She liked it very much, and I had refreshments and lots of fun."
"But you'll tell me about it next time, won't you? Because people can always tell secrets to their mother."
"All right," said Jamie. "I will." —Christian Standard.

POLICEMAN JAY.

By Margaret Wentworth Leighton.

Policeman Jay is the chief officer in Birdland. Like all good keepers of the peace, he wears a blue uniform, touched up with white and black, and about his neck is a broad, dark collar. Instead of a helmet, this fellow has a topknot, or crest of feathers, which he raises or lowers according to his state of mind. When he is calmly gobbling down caterpillars, or crumbs and suet in some bird restaurant kept by a Band of Mercy boy or girl, you would never know that he possessed a topknot. But if he sees a squirrel approaching, or a cat crouching in the underbrush, he clutches a twig, erects his chest, and jumping up and down in great excitement, screams: "Get it! Get it! Say! Say! Get it!"

Policeman Jay's beat lies along the air route. It starts at the lone pine where he makes his home with his wife and four babies. Over the meadow he flies, then across Blueberry hill, and into the woods on the other side, where all the wood folk go in autumn to gather chestnuts and acorns.

Suddenly he spies a huge black robber just in the act of committing a terrible crime. Does he steal up quietly, this brave Blue-Coat, and clasp a pair of claw cuffs on the bold marauder? No, indeed; that is not his way at all. With a shrill scream he dashes at the great crow perching on the edge of Madam Robin's nest devouring her eggs as fast as he can swallow. Every bird in the forest knows Policeman Jay's alarm-call, and hastens to see what is amiss. Madam Robin and her husband, with piteous cries of distress, dart at the robber, and peck his head. Slowly he rises and starts to sail away over the hill, but half a dozen jays and robins flutter about him, pecking him till he is almost blinded by the onslaught. After a time the bereaved robins return to their empty nest, and carefully carry away all the bits of broken egg-shell. The jays drop off, one by one, till only the bold chief is left to fight his black cousin alone. Flying above the crow, he darts down upon him again and again, till at last the big fellow sinks to a low-growing fir, and slinks down among its branches.

Above everything else the forest policeman loves excitement. Now Mr. Jay is a clever mimic, and when there is nothing else going on, he often hides behind a tree, and whistles like a hawk. Then you should hear him chuckle with delight as he watches the frightened birds hastening to hide from their enemy.

In September, when the wild cherries are ripe, the birds all gather for their farewell feast, and talk over their plans for the winter.

"Well, Chief," asks Mrs. Oriole, "are you going South with us this fall?"

"Indeed, no," answers Blue-Coat. "How could I leave the forest here? No one knows what disasters might befall if I were not here to see after my people."

"Your people?" spoke up the Grosbeak. "What people have you in the winter, pray? I thought we were all summer residents here."

"Ha, ha," laughed Mr. Jay, "that shows how much you know about it. There are those villains the crows, the nuthatches, the chickadees, the woodpeckers, and the pestiferous English sparrows, and many other wood folk to keep in order."

"And how do you live when the fields and woods are covered with thick blankets of snow, when the great blizzards sweep down from the North? Where do you sleep, and what do you find to eat?" questioned the birds.

"Oh, I have caches here and there," answered Blue-Coat, "a few acorns, a couple of chestnuts, and if I'm hard pressed, I take a beakful of grain or nuts from some squirrel's cupboard. As for a bed, why, I can ride out the worst storm that ever raged; if I have a few dried oak leaves over my head, or a pine-branch umbrella."

"What a brave fellow you are!" chorused the birds admiringly. "Good-by, and good luck to you," they called as they started on their southward flight.

"See you again next spring," shouted Blue-Coat. "Good-by!" —From the Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

OUR CONFERENCE CLAIMANTS.

To the Pastors of the Mississippi Conference:

I notice that at our last Annual Conference in the making of the quadrennial boards, I was placed on the Joint Board of Finance. There is no cause for which I would more cheerfully work than for our honored Conference claimants. I want to make an appeal for early collections for this cause this year, and to urge every charge in the Conference to take this collection on its merits and take it at once. I was very glad indeed when about the last day of January our pastor showed me a receipt in full from Magnolia for this cause, and I feel sure that every layman will appreciate seeing this collection taken early. Personally, I can say that the very thought that these men should suffer need is painful. Allow me briefly to set forth why, from a layman's point of view, these claims should be paid early.

First, because as laymen we owe these men a debt which no spasmodic, coerced payment at the end of the year will meet. We owe them and theirs, for value received, our "first fruits." And under this head, I want to say that these men are a benediction in their old age to any community. Magnolia is unusually fortunate in having a number of our honored claimants living here, and no community knows their value better.

Secondly, because early payments are preventive of any possible want. It reminds us of the old adage about "An ounce of prevention." I know I met one of our most honored claimants last year offering his claim on the board as security for a loan for the actual necessities. This should not be. It will not be, if our pastors and people will take this collection early.

Thirdly, early payments are almost double payments. He gives twice who gives early. If anybody has a right to the full benefits of cash transactions it is these very people.

Fourthly, because early payments are the only guarantee of full payments. I am glad we are paying these people all we promise them. We are promising all too little. Conditions financial are problematic this year, but it is no problem to get collections in full now. Pastors, will you not stir your laymen up to a recognition of their duty to take this matter up early this year? I am sure the laymen will help if the matter is properly presented to them. Yours cordially, THAD B. LAMPTON.

I heartily endorse the above appeal and for myself pledge an early collection for this most worthy cause. The writer, Mr. Thad B. Lampton, needs no introduction to Mississippi Methodists. He is a thorough business man, and believes in applying business methods to church problems and work. I am sure the appeal of this honored, high-toned layman will stir the conscience of our pastors and people on this vital matter. Let me urge the collection to be taken early in March. The pastors raising the assessment for this cause, will remit as soon as possible to Bro. S. A. Tomlinson, Gulfport, Mississippi.

MORE REVERENCE NEEDED.

The Western Christian Advocate, of Cincinnati, makes the following pertinent comment upon the lack of reverence frequently exhibited in houses set apart for the worship of God:

"Over in England there is a church organization—The Wesleyan Guild of Divine Worship. It seeks to achieve two objects—the promotion of greater interest and reverence in all things connected with divine worship, and a fuller and more intelligent participation in prayer and praise by the people. It is a distressing remark one of the Wesleyan organs, to witness the irreverence that is apparent in some of our chapels. John Wesley denounced it in his time, and the conference, since then, has often uttered its rebukes. We hope that the evil is not so widespread as we are sometimes tempted to imagine, but it will need a strong effort on the part of all of us to discourage and remove it. We are a little surprised that this is the condition of things among our British cousins. We had thought that it was characteristic of America and somewhat confined to us. We sympathize with the Wesleyans, wish them success in their endeavors, and hope that their example may become contagious. It is painful to note the behavior of many average Protestant congregations. They deserve about all the caustic criticism that Roman Catholics can give. We will not charge them with purposeful irreverence. But that there is a singular lack of thoughtful, reverent conduct in many churches needs no proof beyond the mere observation. The people have not the aspect and bearing of worshippers of Almighty God. In the moments before the service begins there is too much social conversation and laughter in the pews. The behavior is not much different from what it might be at a theater matinee or a concert. There is no evident awe affecting the minds of the congregation."

With the view expressed above by our able contemporary we are in hearty sympathy. Irreverence is closely akin to profanity. The Church undoubtedly needs to develop the social feature of its manifold work, but we do not think the preaching service is the time, or the main auditorium of the Lord's house is the place, to do this. One who comes into the presence of the Infinite God whose glory fills the universe should do so with a feeling of solemnity and awe. We never like to hear persons take too much liberty in calling the hallowed name of him who sits enthroned upon the circle of the heavens. True, he is our Father, but he is also the Lord of all, the King of kings. The holy angels veil their faces when they come before him. Let us not be presumptuous or inappreciative of his divine majesty and greatness. The individual who assumes large familiarity with the Lord lacks some of the finer qualities of sainthood.

WARFARE ON THE PISTOL.

The Christian Intelligencer of New York heartily commends a bill recently introduced in the Legislature of that State to check the firearms evil. By the provisions of the proposed measure, dealers in any kind of firearms small enough to be concealed upon one's person are required to procure a license and to pay a tax of $25, and any party carrying a concealed weapon must pay a tax of $3. It also stipulates that "any person in whose possession is found a bomb or similar device constructed of explosive material, except cartridges for firearm use," shall by the mere fact of having it be adjudged guilty of a criminal purpose and be subject to imprisonment for five years. Every sale of a weapon is required to be registered, with the time of the sale, the name, age, residence, occupation, and license number of the purchaser, and the name of the maker, model, caliber, and manufacturer's number of the weapon sold.

Commenting upon this bill, The Intelligencer says, "It is none too stringent," and expresses the hope that it will be enacted into law. As we view the measure, that part of it which relates to bomb-carrying is sufficiently drastic and is all that could reasonably be desired, but that portion of the bill dealing with the carrying of pistols is far from satisfactory. Wherein lies the wisdom of licensing men to bear upon their persons concealed firearms? We do not believe that in civilized society there is any need or justification for a man going about with a pistol stuck in his pocket. To allow this is to endanger human life and make a large number of homicides a certainty. When their tempers are aroused and men lose control of themselves in the heat of passion, if weapons are handy, they are certain to use them. The number of people who lose their lives accidentally as a result of pistol-carrying should in itself be enough to condemn and stop the practice. Bearing hidden firearms ought to be positively prohibited under heavy penalties, and the manufacture, sale, and importation of pistols absolutely forbidden in every State in the Union. The cheapness of human life in our country is one of the foulest blots upon our civilization, and nothing in the way of legislation would do more to wipe out this shameful reproach than to stop our citizens from going about like walking arsenals, prepared to inflict death upon their fellow-beings.

MR. CARNEGIE'S HUMOR.

Many apparently have the impression that only lawyers, statesmen, orators, and literary men are possessed of large intellectuality. But the fact is, it requires quite as much mentality to be a great captain of industry in our complex modern civilization as it does to shine in public life or to achieve distinction in the field of letters. It is doubtful if there are any abler men beneath the American flag than Andrew Carnegie, Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, and J. J. Hill. Read the history of great fortunes, and you will find that back of nearly everyone of them there stands some man of extraordinary personality.

Particularly is Mr. Carnegie a unique and interesting figure among the eminent men of our time. We were profoundly impressed with his ability a couple of years ago when he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of Congress which was engaged in framing the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Bill. The legislators soon found that they had taken hold of a live wire. The great financier played with them, as a physical giant might with a set of boys. In every colloquy they were beaten clear off the field, and evidently they were much relieved when the examination was ended and the distinguished witness retired.

One of the most fascinating things about Mr. Carnegie is his quaint humor. Two exhibitions of this have lately come to the public attention. One was when in addressing a company of working girls in New York City, a short time since, he touched upon the subject of matrimony and said with a smile, "Don't refuse to marry a man simply because he is a millionaire." The other instance was on the day that he made his recent donation of $10,000,000 to the Carnegie Institute of Research at Washington. He had just written a note to Mr. Robert S. Woodward, the president of the institution, and laid it on his desk, when that gentleman unexpectedly called. What followed was thus set forth by the secular papers:

"Mr. Woodward," said the iron master, as the president entered, "I am very busy." Assuming a reticent air, Mr. Carnegie added, "I need some time to devote to my affairs here"—indicating a mass of correspondence upon his desk—"and I dislike to be interrupted. Would you mind waiting in the next room for a while, and, by the way, here is something that may interest you." Mr. Carnegie nonchalantly handed him the note, followed him to the door, and closed it. Then, while Mr. Woodward read of the endowment, Mr. Carnegie sat down at his desk and chuckled for fully five minutes."

In referring to Mr. Carnegie as a conspicuous example of a man who has evinced large intellectuality and achieved enduring fame in commercial pursuits, we are not unmindful of the fact that he is also an author of note. But it is as one of the foremost captains of modern industry and the most generous philanthropist of his time, that he will be remembered by future generations.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Felicity Street congregation of this city has decided to build a parsonage on the church lot, constructing it so as to face Chestnut Street. It is expected to cost about $4,000, and is to be finished by the first of May.

In addition to those mentioned elsewhere, the following brethren have favored us with lists of subscribers recently, for which they have our sincere thanks: J. M. Lewis, T. L. Porter, A. F. Watkins, E. C. Grice, P. D. Hardin.

Rev. Jasper L. Smith, of Glancy, Miss., in favoring us with a list of subscribers, takes occasion to say some very kind things of the Advocate. We trust it will always be a friend that he can depend upon to help him in his work.

Next Sunday is Sunday School Rally Day in Louisiana. Secretary Ellzey urges every pastor and superintendent to make the utmost possible of the occasion. He hopes to have 100,000 in the Sabbath schools of the State on this day.

Bishop Murrah occupied the pulpit of the First Baptist Church at Jackson, Miss., last Sunday at 11 o'clock. The pastor of this congregation is the Rev. W. A. Borum, who is one of the most effective and brotherly ministers of our acquaintance.

Beginning the first Sunday in April, Rev. C. W. Carter, D.D., will preach a series of sermons at Franklin, La. Needless to say, a great treat is in store for the people of that delightful little city. Rev. C. C. Weir, the pastor, is in great favor with his people.

The first quarterly conference of the Matherville charge, Mississippi Conference, has been held and the outlook for the year is most encouraging. The spirit of unity was most marked. We thank the pastor, Rev. A. S. Oliver, for a good list of subscribers to the Advocate.

In order to convenience Bishop McCoy, who has a rather crowded slate of engagements, Rev. B. P. Jacob, the presiding elder, has changed slightly the time of the Corinth District Conference. It will be held at Myrtle, Miss., May 16-18, instead of May 19-21, as was formerly announced.

A welcome visitor at the Advocate office Monday of this week was Mr. Eugene Foster, formerly of West Point, but now of Columbus, Miss. He is a son of Brother and Mrs. W. L. Foster, who have long been loyal and faithful members of the West Point church. Our young friend was down taking in Mardi Gras.

We thank Rev. J. E. Cunningham, the aggressive presiding elder of the Oxford District, North Mississippi Conference, for a cordial invitation to visit his district conference, soon to be held. Our heart inclines that way, whether we are able to accept or not. Bishop McCoy will preside over the conference.

The good news comes from Centerville, Miss., where Rev. E. W. Barrington is the efficient pastor, that all is moving along well despite the financial depression of the past year. The outlook now is that the charge will have a clean balance sheet at Conference. We thank Brother Barrington for a good list of subscribers.

The March number of the Louisiana Sunday School Success contains the program of the State Convention which is to be held at Monroe, March 15, 16, and 17. Among the prominent speakers we note the names of Doctor and Mrs. H. M. Hamill, Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, and Rev. W. Fred Long, General Secretary of Mississippi. The music will be conducted by Prof. E. O. Excell.

We appropriate the following from the Lincoln County Times of Feb. 23: "The Methodist ministers of the Brookhaven District have made a plan to hold monthly meetings at some points on the I. C. railroad, the first of which will be held at McComb City next Monday. At these meetings live topics of interest to the Church will be discussed."

Mr. S. H. Porter, of Zwolle, La., has been spending some days in New Orleans, and while here dropped in to see us, bringing with him sunshine and good cheer. He reports the work to be progressing most favorably in the Shreveport District, and was enthusiastic in his praise of the new presiding elder, the Rev. H. R. Singleton, whose preaching and lecturing he says are of a high order.

On his way to Gulfport, Rev. T. M. Bradley looked up the home of the Conference organ, but, much to our regret, we were not in when he came. From several sources we have recently heard of the excellent work which he is doing at Rosedale, Miss., and of the high esteem in which he is held by the people there. However, this does not surprise us, since it is the habit of our young friend both to have and to deserve success.

The Hon. W. D. Cutrer and Mr. J. H. Johnson, the former a prominent lawyer and the latter a leading businessman of Clarksdale, Miss., were appreciated callers at our sanctum last Saturday. They had been attending the Masonic meeting at Gulfport and were passing through New Orleans en route home. Conversation concerning the affairs of Mississippi with these long-time friends, though much enjoyed, left us, we frankly confess, a little homesick.

Methodism in Forest, Miss., is evidently enjoying great prosperity. The aggressive membership of our church there will soon have a splendid new building in which to worship, and from present prospects, the pastor will have a new parsonage in which to live by the end of the year. In addition, the pastor's salary has been increased. Rev. A. M. Broadfoot is the happy and efficient shepherd of this flock. We thank him for his interest in extending the circulation of the Advocate.

Messrs. R. D. Peets and S. E. Williamson have been selected to represent Millsaps College in a debate with representatives of Hendrix College, which will take place early in May.

We desire to call special attention to the sketch of Senator-elect Luke Lea, of Tennessee, which appears in this issue. It is from the gifted pen of Dr. H. M. DuBose, whose long residence in Nashville gave him opportunity to form a correct estimate of this forceful young Southerner.

An "every-member" campaign for missions will be conducted throughout the Louisiana Conference during the month of March. Read what Rev. W. H. Coleman and Dr. J. M. Moore have to say on the subject in this number of the Advocate. It is hoped that every pastor and layman will heartily co-operate in the movement and that large things will be accomplished.

Rev. R. O. Weir, of Donaldsonville, La., recently brought his little son, Robert, to the city for medical treatment and it was found necessary to have him undergo an operation, which accordingly was performed at the Hotel Dieu. We are pleased to state it seems to have been a success and that Robert is doing well, though he will not be able to return home for some days yet.

Rev. F. N. Sweeney has just closed a fine meeting at Wilson, La., in which he had the efficient aid of Rev. D. E. Kelley, the Mississippi Conference evangelist. The church was greatly quickened and there were fifteen additions. Brother Sweeney has had twenty-five accessions since Conference. He has our thanks for the 9 new subscribers to the Advocate, just received.

Rev. Halsey Werlein, Jr., has announced to the St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, of Jackson, Miss., his acceptance of a call to San Jose, Cal. Mr. Werlein is a brilliant and most attractive young minister, and we regret to see him go West. The congregation which he is leaving at Jackson has decided to sell their present magnificent property on Capitol Street, and build in a more retired part of the city.

We acknowledge our indebtedness to Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, our genial and popular pastor at Starkville, Miss., for a fine list of subscribers, received a few days since. Brother Brogan's irrepressible humor found its way even into his brief business letter. Referring to one of his late pulpit utterances, he says: "An old negro who heard me preach told me the next day that my sermon was most profoundness and pretty, and as my friend Bingham says, 'It takes a negro to tell the exact truth about a sermon.'"

We regret that in our issue of last week an error was made in the heading of Dr. C. W. Carter's most excellent article. The writer's theme was, "The Preacher in the Pulpit," and his "Reading" was the particular phase of his pulpit work under discussion, and should have been made a subordinate head. In printing it was unfortunately run together, and made to appear as follows: "The Preacher in the Pulpit Reading." It is needless to say that the error was made in the Advocate office. Dr. Carter's copy was perfect.

Among those who favored the Advocate office with their presence within the past few days was Mr. Philip Dougherty, whose home is near Baker, La. He belongs to the Deerford church, and had a kind word for his pastor, the Rev. S. D. Howard. Brother Dougherty came to the city to bring to a hospital for surgical treatment his little grandson, Master John Dougherty, who while hunting was accidentally shot with a twenty-two caliber rifle. We are pleased to state that his wound is not considered dangerous, and that the physicians promise a speedy recovery.

The Advocate has received within the past few months many words of commendation, but none which have been more appreciated than the following from the pen of our young friend, Mr. Charles S. Thames, who in renewing his subscription, says: "The Advocate is a welcome visitor to my home, and is, in my opinion, one of the best papers published in the interest of Southern Methodism." Mr. Thames is associated with Judge W. K. McLaurin in the practice of law at Vicksburg, where their firm is popular and has a good clientele.

Recent visitors in the Crescent City were Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Williams, of Kansas City, who, like good Methodists, took time to drop into the Advocate office. Though strangers far from home, they remembered prayer meeting night and found their way to First Church, where they heard a helpful talk by Dr. Werlein. Mr. and Mrs. Williams had been spending some days at Opelousas, near which city they have acquired property. It was their expectation to return home by way of Texas, stopping in San Antonio and perhaps at some other points.

In a business letter to the office, Rev. A. H. Williams, of Shuqualak, Miss., has the following to say of his labors on Sunday, Feb. 19: "I drove 22 miles yesterday behind a span of nimble trotters—10 of this in a down-pour of rain. I met a very excellent congregation at the reliable Salem Church; also I walked two miles and landed all right and dry-shod. Incidentally I mentioned the New Orleans Advocate to three people, and secured three subscribers; but they were all sensible people, etc." Pretty good work for a rainy day!

As is usual with him, Rev. V. C. Curtis is having gratifying success in his labors at Kosciusko, Miss.

Under date of Feb. 21, he writes as follows: "As far as I am able to judge, our work is prospering. The people seem appreciative, and are responsive to the calls of the Church. We are having large congregations, and the spiritual interest appears to be deepening. The attendance upon the Sunday school has doubled within the last sixty days. We have now provided Sunday school rooms, which were much needed. By the grace of God and faithful service, we expect a great year."

Our pastor at Hazlehurst, Rev. N. B. Harmon, was expecting a great time last Sabbath, and doubtless had it, though a report of the day's proceedings has not reached us. The arrangement was to have a union service in the interest of education at the Methodist Church at 11 o'clock, with President Hull, of Millsaps College, as the speaker, and a union rally at the Baptist Church in the evening with addresses by Brother Hull and the Hon. J. S. Sexton. If there was not enthusiasm when these gentlemen spoke, eloquence is powerless to stir the hearts of a Coghlan County audience.

The City Mission Board of New Orleans met at St. Mark's Hall on February 22. The several workers under its supervision submitted their reports, and Rev. N. E. Joyner made an earnest plea for the establishment for an employment bureau. An election of officers was held, and the entire corps, who have toiled so faithfully in the interest of the work, were retained. These are as follows: Mrs. W. W. Carre, president; Mrs. D. C. Worrell, vice-president; Mrs. T. G. Snelling, second vice president; Mrs. J. B. Parker, corresponding secretary; Mrs. A. A. Bartels, recording secretary, and Mrs. Elmer E. Wood, treasurer. Miss Ragland, being run down physically from overwork, was given a leave of absence, and is recuperating at the Sunshine Cottage, at Covington, La.

We acknowledge the reception of a copy of the Journal of the General Conference of 1910, held at Asheville, N. C., last May. It is a paper bound volume of 440 pages, neatly printed, and with a full index at the close. It contains an admirable summary of the proceedings of the last session of our great law-making body, and is a valuable compendium of useful information concerning church affairs. It ought to be in the hands of every preacher and many of our laymen. "Know thy Church," is a good motto for a twentieth-century Methodist. And there is not a particle of doubt, that if our people knew more of the workings and achievements of Methodism, they would love and appreciate it more. Send to Messrs. Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss., for a copy of this Journal. The price is 75 cents.

Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt will make one personal call when he visits Jackson on March 11, and that will be on the family of the late Bishop Charles B. Galloway, for whom he entertained great admiration and a warm feeling of friendship. He notified the Committee of Arrangements a few days ago of his desire to make this visit, and requested them to include it in their plan for the day. In showing this mark of respect to the greatest and best loved Mississippian that has figured in that State for decades, Mr. Roosevelt does credit to his own head and heart. We know that the Bishop also held this distinguished statesman in very high regard. We have in our possession a letter written by him just before Mr. Roosevelt's last visit to Memphis and to Vicksburg in which he said: "Take a good look at Teddy. He is a great man, and my friend." Some think that Mr. Roosevelt's saner view of the negro question, which marked the closing years of his administration, came as a result of discussing that perplexing problem with Bishop Galloway. Nor is this at all unlikely, since it is a fact that he counseled with Mississippi's brilliant son concerning many things affecting this section of the Union. There is scarcely a doubt that at the time of his death Bishop Galloway was the most trusted and influential leader in the entire South, both in the affairs of Church and State.

A WORD TO PASTORS AND SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

By Charles D. Bulla.

The Wesley Adult Bible Class movement is being taken up with interest wherever its purpose is understood. The need of some agency by which men can be won to the Sunday school is apparent, and nothing that the Church has ever employed has been so successful in compassing this end as the organized adult Bible class; it is the best brotherhood; workers are discovered and developed; emphasis is placed upon Christian service.

It is manifestly impossible for the superintendent of the Wesley Adult Bible Class Department to reach all Bible classes with literature, giving the plan of our Church for the organization of adult classes, because the addresses of teachers and presidents are not known. Therefore, in view of the importance of this work, our preachers and Sunday school superintendents are earnestly requested to procure such literature as is needed and organize and enroll their adult classes. In doing so they will bring men and women into a helpful Methodist comradeship. Literature will be sent upon request by the superintendent, Rev. Charles D. Bulla, 910 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

NOTES FROM THE SARDIS DISTRICT.

Dear Brother Meek: The first round of my fourth year on this district, just completed, shows continued progress on all lines of church work. The pastors are all doing well, and the Sunday school interests are booming. Already Brother Tucker, the pastor at Sardis, and J. S. Carlton, the superintendent, have the Sunday school room filled and more coming in nearly every Sunday. Ex-Governor G. D. Shands has a male adult class that is gathering the men in and which promises to accomplish great good. The Sunday school at Senatobia has outgrown the church. It was inspiring when I was there recently to see the children and grown people crowding in Sunday morning through the rain to be present. This school has an unusual number of superior teachers, such as Brother H. G. Gill, of the Bible class; T. P. Hill, and several ladies who give much time to this work. They have an inspiring teachers' meeting under the leadership of the superintendent, Hon. Herbert Holmes. A company of young men came to Brother Pope, the pastor, requesting that he teach them. He is doing this and this brings many men into the school. In fact, all of the stations and most of the circuits are doing well in the Sunday school work.

Coldwater, under the leadership of Brother D. W. Babb, leads the district in the amount paid for missions the first quarter. I noted that Courtland, Brother Porter's work, made the best report at the Annual Conference that perhaps was ever made from that charge, and Eureka followed closely under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. C. Wesley Baley. We feel that if we can get the Conference organ well distributed over the district, it will mean much toward the upbuilding of the various interests of the Church, and help us much in the effort to raise the twelve hundred dollar increase on benevolences, including an advance of one hundred dollars on the salary of the presiding elder.

Wall Hill charge has a new house of worship that they want dedicated at the next quarterly conference. This would have been done last fall but for the death of their pastor, Brother W. J. Eckels, who did much to get the house seated and a debt paid off.

Mr. Editor, we desire that you come to the district conference without failure. It will be held the second week in May, at Hernando, and we hope to have many new subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate before that time.

W. M. YOUNG, P. E.

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

We add three charges to our "Honor Roll" this week. Shaw and Merigold, Moorhead, and Holly Springs Circuit. The list as it now appears is as follows:

Mansfield, La., Rev. A. W. Turner, pastor.
Bogalusa, La., Rev. J. M. Alford, pastor.
Tunica, Miss., Rev. J. W. Honnoll, pastor.
Lumberton, Miss., Rev. T. W. Adams, pastor.
Ruleville, Miss., Rev. O. L. Savage, pastor.
Homewood, Miss., Rev. W. W. Graves, pastor.
Houston, Miss., Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor.
Seventh Avenue, Meridian, Miss., Rev. J. A. Wells, pastor.
Shaw and Merigold, Miss., Rev. L. A. McKeown, pastor.
Moorhead, Miss., Rev. W. V. Shearer, pastor.
Holly Springs Circuit, Miss., Rev. W. L. Broome, pastor.

All of the officials of the churches in the above charges are reported as being subscribers to this Advocate.

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over two hundred words in length will be published free of charge. All over two hundred words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around.

BRUCE G. DUBARD, son of M. G., and Sallie M. Dubard was born Feb. 19, 1877 and died Jan. 19, 1911, having been sick only a few days. Although only thirty-four years of age, he had established a character that commanded both the respect and admiration of those who knew him. When quite young he joined the Methodist Church of which he was a faithful member till death. To him, no doubt, Christ will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant," for he had used for his glory the talents committed to him. He is survived by a wife, baby boy, father, two sisters and many other relatives and friends who mourn their personal loss. His body was buried in the Spring Hill Cemetery, Friday evening, Jan. 19, 1911, witnessed by a large crowd. OLIN RAY, Pastor.

ALLIE EUSTANE STEELE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Steele, aged 5 years, 11 months, 16 days. On the evening of December 3, the little spirit of Allie went back to God who gave it. She was loved by all who knew her. Of course we know words of comfort cannot heal the broken hearts crushed by her untimely death. Bereaved ones, you should feel comforted by the fact that while you are struggling with this old world she is singing with the angels. Loved ones, keep not for her; she is safe with God evermore.

HER TEACHERS.

JAMES MALONE HONNOLL, son of the late Rev. Moses H. Honnoll and Onada Hawkins Honnoll, also a nephew of our patriarch, Rev. J. W. Honnoll, of the North Mississippi Conference, was born in New Albany, Miss., Oct. 22, 1902. He joined the Methodist Church in Verona at nine years of age. He fell through an elevator shaft in Birmingham, Ala., Oct. 19, 1910, and died in a few hours. Thus passed away the baby child of Sister Honnoll upon whom she was beginning to lean hopefully for help and future support. Malone was a bright boy in school and loved his mother and sisters almost to idolatry. He had made a fine impression in his new home, having become a regular attendant at both Sunday school and church. Though he had been from home but a short time, he wrote many affectionate letters back to his mother, one of which came just the day before his death, which sad event cast a deep gloom over his home town of Verona. His uncle, J. W. Honnoll, had a talk with him last summer on his future state, and he said he was all right. The immense crowd that attended his funeral and the large floral offerings attested the love for him and sympathy for his weeping family, composed of a mother, six sisters, and a brother. May the good Lord comfort them and bring them together in heaven!

D. W. BABB.

Mrs. MARY BURT, wife of W. R. Burt of Duck Hill, Miss., died on February 8, 1911. She bore a sacred relation to her community, which is shown by the expression of sorrow on the faces of her neighbors who had to give her up. She also bore a sacred relation to her home, because she did all in her power to make it bright and happy, which she successfully did. But it had to lose her. She bore the most sacred relation to God, which was shown three days before her death, when she told the writer that while praying that morning, God had rolled all clouds away. And it is a blessed thought that although her community and her home had to lose her, yet because of her beautiful Christian life God did not have to lose her, but took her to himself.

J. D. WROTEN.

Mrs. TWEENETT PATTERSON JENKINS was born July 3, 1849, and died January 24, 1911. She was left an orphan at an early age. Although deprived of a mother's love, she was tenderly cared for by an aunt, Miss Margaret Walker, a venerable lady, whose integrity and Christian life were an inspiration to all who knew her. So "as the twig was bent the tree was inclined," and Tweenett united with the Methodist Church when quite young and was a loyal member to the end of her life. She was a devoted wife and mother, and faithful friend. The Lord saw fit that she should pass through much sorrow and suffering. This is over now; her work on earth is finished. The tired, suffering body has been laid to rest in the beautiful burying ground at old Shiloh, there to await the resurrection. She will be sadly missed by friends and neighbors, who loved her; but Oh, how keenly must she be missed by her bereaved husband and only surviving son! May the good Shepherd comfort and sustain them in their sorrow, and may they so live as to meet her in the bright beyond!

A. P.

Mrs. ADRIENNE GIBSON, daughter of Daniel and Jennie Gibson, was born in Warren county, Miss., December 12, 1847, and died in Crystal Springs, Miss., January 24, 1911. She was married to Mr. Gadi Gibson, April 15, 1867, by Rev. J. W. McNeill. Three sons were born to them—Thomas K., Stewart and Edward, and one daughter, Mrs. Fannie Sims, all of whom, with the devoted husband, are left to mourn her departure. In 1880 she moved to Crystal Springs, where the balance of her useful life was spent. The former pastors of this charge will remember her as a faithful, earnest worker in the church, always loyal and true to the pastor, ever ready to help in any way to advance the cause of the Master. I have known her as a suffering invalid, enduring without complaint, patiently awaiting relief, and hoping for restoration to health and strength that she might take up her active work again. But deliverance from her suffering came in her translation to that home where sickness and suffering will be no more. A noble Christian woman has gone, and our church here has lost one of its most devoted and faithful members. But the heaviest blow falls upon her devoted husband, with whom she had gone hand in hand for nearly forty-four years. May the spirit of the ascended wife and mother be upon the husband and children and inspire them to a closer walk with the God she served! May our Father's richest blessings rest upon the bereaved ones, and may he give them comfort in their great sorrow!

JAS. G. GALLOWAY.

DATE OF DISTRICT CONFERENCE CHANGED.

Dear Doctor Meek: Please state that in order to convenience Bishop McCoy, who is to be with us, the date of the Corinth District Conference has been changed from May 19-21 to May 16-18. The opening session will convene Tuesday, May 16, at 3 p. m.

Not Simply a Car—but Car Service

Now is the time of year when you are beginning to think of the car you will buy in the spring. You will give the matter careful consideration, and you should not be influenced by the misleading claims of some manufacturers. If your judgment is sound you will make a profitable investment.

There are several cars made, selling from $1,500 to $2,000, that would prove a good investment. And among these few cars some would give you even more value for your money.

Remember when you buy that the absolute limit of dollar for dollar return is reached in cars selling under $2,000. When you pay more, your returns are not in proportion to your investment. You are paying for something you are not getting.

Buying an automobile is like buying any reliable stock. There should be steady dividends.

Dividends in the health of out-of-doors that a good car brings. Dividends in the time saved by the quick response of a willing servant. Dividends in consistent car service and the lasting satisfaction of a good car, free from mechanical defects and poor workmanship.

To get all this you must buy, not simply a car—but car service. You must buy correct design, accurate construction and good materials. You must buy sound motor car value.

In the MARATHON you get all this.

But don't accept our mere statement. For we can convince you of its truth. The burden of the proof is with us. With you lies the judgment.

We have a catalogue which describes, in detail, the wealth of mechanical excellence, finish and dependable utility that characterizes the MARATHON.

And it's yours for the asking.

Won't you ask for it?

Tidings from the Field

Amite City, La.:

The work at Amite City is moving along nicely. Last Sunday night, February 19, we had a great service, when five strong young men stood before the chancel and took the Church vows and there pledged their lives to God.

This makes seven who have joined by baptism and on profession of faith this year. The prospects are good. Our church is sad at the loss of one of our best members and a steward, Bro. F. G. Goldsby. A suitable notice will appear soon.

H. W. BOWMAN, P. C.

February 21, 1911.

Moorhead, Miss.:

This list of subscribers, with some others sent you some days ago, includes all the officers of the church on the Moorhead charge, so I believe this entitles us to a place on the honor roll. I want to say that the enclosed and former lists of subscribers not only include the officers of the churches, but they represent about seven-eighths of the families that belong to the churches on the charge. I hope before many more weeks to be able to get an Advocate into every home in the entire charge. We have a very choice people to serve here on this charge. They are very co-operative and responsive. The ladies here at Moorhead have just established a nursery in their bungalow, so as to make it possible for mothers and fathers to attend preaching services.

Our building committee has just closed the contract for remodeling and adding to the parsonage. The expenditure, including an additional lot, will be some $1,200. We have all money virtually in hand for this work.

W. V. SHEARER.

Shaw, Miss.:

Please allow me space in The Advocate to make a short report of our work here. Our first quarterly conference convened February 19 and 20. Bro. Woollard was with us in great power and preached two helpful sermons. At the business meeting of the conference we were glad to report 116 visits, four additions to the church—Home, Conference and Foreign Missions and Church Extensions all paid in full; two-thirds of our assessment for district parsonage paid, and the salaries of the presiding elder and pastor increased. Our two Sunday schools are doing a fine work. Both Home and Foreign Missionary Societies are active and prosperous. All this is due to the fact that we have a very faithful membership, ever ready to respond to the call of the pastor to any good work. They always come with a smile and not a frown, and that makes an easy work. The good women of Shaw and Merigold, who greeted us in the beginning of the new Conference year with a "Christmas shower" of many good and valuable gifts, have also placed a new organ and song books in the church at Shaw, made much improvement on both church and parsonage and purchased a new piano for the Sunday school at Merigold, and are planning a new Sunday school room at that place.

The people of this charge are wide-awake and at work, and substantial achievements for the Master are sure to follow.

The Advocate is in the home of every official member of our church and nearly every Methodist family in our charge. It is my desire and shall be my effort to keep it there. It also goes into the home of our Baptist pastor at Shaw, and I now have his renewal subscription. I shall begin work for The Advocate at once.

L. A. McKEOWN.

Eunice, La.:

Dear Brother Meek: Our first quarterly meeting was held at Branch, Feb. 11 and 12. We begin our second year on this charge with better prospects for a successful year than we had last year. The reports at our quarterly conference show an advance over the same period of last year, both financially and spiritually. The membership of my church at Branch, besides paying the salary of the pastor up to date, gave him a pious and consistent of provisions enough to last for a considerable time. There are many choice people at Branch, and we find a number of good people at each church on the charge. C. J. Hundly, one of our neighbors, has been a valuable friend to the preacher. In fact, there is not a week passes but that something to help the preacher in the way of living is sent into the parsonage. We have two physicians, Dr. Wm. Childs and Dr. W. A. Jenkins, who stand by their pastor, both of the Church Point neighborhood. Our presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Denson, is held in high esteem by the membership. We are planning and praying for a revival and all the collections in full.—H. B. Vandenberg.

Obituaries.

On Jan. 24, 1911, Mrs. E. S. REAMES departed this life after an illness of but a few days. Mrs. Reames was born November 6, 1835, and died at the early age of 75 years. She was married in 1906. She leaves to mourn her death a husband, three little children, a father, brother, four sisters and many dear friends. She was loved by all who knew her, because of her gentleness to everyone. She was true to the Golden Rule, which says: "Therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do you even so unto them, for this is the law and the prophets." In early girlhood she became a member of the Methodist Church. She was faithful and trusted in Christ, the friend of us all, who said: "Come unto me, all that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Mrs. Reames has finished her earthly pilgrimage; she has left us an example of sweet Christian love, which we pray may have an everlasting influence upon others, who, too, shall be called to give an account for the way in which they have lived, and who know not the time nor the hour.

A LOVED ONE.

GEORGE FLETCHER BASS, the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Bass of Pachuta, Miss., was born February 28, 1874, near Liberty, Clark county, Miss. In 1889 he came with his parents to Pachuta, where he made his home until his death, on December 25, 1910. In December, 1897, he was married to Miss Mattie Heath, who for fourteen years had proven a faithful wife. Brother Bass had a long, hard illness. He was operated on for appendicitis about three months before his death; other troubles set in, and his suffering was intense. He realized that he could not get well, and five days before he died he called his family to his bedside and bade them good-bye. Three days before his death he waked up singing, "Oh, How I Love Jesus," and asked that "Old-Time Religion" and "Trust and Obey" be sung. He was buried by the Woodmen of the World, and Rev. J. H. Herne preached the funeral sermon. May the comforting grace of our Heavenly Father sustain the bereaved wife and protect the four little children!

J. W. THOMPSON.

Mrs. M. E. DRAKE (nee Tolbert), wife of Mr. J. C. Drake, was born in Lauderdale county, Miss., December 22, 1860, and departed this life February 12, 1911. On the 9th of February, while she was standing by the fire, her clothes caught fire and she was fatally burned before the flames could be extinguished. After three days of intense suffering, her spirit returned to God who gave it, and on the 13th inst. we laid her remains away in the cemetery at old Bethel Church, to await the morning of the resurrection. She gave herself to God in the days of her girlhood. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for about thirty-eight years. One of her little girls preceded her to the Glory Land by nine months. Sister Drake was a faithful wife and a devoted mother. She leaves a husband, one son and two daughters, and a number of other relatives to mourn her death. May God's comforting grace sustain the bereaved!

HER PASTOR.

Daleville, Miss.

Quick Relief From Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time, it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 24 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

VARIETY IN OPENING MEETINGS.

We should aim at variety in all the meetings. Avoid sameness. There are a number of ways in which to open a meeting, and much depends upon the interest elicited in the opening exercises. The Canadian Epworth Era suggests several good and helpful ways for opening the devotional meeting:

"Open with silent prayer. Open with an appropriate solo. Open with a series of sentence prayers. Open with a blackboard talk on the topic. Open with a word from your pastor, previously asked to give it. Open directly with some abrupt and striking word about the subject. Open with an appropriate recitation, rendered by some younger member. Open with a Bible verse brought by the members as their testimony. Open with the scripture lesson read by two members who stand before the chapter and read alternate verses. Open with a series of Bible verses bearing on the subject, given out before the meeting to a number of members, who read in the order in which the slips are numbered. Open with a Bible-reading on the subject, making sure beforehand that the members bring their Bibles. Give out numbered slips containing references, and have them read in order. In your opening always seek to touch the highest themes. Remember that novelty is of value only as a stepping-stone to interest. If you can get the interest in an old way, do so."

The result was that more than two hundred were present, and the prayer meetings have been better attended ever since.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

BOYS' LEAGUE WORK.

Extension of the Boy Scouts to the Boys' League.

Our leaders in League work announce another forward step in the development of the work for boys. By this forward movement the principal features of the Boy Scouts are included in our work. Our boys may now be organized as a division of the Boy Scouts of the Epworth League.

With the limited space we have at our disposal we cannot give a detailed sketch of the work of the Scouts, but suffice it to say that there are three classes of Scouts: First-class, Second-class and Tenderfoot. To join the Scouts a boy must be 12 years of age and pass certain tests. Then he takes the Scouts' oath and is enrolled as a Tenderfoot, when he is entitled to wear the button-hole badge.

Before he becomes a Scout a boy must take the Scout's oath thus: "I give my word of honor that I will do my best: 1. To do my duty to God and my country. 2. To help other people at all times. 3. To obey the Scout law."

The Scout law consists of a code of lofty moral requirements and of broad, practical sympathies which set the whole movement upon a plane of unusually high merit. The following is a summary of the law:

1. A Scout's honor is to be trusted.
2. A Scout is loyal to his country, his officers, his parents, and his employers.
3. A Scout's duty is to be useful and to help others. He must try his best to do a good turn to somebody every day. And he must not take any reward for being helpful or courteous.
4. A Scout is a friend to all and a brother to every other Scout.
5. A Scout is a friend to animals.
6. A Scout smiles and whistles under all circumstances.
7. A Scout is thrifty—that is, he saves in order that he may not be a burden to others and that he may have money to give away to others when they need it.

Every Scout Patrol started among boys under the influence of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will be enrolled upon the roster of the Boy Scouts of the Epworth League at Nashville. Every Patrol thus registered will also be entered upon the roster of the Boy Scouts of America at 124 East Twenty-Eighth Street, New York City. In this way each Patrol, while it will be distinctly a part of the machinery of our own church work with boys, will have membership in the international movement of the Boy Scouts. And each Patrol will bear two numbers, one given it by the Epworth League and one given it by the Boy Scouts of America, thus Patrol No. 1024-A, 608-H. Registration cards may be had by addressing the Boys' League, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.—Florida Christian Advocate.

"THE BIBLE MODE OF BAPTISM" GOING INTO ALL THE WORLD.

The latest publication on the subject of Baptism, a booklet of 64 pages by Rev. J. E. Mahaffey, proving beyond the shadow of a doubt that Sprinkling was the original, Apostolic and Scriptural mode of baptizing, is already making its way to the uttermost parts of the earth. Hundreds of letters testifying of its merit, pronounce it the best thing of the kind that has ever been printed, exactly suited to the needs of our time, and urge that a copy be placed in every Methodist home.

The retail price of the booklet is 15c a copy, but in order to further introduce it, the author has reserved a few to send out to the first persons who enclose $1 for 15 copies. This is less than 7c each, postpaid, and the supply will not last long. If you want something to fortify your people against immersion delusions, make your members bold their heads up and march over to Canaan on dry ground, send $1.00 at once to the Mahaffey Pub. Co., Clinton, S. C.

A Warning to Many.

Some Interesting Facts Regarding Health Statistics.

Few people realize to what extent their health depends upon the condition of the kidneys.

The physician in nearly all cases of serious illness, makes a chemical analysis of the patient's urine. He knows that unless the kidneys are doing their work properly, the other organs cannot be brought back to health and strength.

When the kidneys are neglected or abused in any way, serious results are sure to follow. According to health statistics, Bright's Disease which is really an advanced form of kidney trouble, caused nearly ten thousand deaths in 1909, in the State of New York alone. Therefore, it behooves us to pay more attention to the health of these most important organs.

An ideal herbal compound that has had remarkable success as a kidney remedy is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy.

The mild and healing influence of this preparation is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of cures.

If you feel that your kidneys require attention, and wish a sample bottle, write to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. Mention this paper and they will gladly forward it to you absolutely free, by mail.

Swamp-Root is sold by every druggist in bottles of two sizes—50c. and $1.00.

MRS. MARGARET PARKER.

After a long illness and intense suffering, Mrs. MARGARET PARKER entered into rest Feb. 2, 1911. She was born in New Orleans, Jan. 6, 1844. Her maiden name was O'Neal. On Feb. 28, 1868, she was happily married to Mr. Daniel Parker, who survives her. To this union nine children were born, seven of whom are now living. All of the children have positions of honor and usefulness; Joseph and Charles are painters by trade, John is a wheelwright, Mrs. Fuller and Miss Eva are trained nurses, George and Miss Ada are missionaries in Brazil. A good woman was Mrs. Parker and she has left her impress upon those who survive her, and thus her influence for good has not ceased in her going away. She was a woman of indomitable will-power and energy. What she set her mind to do, she did regardless of the cost attached and obstacles confronted. Only a woman of her rock fiber could have accomplished what she did. She was a hard worker, seeming never to grow tired. As a housekeeper and home builder she had few equals. Mrs. Parker was loyal and true in her friendships and in her affections. She was very decided in her likes and dislikes. Those whom she loved were enthroned forever in her heart. For them she would gladly sacrifice. She was not blind to their shortcomings; she overlooked them—she forgave. During the last years of her life she was not physically able to attend church services with any degree of regularity; yet she was always interested in the church and was delighted to hear of any progress. She was a deeply religious woman. She was reared a Roman Catholic, but in her girlhood was converted and joined the Methodist Church, in which she remained faithful until the day of her death. The high esteem and affection in which she was held was evidenced by the large number of Methodists from every church in New Orleans and many others in attendance at her funeral service. The following preachers were present, some of them taking part in the service: Drs. S. H. Werlein, J. T. Sawyer, J. M. Henry, Revs. C. D. Atkinson, H. T. Carley and J. G. Snelling. A faithful wife, a devoted mother, a true friend and a good woman has been called to her eternal reward. May the blessings of our God rest upon the aged companion who has been left to walk the pathway of life alone and upon the children to whom she gave a mother's love!

Her pastor, W. W. HOLMES.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, our brother and co-laborer, W. L. Weems, was removed in the early hours of the beautiful Sabbath of January 15, 1911, from his earthly abode to his celestial home; and

Whereas, we, the official representatives of this pastoral charge, in Quarterly Conference assembled, desire to place on record our high appreciation of his Christian character and most worthy service during a long and active connection with the Shubuta Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as steward and trustee; therefore, be it

Resolved, first, That while we feel most keenly our great loss, in consequence of which our hearts are shrouded in grief, yet we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father and rejoice in the hope and triumph that come to all his children by grace through faith in Christ Jesus, our Lord.

Second, That in the passing away of Brother Weems our church has lost a most valuable member; the community a noble illustration of true manhood and the family a model husband and affectionate father.

Third, That we hold in sacred memory his fidelity to the Church, and commend his godly example to the young men of the community.

Fourth, That we tender to the faithful wife, devoted children and grief-stricken loved ones our heart-felt sympathy and pray the God of all comfort to console them in this experience of immeasurable sorrow, and commend them unto him who can sanctify their grief to their eternal good.

Fifth, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Quarterly Conference, that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the Mississippi Messenger and to the bereaved family.

Signed: B. F. Jones, pastor; D. W. Heidelberg, T. A. Ledyard, J. E. Rainwater, J. B. Ferrell, S. H. Terrall.

"HONOR TO WHOM HONOR."

Dear Dr. Meek: In Bro. May's "write up" of the Columbia charge, he gives me credit for assisting in the erection of the beautiful new church at that place, and I hasten to correct this. I had nothing to do with the building of that modernly-equipped church—one of the prettiest in Louisiana. So far as the ministry is concerned, such honors belong to Bros. H. O. White and Paul M. Brown, the presiding elder of the Alexandria district.

In "writing up" the preachers' meeting I failed to mention a very interesting talk by one of our "elect ladies," Mrs. Dr. Sewell, District Secretary of the W. F. M. Society. I enjoyed it very much and am sure the rest of the brethren did. I am sorry I did not mention this in my report. How the Church could get along without such women I cannot see.

Cordially, I. T. REAMES.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Rev. R. M. Brown has organized a promising Epworth League at Boyce, La., with Mr. Willie Townsen president.

On Monday night, February 6, Hon. H. H. White entertained his Bible class in Alexandria, and those in attendance report a most enjoyable evening socially.

Rev. H. W. Ledbetter of Colfax, La., writes:

"The Sunday school at Colfax is growing. The small church has been curtained off into rooms. Blackboards and maps have been added. The teachers and officers are holding a weekly council. Mrs. G. H. McKnight superintends the work of grading."

The Louisiana Sunday School Missionary recently had a treat in an examination of the books of Rev. Elton Wilson on child nurture from the standpoint of the religious psychologist. For some years Brother Wilson has been a student of these subjects, and is quite a specialist in this most important field of modern science. Other pastors and Sunday school workers might well follow his example.

Rev. B. H. Sheppard reports there were 115 in Sunday school at Many, La., on the first Sunday in February; that all departments were at work, the graded literature in use, and that there is probability of building a Sunday school room this year. He thinks that the Many church may soon be a station. Louisiana Methodism has no more loyal or energetic superintendent than Dr. J. M. Middleton, whose worth is equally great as a steward.

The Sunday school at Glenmora is superintended by Mrs. A. H. Evans, who with other elect ladies has ordered opera chairs for the church. At a recent rally Mrs. Melder was chosen home department superintendent. Miss Morris took charge of the cradle roll and Miss May of the Philathea Bible Class. Mr. Lewis is the efficient secretary. Rev. J. N. Hall, the pastor, is a graduate of Millsaps, and as "a man of parts" is pushing his work with zeal.

The Sunday school at Melder, on the Glenmora Campus, has been reorganized, with Prof. M. L. Munro, superintendent; Mrs. Carruth, superintendent of home department; Miss Kirkpatrick, superintendent of the cradle roll; Mr. Gordey, teacher for the young men's Baracca class; Miss Gilbert, teacher for the young women's Philathea class, and Mr. Willie Gilbert, secretary and treasurer. Here is a fine class of young people, and the Sunday school has a great work to perform.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

Don't forget the State Sunday School Convention in Columbus, March 21, 22, 23. The State work needs you, and you need the State work.

Since Conference the Sunday school at Fernwood has been reorganized under the efficient management of the pastor, Rev. D. Scarborough and his up-to-date superintendent, Brother Linton. They have a Cradle Roll, Beginners' Department, Primary, Junior, Home Department, and are using the graded literature.

Another school which has taken on new life in the last few months is at Purvis. Prof. B. A. Tolbert, the efficient head of the Agricultural School at that place, is superintendent. Brother Anders, the pastor, is in line. It is being graded as rapidly as possible. The graded lessons are being introduced, and arrangements are perfecting for instituting organized classes.

The Sunday school at Hub has been reorganized with Miss Bettie Rankin as superintendent. Eighteen months ago, this school was organized with Miss Lucile Baylis as superintendent. Later a gentleman was put at the head of it. A few conceived the idea of merging it into a union school. As such, it lasted only a few Sundays. Now it is proposed to continue it as a denominational school. It is thoroughly supplied with our literature, and as far as possible is organized.

Jackson, First Church, Rev. Alfred F. Smith, pastor, and J. C. Cavett, superintendent, has seven organized adult Bible classes. One of these meets in Smith Park, just in front of the Epworth Hall, every Sabbath morning. Nothing is more inspiring than to see over fifty young men sitting with bared heads on the benches in the open park between the hours of ten and eleven studying God's Word. The class is led by one of the professors at Millsaps College. This class calls itself, "The Open Air Class."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

We are often told that it is difficult to get money for the needy and poor and sorrowing, but that must be on the other side of the sea. On Sunday, February 5th, before the lesson, the president of a men's class told the story of a little orphan girl who needed a cork limb—an indifferent crutch was causing her poor little body to suffer. As a preparation for the lesson they laid plans and raised the money to get her a good cork limb at once—big, brave fellows with tender, sympathetic hearts. When we reach the point of helping others as we would be helped we are rooting ourselves deep in the best life-work.

Organization is needed in all departments of this great work. How can children be better trained to take the places of their elders than by teaching them early how to sing, pray, preside, and go out and get others and bring them to the feet of Christ who so loved little children? Organize your class of "teen-age" boys, give them a good teacher and room to expand, and you will soon see where you have allowed the great leak to come in your work. It is estimated that 75 per cent. of boys of this age are lost to the Sunday School, and this condition of things must be speedily remedied.

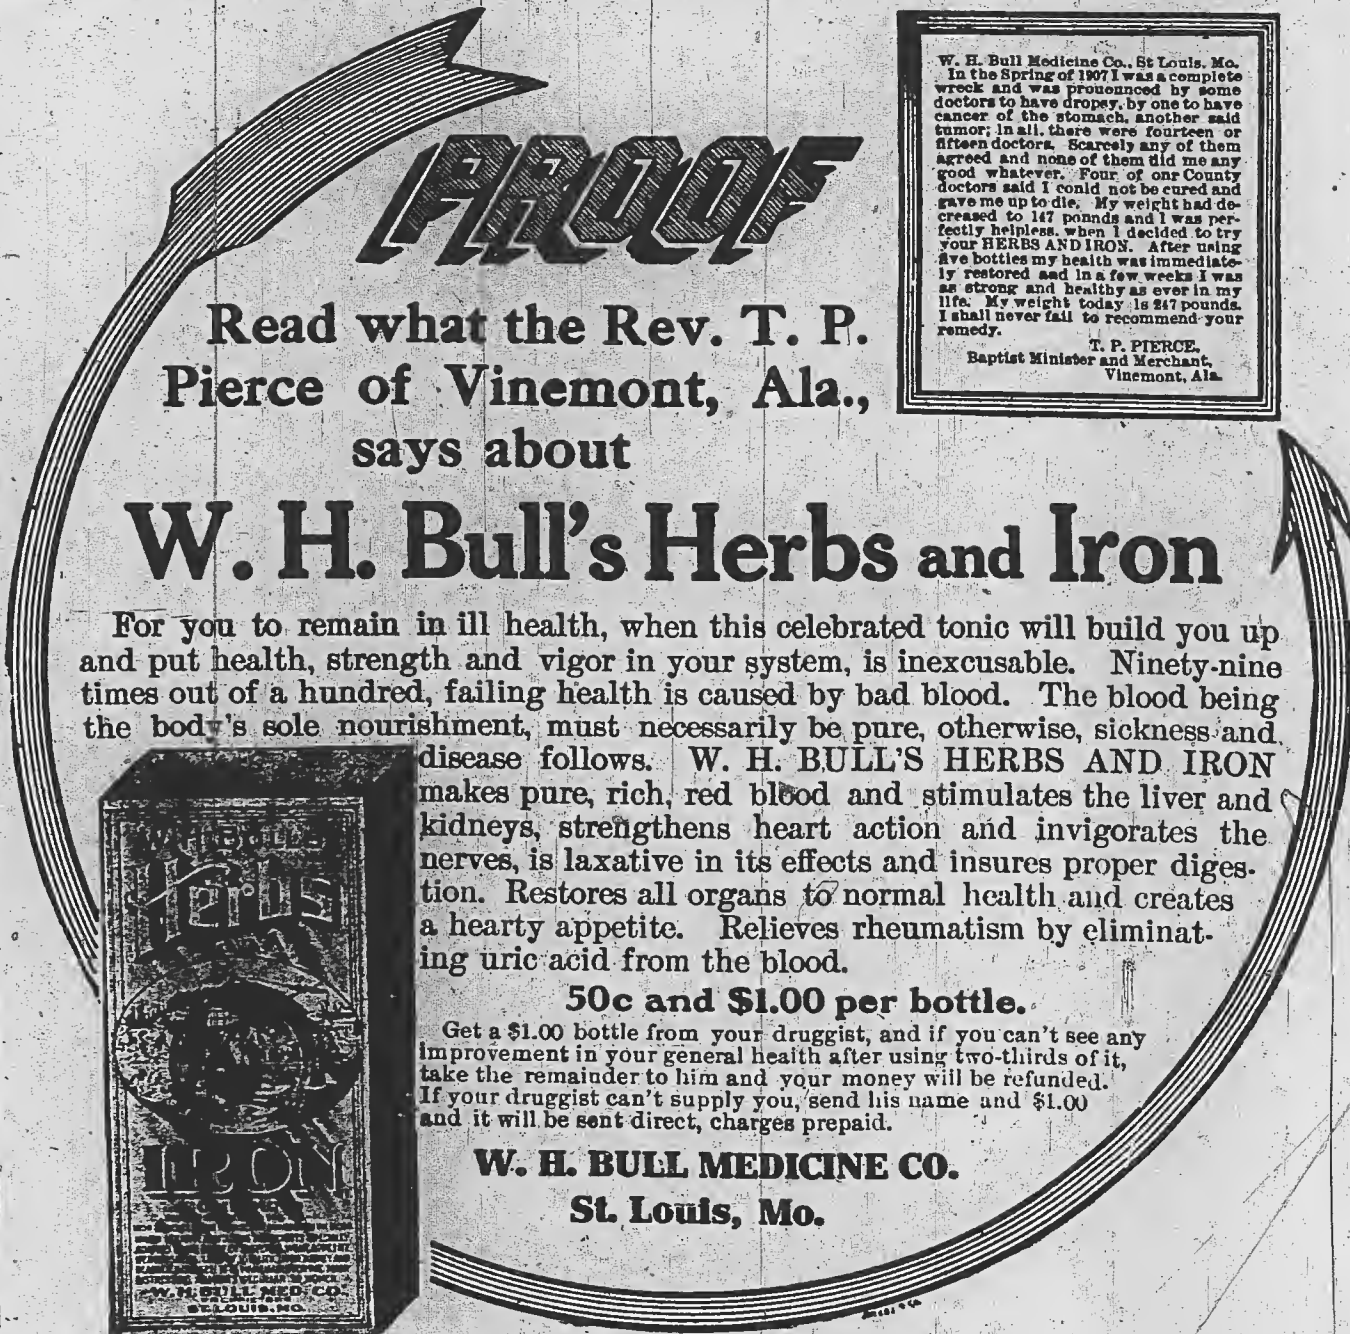

A long distance phone message brought the encouraging news of the organization, on February 5th, of a Wesley Adult Bible Class of Women at Iuka, Miss., called the "Iuka Searchlight." It has ten members, and the officers are as follows: Mrs. W. L. Graves, teacher; Mrs. C. W. McKnight, president; Mrs. C. P. Miller, secretary and treasurer. They are planning to entertain Dr. Carmack's class of men and their wives. Their motto is "Win One." Every lady in the class has had, so far, a perfect lesson this year. Miss Floy Cook and her fine class of boys, of this same school, have held the class banner for a year. The Sunday school superintendent, Mr. Hammerly, has returned to them after a long illness and there is much rejoicing. His motto is, "Let us take the whole Sunday school to heaven with us." Rev. W. L. Graves and his wife are heart and soul in this work, and are giving themselves actively to bring all departments to the highest degree of efficiency.

Mrs. E. D. Robins, of Tupelo, Miss., is a fine exemplification of "an angel of mercy," and of the apotheosis of service. She teaches Sunday school in the morning, and, long before others are up, carries beautiful flowers to the church and to the sick and suffering. In the afternoon, she acts as superintendent of a Sabbath school of factory people, reads to them, sings to them, loves them and helps them. Her touch is soft and tender, her eyes keen and joyous and full of sympathy, her life a radiant exposition of love to others. The cold, the hungry, the sick, the sorrowing and the stranger within her gates all come in for a part of her loving service. What sweeter awakening than to find a bunch of dew-kissed violets brushing away the dream-dust out of your eyes—violets gathered by this saint whose years, three score and more than ten, have not dimmed eyes or stiffened nimble fingers, and whose life is a lesson of joyous, abundant service! So she wakens guests in her home and they carry away a heart full of joy at having met her even once in life's journey.

A Splendid Tonic

Cora, Ky.—Mrs. Iva Moore, of this place, says, "I was so weak, I could hardly walk. I tried Cardui, and was greatly relieved. It is a splendid tonic. I have recommended Cardui to many friends, who tried it with good results." Testimony like this comes unsolicited, from thousands of earnest women, who have been benefited by the timely use of that successful tonic medicine, Cardui. Purely vegetable, mild, but reliable, Cardui well merits its high place in the esteem of those who have tried it. It relieves women's pains, and strengthens weak women. It is certainly worth a trial. Your druggist sells Cardui.

W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron

For you to remain in ill health, when this celebrated tonic will build you up and put health, strength and vigor in your system, is inexcusable. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred, failing health is caused by bad blood. The blood being the body's sole nourishment, must necessarily be pure, otherwise, sickness and disease follows. W. H. BULL'S HERBS AND IRON makes pure, rich, red blood and stimulates the liver and kidneys, strengthens heart action and invigorates the nerves, is laxative in its effects and insures proper digestion. Restores all organs to normal health and creates a hearty appetite. Relieves rheumatism by eliminating uric acid from the blood.

Get a $1.00 bottle from your druggist, and if you can't see any improvement in your general health after using two-thirds of it, take the remainder to him and your money will be refunded. If your druggist can't supply you, send his name and $1.00 and it will be sent direct, charges prepaid.

In the Spring of 1907 I was a complete wreck and was pronounced by some doctors to have dropsy, by one to have cancer of the stomach, another said tumor; in all, there were fourteen or fifteen doctors. Scarcely any of them agreed and none of them did me any good whatever. Four of our County doctors said I could not be cured and gave me up to die. My weight had decreased to 147 pounds and I was perfectly helpless, when I decided to try your HERBS AND IRON. After using five bottles my health was immediately restored and in a few weeks I was as strong and healthy as ever in my life. My weight today is 247 pounds. I shall never fail to recommend your remedy.

Editorial

There is no such thing as drifting into the heavenly harbor. The man who would reach it must ply the oar.

***

In the recent meeting at Henderson, Ky., conducted by Dr. E. G. B. Mann, there were nearly a hundred conversions and about eighty accessions to the Church. This announcement has the right ring. A conversion that brings those professing regeneration into the Church is after the scriptural order. A great stir which leaves little perceptible effect after it is over is of small value.

***

The statement on the second page of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate of last week that Vanderbilt University has the biggest endowment of any school in the South is scarcely correct. The William A. Rice Institute of Houston, Texas, of which Dr. Edward Odell Lovett is president, has an endowment of $7,000,000. Nor is it probable that Vanderbilt has as much endowment as Booker Washington's school at Tuskegee, Ala.

***

Archbishop Blenk, of New Orleans, upon being interrogated as to whether a Roman Catholic may become a member of the Young Woman's Christian Association, said, "No! Most decidedly no! She cannot do this any more than a Catholic man can become a member of the Young Men's Christian Association." The surprising thing is that any one should have thought it necessary to have the Archbishop pass upon this question. The well known exclusiveness of the Romish Church and her hostility to an open Bible should have made her position clear to all without the formality of such an inquiry.

***

A friend of his states in a Washington paper that Senator Lorimer neither smokes nor drinks nor swears. So far, so good; but this is not enough. It takes more than a few outward good habits to constitute an upright man. It has been said that no human being is so fallen, and bad as not to have some good traits. One's character is what he really is within, where no eyes can look except those of God and his own conscience. It is because the world catches only occasional and imperfect glimpses of the personality that lives and loves and thinks and plans within "the house beautiful"—the human body—that it is so often mistaken in its estimates of men. The Pharisees were accounted the moralists of their time, but when they gathered about the Master who could read the deep secrets of the human soul, he said to them, "Ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which outwardly appear beautiful, but inwardly are full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness." To argue that, because a man has not all of the vices he has none, is logic with a vengeance. The seat, the throne, of sin is in the invisible moral nature; and the form of outward manifestation that it takes is largely determined by one's surroundings and temptations.

THE LOUISIANA MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN.

By formal action of the Conference Board of Missions, the month of March has been designated as the time for a general campaign throughout Louisiana in the interest of the missionary cause. The plan adopted has also been passed upon by the presiding elders and has their hearty endorsement. Brother Coleman, the energetic president of the Conference Mission Board, has set forth the course of procedure to be followed, in the columns of the Advocate, and issued a ringing appeal to both the pastors and laymen throughout the State for co-operation. It is certainly to be hoped that every preacher and lay leader will lend a vigorous hand to this movement, and aid in making it a pronounced success. If this is to be done, there is no time for delay. More than a quarter of the month has already passed. Every worker needs to be up and doing, if creditable results are to be achieved.

There is every reason why Louisiana Methodists should be aflame with missionary zeal and attest their faith by their works. Aside from the obligation to do their part toward giving the gospel to the heathen in foreign lands, where wide-open doors as never before now challenge evangelical enterprise, there is the consideration of the great need of mission work within the borders of their own State. Scarcely any other commonwealth in the South furnishes so great a field for aggressive religious activity. We need large assistance from the General Board of Missions, and the best way to secure it is to show that we are doing our best and that we deserve it. The authorities of the Church are wisely disposed to help those who show a disposition to help themselves. Therefore, let every pastor and every layman into whose hands the Advocate comes, read what Brother Coleman has to say in this issue and proceed immediately to act upon his suggestions. The plan which he outlines has worked well elsewhere, and doubtless will do so in Louisiana if faithfully tried. Let no man with this clarion call ringing in his ears hesitate and fail to do his part, but let us by our united efforts make March, 1911, memorable because of a great forward missionary movement extending from one end of the State to the other, and enlisting every congregation in the Conference.

WHY THIS PARADE OF LIBERALISM?

The North Carolina Christian Advocate is authority for the statement that the second oldest woman's college in the South is the Greensboro Female College, located at Greensboro in that State. (The oldest is the Wesleyan at Macon, Ga.) The property of this institution, which is said to be owned by the two North Carolina Conferences, is estimated to be worth about $200,000, and a movement is now under way to construct a handsome new dormitory. The following statement made concerning it, evidently with the notion that it is a feature to be commended, is far from reassuring: "The provisions of its charter are very liberal. No denominational test is required of trustees, president, or faculty." And yet the Methodists of the good Old North State pay annually to the support of this college $4,000 in the way of assessments.

What is the matter with twentieth century Methodism that it cannot furnish trustees for its property and teachers for its institutions of learning? Such boasted liberalism as this is, in our judgment, far from creditable. The law of the Church, which is to take effect on July 1, 1912, requires that three-fourths of the trustees of every Methodist institution of learning shall be members of our Church. Why, then, should it be advertised that Greensboro College, instead of acting in harmony with the spirit of this law and preparing to enforce it when it comes into operation, exacts "no denominational test of trustees, president, or faculty?" And the amazing thing is that this should be done while an appeal is being made to a Methodist constituency for $25,000 to erect a new dormitory.

Truly, this is the day of queer doings in the management of the educational affairs of Methodism. The last General Conference did not speak one moment too soon when it urged all institutions claiming to be Methodist to relate themselves definitely to the Church. And our people everywhere would do well to scrutinize closely the character of that relation before giving their money to any school. Surely our experience with Vanderbilt University should teach us that it is foolish to use our means and patronage to build up colleges upon which our hold is not absolutely secure. The General Board of Education, and particularly the Secretary of that Board, should do all in their power to see that the policy outlined by our law-making body at Asheville is faithfully carried out. The day for quibbling and temporizing in this important work has passed, and the time for vigorous action has come. An institution too "liberal" to be operated under Methodist control, should be accounted too "liberal" to be permitted to fly the Methodist flag and be given Methodist support.

ALMOST PERSUADED.

We have never been disposed to look with much favor upon the movement to vest woman with the rights of citizenship. Not because we think her incompetent or undeserving, but because of the conviction that the home and not the individual is the unit of society, and that it is best for all concerned for the family to be represented in governmental proceedings by its male members. But we have lately read of some occurrences that have caused us to waver not a little in our position. A dispatch from Olympia, Washington, on March 1, stated that a bill to legalize prize fighting pending before the Legislature of that State had been defeated by a woman's lobby, and a couple of weeks ago we saw an account of a jury of women convicting a man for swearing on the public highway. We also noted when the elections were being held last fall that in some places the suffragettes insisted upon having the voting booths made clean, and smoking and spitting ambeer and tobacco quids about them stopped. We confess that this good work appeals to us with tremendous force, and if it is kept up, we will not answer for our continued loyalty to the ranks of the opposition. We would be willing to surrender much to get rid of profanity, dirt, and the foul fumes of tobacco in public places.

THE DUTY OF MAINTAINING A WHOLESOME SECTIONALISM.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Perhaps some have gone too far in berating sectionalism. There is a narrow and bigoted and bitter sectionalism which is not to be endured for a moment; but there is also a wholesome sectionalism, which is worthy of all approbation and encouragement.

Our country is a wide land in which are great varieties of resources and populations. Its greatness would not be promoted by effacing these varieties of life, and reducing all things, material and immaterial, to a monotonous and dreary uniformity. It is rather to be enriched by each section cultivating its own excellencies to the highest degree and dwelling in harmony with all other sections.

Great Britain is a far smaller country than ours, and in its history there are chapters of bitter warfare much more acrimonious than our war between the States. Yet no sensible Briton would have Scotland cease to be Scottish, or England cease to be English, or Wales cease to be Welsh, or Ireland cease to be Irish. The glory and greatness of the United Kingdom are advanced by the peculiar triumphs of all its parts.

In like manner our republic is to advance in greatness and power by New England being of its own type, the South being Southern, and the West being Western. There is nothing of narrowness and un-brotherliness in this view. On the contrary, an opposite view would be superficial and injurious. There is a pseudo-cosmopolitanism which demands of us all that we pull ourselves up out of our native soil, and become a sort of human orchids, all alike and all living on nothing more substantial than air.
Neither individual worth nor national greatness can spring from such a process.

Literature is most catholic and universal in its spirit, but in its best forms it has always appeared marked with local color and filled with sectional aspirations. Robert Burns and Walter Scott are Scottish to the bone, and the atmosphere of the highlands breathes through all their writings. We need no one to tell us that Shakespeare and Milton, Dickens and Thackeray, are English; their speech betrayeth them. Even those inspired poems, in which the universal sorrows and solaces of all mankind find their noblest expression, the Hebrew Psalms, are not without touches of local associations and national sympathies. In one of them an unknown singer pours forth strains like this: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy." Both piety and patriotism were voiced by the words of another which were sung by the multitudes on their way to the great feasts: "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord. Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem."

In like manner Attica, with its ancient capital of Athens, stands forth in the richest and best things of Grecian literature. We still bear testimony to its peculiar and excellent flavor by our phrase, "Attic salt." When Greece was absorbed in a huge, unwieldy system of imperialism, that delicious savor was lost, the glory of Athens grew dim, and Attica was trodden under foot of men.

Neither men nor nations nor sections of nations make their due and best contribution to the welfare of the race when they cease to be themselves and attempt to be like others in order that they may not be esteemed peculiar, narrow, or provincial. Born and bred in the South, I have its ways and spirit, but nothing is more disagreeable to me than to see a New Englander try to play Southern. This be it said, however, to the credit of the New Englander, he seldom attempts. The average New Englander of the better sort is characterized by a robust and delightful egotism as to himself and a profound satisfaction with his Puritan land and traditions. He is as the more likable and useful on that account.

We need not resist him in these things until he becomes too missionary in his methods, and undertakes to make all of us ear-cod-fish and apotheosize John Brown, but even then he is interesting—never more so.

With some qualifications it may be affirmed that the vigor of New England literature arises in a great degree from the provincialism of New England life and thought, and the same is true of Old England.
It is amusing to a Southerner in visiting Old England to observe how little the average Britisher knows of America, and visiting New England to note the ignorance of the average "Down-Easter" concerning the South. But they know themselves, and they dwell fondly on all their traditions. American papers are little read in England and Southern papers are little read in New England; but in the South the periodicals of both England and New England are read. By consequence, our peril as a section is not a too close following of our own type, but a weak aping of other types; and this danger has been increased with the multiplication of lines of transportation and the growth of means of communication by which the former isolation of the South has been broken up to a great extent. We do not need lecturing upon the sin of our sectionalism, but we need to be exhorted to cultivate our own peculiar excellencies and fulfill our own mission to the republic and to the world. We are glad to have good people from other lands and sections come and dwell among us; but we should not renounce our type and abdicate our function in the American nation to please them. Many of those who came to us in former days, have become by the attrition of the years and the exercise of good sense the finest of Southerners. A few could not stand the rub, and after a period of grumbling tarrying among us, they returned whence they came with no better opinion of us than we had of them. A small circle of our own people have undertaken to imitate the ways of other sections and affect foreign airs; these are they who furnish the rest of us a fine show of apes with out our having to buy tickets to a menagerie. They amuse us, and they are not highly esteemed by the people whom they seek to copy.

Those Southern writers among us who are most esteemed by the people of other sections and countries are those whose writings breathe of our atmosphere and spring from our soil. Who has so caught the spirit of the Old South as "Uncle Remus," and who among Southern writers so holds the heart of the world? I found his books in the shops of Japan and China, and, being in England when he died, I saw the marked manifestations of the appreciation of his work by the English people. One night in a hotel in Ireland, I found a group of Irish gentlemen undertaking to read some of the tales of Uncle Remus. They were pursuing with a keen scent the trail, but they were not catching all they were after.
One of them asked me to read one of the tales to them, and while I do not set up for giving "readings," I could not well decline to accede to the request. At once they caught the "Old South" spirit, and enjoyed it with all their Irish enthusiasm. And so we made a "night with Uncle Remus." They would have cared nothing for a Southern book that feebly imitated the lines of Tom Moore. "Uncle Remus" has pointed all our writers to the direction in which our unworked treasures are hid. In our own traditions will be found the things the outside world cares most to know. There seems to be no sufficient reason for our not celebrating in song and story King's Mountain and Cowpens while New England dwells reverently on Lexington and Concord.

We have also our own contribution to make to the political and religious life of the nation, and none should ask us to apologize for what we bring to the common stock of the republic in these precious things.

The South from the first has stood for a strict construction of the Constitution, and it is well she has thus stood. Some other sections have been more inclined to pursue profitable policies rather than stand by fixed principles. They dote on being "practical" and "progressive;" but if we go after them, who will be left to assert and maintain the fundamental principles of our government? And if all sections get too "practical" and too "progressive," what a scrambling we shall have for "pork-barrels" in our appropriation bills, and what a scuffling for the protection of all our variant "interests" in our revenue measures! If other sections are going to stand for "new nationalism," we will do well to stand for "old nationalism," or our Constitution may be subverted and a surreptitious revolution be wrought without opposition. The country needs us very much in the present emergency.

The prevalent type of religion in the South is that which is somewhat loosely called "evangelical." It has worked very well. There are in the South more church members in proportion to population than there are in any other part of the republic. In the South the saloon has been outlawed as nowhere else in our country. The laws of marriage and divorce are also better. In view of all these facts it would seem the part of brotherliness towards other sections, as well as the part of duty to ourselves, to preserve our own type of religion. While in other sections all sorts of rationalizing are enfeebling faith and deranging conduct, we may very well walk in the "old paths." They are not so picturesque, perhaps, but they are safe. We need neither "new nationalism" nor "new theology." Our country expects and requires us to be conservative. Thereby we shall be also preservative of many good things which for the welfare of the nation should be preserved.

We will not be bitter towards our neighbors and brothers of other sections. We will simply be self-respectful, asking only that they spend a little less energy on reforming us into their own image and likeness than sometimes has been put forth by them to this end.—From the Atlanta Journal.

REMINISCENCE OF S. S. PRENTISS.

(The following description of S. S. Prentiss is from the pen of "the blind man eloquent," Dr. W. H.
Milburn, who for many years was chaplain of the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States, and who knew Webster, Clay, Calhoun and many other of the greatest figures in American history. It is taken from one of his books—"Ten Years of Preacher Life: Chapters from an Autobiography"— which appeared in 1859. Dr. Milburn states that he first saw Mr. Prentiss in the St. Charles Hotel in New Orleans in February, 1848—about four years before his death, at the age of 42. He was then a citizen of the Crescent City, having left Mississippi because of his mortification at the repudiation of her public debt.)

Sergeant S. Prentiss, the renowned lawyer and orator, was a compound of contradictions. With a noble bust and superb head, he yet was short of stature and deformed by a shriveled leg. The master of nearly all manly accomplishments, a fearless rider and bold hunter, he yet halted painfully in his gait.
With exuberant animal spirits and matchless powers of conversation, which made him the delight and soul of every social circle, he would sometimes in solitude, locking himself in for whole days, shed scalding tears, goaded almost to madness by morbid self-torture. Gifted with every power to win the admiration, confidence and love of women, he shrank from their society, dreading lest his one drawback should excite unsympathetic remark, and this, when his genius had already dazzled the first minds of the country. Born and bred a Puritan, he was the representative man of Southwestern life. Pacific in disposition and remarkable for sweetness of temper, he was famous as a duellist. With virtues of character that won for him the lasting regard of all good men that ever knew him, it is nevertheless computed that he lost hundreds of thousands of dollars by gambling. Possessed of a fancy as gentle and sportive as Herbert's or Cowper's, I suppose that the eloquence of invective has produced nothing since the days of Demosthenes equal to his thunders against Mississippi repudiation.

The most effective man on the stump in the country, he at the same time shone conspicuously in its highest courts. Cogent in argument, copious in imagination, he pleased while he persuaded, convinced while he charmed. With a memory whose wax-like retentiveness held not only the thoughts and images, but even words of ancient and modern poetry, there was coupled a wit as fertile as it was brilliant and an understanding as robust as it was comprehensive and original. The Bible, Shakespeare and Milton were his handbooks, and it is said that he knew them from lid to lid. At first you might have fancied him a mere rhetorician, but he had not proceeded far before you found him a consummate orator. He was master of all the passions of the human soul, and moved them as the expert musician draws from his instrument a concord of sweet sounds. He gave in bounty what might have been the ransom of princes, yet toward the proud he showed the pride of Lucifer. He would stand before a crowd of repudiating Mississippi voters, hurling at them taunts, ridicule, sarcasm, defiance, until their faces grew pale and their lips livid with rage. And then when pestilence walked the streets of the city, and in almost every house there was found one dead; without a thought of personal danger, he would devote weeks to the bedsides of the poor and the stranger, with all the watchful tenderness and untiring patience of a woman.

He was the idol of children and no less of Indian warriors. He is said to have delivered the greatest speech ever made in the Halls of Congress, and yet the people of the backwoods grew almost delirious under the spell of his eloquence. Before the pistol of an antagonist at ten paces his mien was calm, his nerves firm as steel; but if introduced to a lady, his knees trembled and his embarrassment would have been ludicrous had it not been so painful. Take him for all in all, he seems to me the most wonderful man our country has produced. And yet he has left little to justify this remark to the world, if I except the unparalleled impression upon all who ever knew or heard him.

THE PREACHER IN THE PULPIT.

Preach the Word.

By Rev. C. W. Carter, D.D.

Dear Timothy: I hope you have the ambition to become a great preacher. I think that is a laudable ambition if you are careful what valuation you put upon the word "great." Paul's exhortation is: "Covet earnestly the best gifts." The American Revision gives the meaning of this verse in this way: "Desire earnestly the greater gifts." Either translation permits an ambition to secure the gifts of the Divine Spirit. In a very sane way Paul discusses the nature of these gifts and the object to be attained by their bestowal and reaches the conclusion that the greatest of them all is the ability to prophesy. Now, in Paul's mind, prophesying is simply preaching. He puts the case this way: "Desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy." So Paul considered it a matter worthy of the highest ambition.

The great question, Timothy, is: "What shall I preach?" This question was answered in the very beginning by the Master when he organized the ministry. On that momentous occasion he said to his preachers: "Go ye into all the world and preach THE GOSPEL to every creature." That seems to be plain enough, and I have failed to find anywhere that the Master has changed the subject of preaching. In my view "the gospel" is the very essence of simplicity, and no amount of intellectual dexterity can obscure its meaning. At the hour of the birth of Jesus the angel from heaven announced to the wondering shepherds the full, immense, meaning of that great word, "gospel": "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, for unto you is born a Savior which is Christ the Lord." That is simple enough for a child. Preaching Jesus as a present Savior from sin is, then, preaching the gospel. Paul's injunction to a preacher, "Preach the word," is the same, for in its final analysis "the word" is Christ. So, "preaching the word" is the same as to "preach Christ." Now while this is all very simple, it is the biggest thing in the universe. The subject of preaching—Christ as a Savior—transcends the deepest thinking of the human mind. The object of preaching—the salvation of souls from sin—puts in motion influences as wide as God's vast dominions. The salvation of a soul is the greatest of all God's great works! The loss of a soul is the most tragic thing conceivable! So, Timothy, in calling you into his ministry, the Lord has set you in the midst of great things and given you his great Spirit to help you do great things in that mighty arena. I have often wondered why preachers would leave this magnificent environment in which Christ has placed them and go down to smaller things and bring them into the pulpit to take the place of "the glorious gospel of the blessed God."

"Preach the word." Now the question is, "How preach it?" In his first Epistle to the Church at Corinth, Paul has a good deal to say about his preaching, and I think you may safely take him as a model. First he says that he did not preach "with the wisdom of words." "The wisdom of words" is an alluring snare to nearly every young preacher, especially if he is well acquainted with language. The ability to arrange words into beautiful sentences, so that they may fall pleasantly into the ears, is a gift not to be coveted by a young preacher. It leads to the practice of weaving into the sermon all sorts and sizes of words for the mere purpose of showing how it can be done. It is said of a preacher of national reputation that whenever he came across a new word, no matter what it was, he never rested until he introduced that word into two or three of his sermons. I hope you will not descend to such pulpit trickery. There is a better way to which I call your attention. It is in Paul's saying: "Except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken?" This leads me to say that Paul's exhortation about speaking in an unknown tongue is very pertinent now, for you may speak in English and to the hearers it will be an unknown tongue. Big words—words which old Horace called "sesquipedalia"—have a wonderful fascination about them, and preachers are prone to slip them in whenever opportunity offers. But it amounts to what Paul calls "speaking into the air." I once heard a sermon and for about fifteen minutes the thought radiated from and circled around one word, and though it was an English word, the larger part of the audience did not know its meaning and of course could not understand what the preacher was saying. He was speaking into the air. "Words easy to be understood." Did you ever notice, Timothy, that the great events, the great facts, the great doctrines, are all put down in the record in simple words, easy to be understood? "The enticing words of man's wisdom" are not comparable to the simple "words which the Holy Spirit teaches." Paul states his position on this point when he declares, "I would rather speak five words that can be understood than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue." So, Timothy, I would have you familiarize yourself with the easy words of our language so that your preaching "may be understood of the people."

I suppose sermons may be correctly divided into two kinds, as there are two distinct objects to be attained. One kind is preached to the Church for the purpose of building up believers in the holy faith, the other kind is to sinners to convert them from their sins. The Church needs preaching, that it may grow in strength and power. Now Paul says that he preached two kinds of sermons to the saints. He says he fed some with meat and some with milk. According to their capacity to receive, he fed them. I would have you notice that he does not adulterate what he gives, nor does he mix the different kinds together. There is to-day a kind of preaching which is neither meat nor milk nor a mixture of the two. It is a kind of pulpit hash. I have seen a definition of "hash" which exactly fits this kind of preaching. It is said to be "a fortuitous concourse of unrelated atoms." Beware of that thing, Timothy, as you value your ministry. The preaching to sinners is for the purpose of convicting them of sin and pointing them to Christ as a Savior from sin.

Now let us go back. I said I hoped you would become a great preacher. In my view a great preacher is the one whose ministry is successful in building up believers in the faith and bringing penitent sinners to Christ. When I was a presiding elder I was riding along with one of my preachers when we came to a house and he said: "There is a sick man here, let us go in and see him." We found the man quite sick and very much disturbed about his spiritual condition. So the preacher sat down by his bed and began to preach Jesus. In a few simple words he pointed the sick man to the Cross and his faith began to take hold of the promise, and in less than five minutes after we entered his room his whole being was transformed and he was praising the Lord with his whole heart. I wondered at the power of the simple gospel. I tell you, Timothy, that was what I call great preaching, and that humble man of God was a great preacher. As we rode away I began musing on the prophet's words: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, thy God reigneth!" ## TO THE YOUNG MEN OF MY CONFERENCE.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr.

No. 4.

I closed my last with some remarks about paying your tax, taking your tax receipt with you, etc. There are more reasons than one why you should do this. In the first place, every man ought to be enough interested in the welfare and prosperity of his country to be willing to hear his part of the burden of keeping up his country. As no one can feel much interested in the spiritual welfare of the Church who does nothing for her support, makes no sacrifice for her good, so no man can feel that interest which he ought in his country's welfare who does nothing in the way of supporting the government.

Again, if you do not pay your tax your name will be published along with other delinquents. I was speaking to a layman about this a few years ago, when he remarked, "Our preacher left last year without settling his tax bill." I have had remarks like this made to me more than once about preachers going off without settling with the sheriff.

Another thing: if you do not pay your tax you will not be allowed to vote when election time comes. Every good man ought to be willing and anxious to help put good, reliable men in office. You need not necessarily take much interest in politics in a public way, but be sure that you exercise your right of franchise at the ballot box. Perhaps it is best sometimes not to let anyone know how you vote. I said fifty years ago to an uncle of mine, Judge Lewis, who was a candidate for probate judge, an office he had held for twenty years: "You will have to get out and electioneer; you now have an opponent." He replied, "I don't know how; my friends do my electioneering. I don't let anyone know, outside of my family, how I vote even." I saw he was right. Some men are mean enough to turn the cold shoulder to you if you do not vote for their man. Therefore, in this matter "Let not your right hand know what your left hand doeth." Don't sneeze every time a "politician" or "moral hero" takes snuff; be more of a man than that. Do a little reading, a great deal of real praying and solid thinking. Weigh men, measures and means; then vote as you pray.

Some years ago I was assisting a brother in a meeting at Sartinsville. One day while dinner was being prepared by the good woman the conduct of a certain, I fear worthless, young man attracted my attention. I stood and looked at him some time. He noticed it and asked some one, "Why is that preacher watching me?" The reply was, "He is sizing you up." He was right. I turned to the pastor and said, "See here, brother, that fellow over there or I will have to leave here. We both can't stay here." The brother replied, "We will see about that; we can spare him better than we can spare you." In a little while the young drunkard was under arrest. It is well to be observant, and size up the men who aspire to public place.

Some years ago a certain presiding elder busied himself in electioneering for a certain candidate. On of the best stewards on the work was so outraged by the stand his presiding elder took he vowed he would never sit in another conference where this brother presided, and he never did. Mischief was done. So be careful how you talk about the merits or demerits of men who are aspirants for office. Some thirty-six years ago, when politics ran high, I voted for a Republican for county assessor, in preference to the regular Democratic nominee. "Why?" you ask. Because I knew he was by far the best man of the two and the best qualified to fill the office.

We have far too many bad men in office, dishonest men, men who do not try to enforce the law of our land. Then there are too many who "buy their way" into office. A bribe-giver is as mean as a bribe-taker. Both ought to be "ostracized." A preacher ought to set a good example before his people in everything. In the pulpit, out of the same, in the home, along the public highway, everywhere and under all circumstances, be an example for others.

PROGRESS AT CENTENARY COLLEGE.

For the second time I am beginning my year's work with a meeting at Centenary College, under the auspices of the faculty and the college Y. M. C. A. However, I am not going to write about the meeting, as one of the young men will doubtless do that, but about the college itself and the work that is doing here.

It has been exactly a year since I was at Centenary before. There have been in that time, so to speak, ten years of improvement. In the first place, the college has a much larger attendance than at the same time last year. When I was here last year no new students came in during my whole stay. This year scarcely a day has gone by without one or two new students arriving, and there is now very little room left in which more young men can be placed. There has been also a marked improvement in the spirit of the student body. The atmosphere is more and more that of a well-organized and firmly-established institution of learning. The young men have a larger and more loyal college spirit. There is more pride in the college and in scholarship. Deducting what is necessary for the fact that last year while I was here Dr. Hill had just taken charge under circumstances peculiarly difficult (the honored former president of the institution lying then at the point of death), much remains that shows healthy growth and progress the most solid.

The college is richer in its faculty. Centenary now has one of the best faculties of any college of its class in the South. Dr. Hill has that most essential qualification for high leadership—the faculty of selecting assistants. Every position is strongly manned and every instructor and member of the faculty "just fits."

In addition to his laborious duties as president, Dr. Hill has undertaken the accumulation of a loan fund to assist poor young men in securing an education. Seven men are thus aided at this time from the Centenary fund, which has not been accumulating longer than six or eight months.

The future of the college is very bright, but there are some shadows that need to be, and can be, immediately removed. A new building is a need so great at present that to postpone the erection of it as much as two years will materially hinder the growth of the college. At present classrooms, dining hall, dormitories and everything except the cottage recently built for the president, are under one roof. The crowded conditions that will ensue upon even the normal increase in the student body, and the interruptions to study through the conduct of an institution of such magnitude in such crowded quarters will most seriously affect the future welfare of the college.

If the Methodists of Louisiana will measure up to their present opportunities at Centenary, in a quarter of a century we will have at Shreveport one of the great educational institutions of the Southwest.

Church News

The work of the Methodist Episcopal Church is prospering in Italy. Their mission in that country has a membership of approximately 3,000, and 620 conversions were reported last year.

According to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, the best paid preachers in the M. E. Church, South, are those of the South Georgia Conference. The average salary paid the ministers of that body is said to be $900.

A two days' meeting of the Laymen's Movement of Mississippi will be held in the First Baptist Church of Jackson on March 14 and 15. It is reported that much interest is being manifested, and that the gathering promises to surpass the memorable one held in that city last year.

Bishop Candler is slated to deliver a series of lectures to the students of the Southern University at Greensboro, Ala., on the "Preparation and Training for the Work of the Ministry." The exact date of his engagement there has not been fixed, but will be announced in the near future. A rare treat is in store for the young men of this historic institution.

Abe Mulkey, the noted Texas evangelist, has been forced by feeble health to cancel his engagements and take a season of rest. For many years he has been a tireless toiler, and has been used by God in the awakening of thousands of souls. Many prayers are being offered for his recovery, that he may resume his "loved employ."

King George and Queen Mary of Great Britain entertained Dr. J. H. Jewett, the newly-chosen pastor of the fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York, at a farewell dinner on March 3. There seems to be very general regret in the church circles of England that this eminent preacher has decided to make his home in America.

Dr. W. L. Watkinson, the noted British Wesleyan minister, has recently lost his wife, who had been the companion of his joys and sorrows for nearly fifty years. Four sons and two daughters are also bereaved by the translation of this good woman. The many admirers of Doctor Watkinson on this side of the Atlantic will regret to learn of his great sorrow.

Mr. Arthur R. Ford, of Winnipeg, has been chosen western assistant editor of The Christian Guardian, of Toronto, Canada. He is a layman, the son of a minister, and a trained newspaper man, having been connected with the Winnipeg Telegram for some years. The Christian Guardian is already a paper of exceptional merit—one of the very best of the religious weeklies that come to our table.

A brother writing in the Southern Christian Advocate proposes the organization of a Preachers' Horse Insurance Society. He contends that a good horse now costs $200 or $250, and that when one dies, it is a pretty heavy loss to be borne by a circuit rider. His plan is to have every member of the organization pay a small sum when one of their number is so unfortunate as to lose his steed.

We are reliably informed that Dr. T. E. Sharp is giving great satisfaction at St. John's Church, Memphis. His presiding elder, Rev. W. G. Hefley, recently stated to our correspondent that a better selection for this important field could not have been made, had the entire Church been searched for a man. Dr. Sharp is one of the best equipped pastors in Southern Methodism, and has made a good record wherever he has labored.

Dr. Washington Gladden celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday at Columbus, Ohio, on February 11, several hundred friends calling to felicitate with him upon the happy occasion. There were also present twelve members of the Alumni Society of Williams College, from which Dr. Gladden graduated in 1859. The distinguished minister led in singing "The Mountain," a song which he composed while a student at this seat of learning.

Dr. R. D. Smart, who was forced by ill health to give up his charge in Kentucky soon after his assignment to it last fall and return to Virginia, is reported to be much improved, with a prospect of complete recovery at no distant day. Dr. Smart served the First Methodist Church of Memphis for a quadrennium with great acceptability some years ago, and his friends and admirers in West Tennessee and North Mississippi will be pleased to hear this encouraging news concerning his condition.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of the Memphis Hospital enterprise met in that city on March 1. A letter from Mr. J. R. Pepper, who is on the committee, states that there was a full attendance, only one member being absent. It was decided to change "Hospital Day," which is expected to be observed throughout the four Conferences co-operating in this movement, from the first Sunday in May to the first Sunday in June. The committee is searching for a man to act as agent for this important enterprise, and expects soon to have a vigorous campaigner in the field who will give his entire time to the promotion of the project.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate has taken the trouble to ask the Methodist churches of Chicago to report by writing as to the results of the Chapman-Alexander meeting, recently held in that city, upon their work. Forty churches made response, and the information which they gave was far from reassuring. Thirty-four reported no increase in membership at all, and the aggregate gain of the other six was 271. Thirty-five reported no improvement in their Sunday schools, and only two announced a considerable gain in numbers. Thirty-six report no improvement in their eleven o'clock congregations, and thirty-eight none in the evening attendance. Only two pastors thought that their prayer meetings had been helped. Evidently the Methodism of Chicago was not much quickened and strengthened by the widely heralded revival, if these figures are correct.

The Southern Christian Advocate reports that over 400 students have been enrolled at Wofford College during the present session—238 in the college and 175 in the fitting school. Dr. H. N. Snyder, the accomplished president of the institution, has been much in demand lately as a lecturer, and in that capacity has greatly pleased large audiences in Charleston and Columbia. In the latter city he spoke before a joint meeting of the South Carolina Legislature on "Prevention vs. Cure," his address being a plea for the adoption of the report of the School Commission of that State. Mrs. W. W. Duncan has recently presented Wofford with a fine old chair which is quite historic. It belonged first to Bishop Wightman, the first president of the institution; then it became the property of Dr. David Duncan, the first professor of Ancient Languages, and at his decease it came into the possession of the late Bishop Duncan.

The Bishops and connexional officers of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, and the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church had a meeting in Mobile recently in which the question of effecting closer relations between the three bodies was carefully considered. This is the second time that the Bishops of these Churches have met in council, their first consultation being held about three years ago. It has been their disposition to proceed along lines of federation, leaving alone the matter of organic union. But at the last gathering in Mobile the general officers and other leading men present had a conference and formally declared for organic union, and requested their chief pastors to express themselves on the subject. They asked that a Commission on Union, consisting of the Bishops and three preachers and two laymen from each denomination, be constituted. The Bishops in their meeting agreed upon plans for a common hymnal, catechism, and order of service, and for biennial sessions of their council. And they, furthermore, decided to submit to their respective General Conferences a proposal to unite their followers in Africa under the name of the "United Episcopal Methodist Church in Africa." For more than two years there has been published in Atlanta a monthly periodical, called "Theological Institute," which is proclaimed to be the theological organ of these three denominations. Its editors are Bishop L. H. Holsey of the C. M. E. Church, Bishop J. W. Hood of the Zion Church, and Bishop H. M. Turner of the A. M. E. Church. It really begins to look as if the independent negro bodies may unite in the not far future. Thus far the colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church seem to have taken little or no stock in these deliberations.

INVITED TO LECTURE AT MILLSAPS.

Dear Doctor Meek: The president and faculty of Millsaps College have invited Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, of the North Mississippi Conference, to visit the college in April of the present year and deliver a series of four or five lectures on the subject of "Conscience." The negotiations are not yet complete, Mr. Lipscomb's acceptance not having been received; but it is the hope of the faculty and of all friends of the college that he will respond to the call and that the lectures will be delivered at the time stated.

The Rev. Mr. Lipscomb is a brother of the Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, now deceased, and of Prof. Dabney Lipscomb, of the Industrial Institute and College at Columbus, Miss. He is well known to the people of his State as one of the ablest theologians in Mississippi. Methodism, is a graduate of Drew Theological Seminary, and is the author of a recent book on "Conscience and its Culture," which has elicited much favorable comment.

Rev. Mr. Lipscomb is a young man of fine promise and of exalted Christian character, and the faculty and students of Millsaps are looking forward with the hope of much pleasure and profit to his expected visit.

THE EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN ENDORSED.

Mr. Editor: I want to say a word concerning the work of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions at its mid-year meeting in Alexandria some days ago. The plans of said Board were all wise and timely, and I am persuaded that a successful forward movement will be the result. Dr. Moore was present and was wise in council, genial in spirit, and left the inspiration of his good life and purpose upon me, and I hope upon all in attendance. One of the things of deepest interest to me was the evangelistic movement in the Louisiana Conference. The need of such work is beyond question, and the men to do it are at hand. The day has passed when our pastors can do much of the old-time protracted meeting work. The many things to be done at home—"visiting from house to house," meeting committees of laymen, attending Woman's Foreign and Home Mission Societies, stewards' meetings, Sunday school teachers' meetings and adult students' meetings—keep the pastors on the go day after day and week after week. To be absent when these committees and societies meet is hurtful to both the pastor and church; therefore, for want of opportunity, the pastor cannot do the work of an evangelist. One of the elders said, "The work can be done by the pastors." But I am sure if he had considered the fact that to do so the pastors would often have to be absent for a considerable time, his utterance would not have been so emphatic. Moreover, it is well-nigh impossible for the average pastor to hold his own revivals; some can, but many cannot, and it is for these who need help I am contending and planning.

There are good and sane reasons for many pastors not doing this work. Their pastoral duties with their many details do not allow the necessary preparation for special evangelistic work. And the relation of the people to their pastor should not be overlooked, for, in many instances, the acquaintance he has with their conditions, manner of life and business relations are such as to forbid his doing the plain and outspoken preaching that the evangelist does. This all pastors know, and many have suffered while daring to do the kind of preaching that was needed.

The day is at hand when we must have men specially appointed to do this work, and the Church is doubtless beholding "the field now white unto the harvest." God is calling; the conditions are calling and men are ready to answer. Shall we wait as did the Church across the sea when General Booth saw an open door and by reason of the hesitancy of the Church was forced to enter alone? I think not, for many of our spiritual and wise leaders have a clear vision of the fields and hear the voice of God our Savior saying, "These dry bones shall live."

I am persuaded that any two districts in the Louisiana Conference can find work enough and support sufficient for a man of ability as a missionary evangelist. "The king's business demands haste," and our conference board is wise in planning for said work. Let prayer be made to the "Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers" to reap now, for the field is whiter far than in any day in our history.

I trust the committee appointed to plan for the evangelistic campaign will soon find the man, or men, and launch this movement, and that pastors and people will form prayer circles and make this the greatest year thus far in the history of Louisiana Methodism.

Yours for a forward movement,

H. W. MAY.

Secular News and Comment

The President has ordered a large number of troops to Texas to assist in restoring order and maintaining peace which have been largely disturbed by the insurrection in Mexico.

Henry S. Boutell, formerly Republican Congressman from Illinois, who failed of re-election in the last primary in his district, has been appointed by President Taft as United States Minister to Portugal.

The Daughters of the Confederacy of Gulfport, Miss., and the coast, are endeavoring to raise a fund to erect a Confederate monument to be placed on the grounds of the county courthouse.

Carter H. Harrison, who has before served four terms as mayor of Chicago, and Charles E. Merriam, a professor in the University of Chicago, are the nominees of the Democratic and Republican parties respectively, for the office of mayor of the Windy City.

A ministerial crisis in France resulted recently in the resignation of the old Cabinet, and a new one has been formed under the premiership of M. Antoine Ernest Monis, a member of the Senate and Radical Republican.

The officials of the various railroads entering New Orleans, estimate that the city had the largest number of visitors in its history during the recent Mardi Gras festivities. The number is placed at between fifty and sixty thousand.

A census is being taken in France. The last one taken in March, 1906, showed a population of 39,252,245. The population of Paris at that time was 2,763,393. Information of the most varied kind is secured in the census, but no questions are asked as to religion.

It is reported that one of the largest poultry farms in the country will be established near Crystal Springs, Miss. It is stated that the farm will be stocked with not fewer than 10,000 hens, and that the trade of the principal Southern cities will be catered to.

Secretary Ballinger of the Department of the Interior tendered his resignation to the President on March 7. It is announced that Walter Fisher, of Chicago, will be his successor. Mr. Ballinger has been largely in the public eye through the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy.

Senator Bailey, of Texas, created something of a sensation on the closing day of Congress by tendering his resignation, in a fit of anger brought about by the course of his Democratic colleagues in regard to certain measures, particularly the New Mexico-Arizona constitutions, which he strongly opposed. The Senate refused to consider the resignation, and after some hours it was withdrawn.

A girls' canning club has been organized in Mississippi. The plan was originated by Dr. S. A. Knapp, of the Agricultural Department, Washington. The department will furnish a demonstrator of canning to give the girls the necessary instruction in the work. It is believed this movement will do for the girls what the boys' corn club has done for the boys. The first club was organized at Brookhaven.

Senator Lorimer, of Illinois, will retain his seat in the United States Senate. By a vote of 46 to 40 the Senate, on March 1, defeated the resolution introduced by Senator Beveridge declaring that the junior senator from Illinois had not been legally elected. The case had been before the Senate for months and had provoked a bitter fight. Notwithstanding the result of the vote in the Senate, many people are still convinced that Lorimer was unfairly elected.

Famine and the plague are still sweeping over China. Already the deaths number 30,000, and the daily death rate averages 2,000. Dr. Samuel Cochran, an American who is engaged in relief work, states that probably one million people will die before the first crop is harvested. This first crop will be scanty because the people have not the strength to till the soil, and no animals remain for plowing. The Red Cross Society is doing all in its power to relieve the situation, and contributions to the relief fund will be welcomed.

The resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution so as to provide that senators be elected by direct vote of the people was defeated in the Senate on Feb. 28. The vote stood 54 yeas, 33 nays, thus lacking 4 of the necessary two-thirds majority. It is generally conceded that the Sutherland amendment, providing for the Federal supervision of senatorial elections, brought about the defeat. Senator Borah, who has led the fight for popular elections, announced that the resolution will be again introduced at the next session of Congress.

The sixty-first Congress came to a close at noon on Saturday of last week. Never before, perhaps, has there been such congestion of business in the closing days. Many matters of importance were not acted on. So urgent does the President consider some of these measures that he has called a special session of Congress to meet on April 4. The following are some of the results, positive and negative, of the sixty-first Congress. The tabulation is taken from our esteemed contemporary, The Picayune:

Positive Results.

Provision of $3,000,000 for the fortification of the Panama Canal.

Provisions for two new battleships.

Recodification of the judicial code—regarded as most important for the amelioration of the law's delays.

Creation of forest preserves in the southern Appalachian and White Mountains.

Providing for the construction of embassy and legation buildings abroad.

Requiring the inspection of locomotive boilers.

Failure of the effort to unseat William Lorimer as senator from Illinois on grounds of alleged bribery in his election.

Creating Robert E. Peary a rear admiral on the retired list of the navy, and formally tendering thanks of Congress to him.

Creating a committee of five senators and five representatives to investigate conditions in Alaska.

Negative Results.

Failure of the Canadian reciprocity agreement in the Senate and consequent certainty of an extra session.

Failure of the permanent tariff board bill which passed the Senate, but was killed by a filibuster in the House.

Failure of the resolution to admit to Statehood Arizona and New Mexico, which was killed by a filibuster in the Senate.

Failure of the proposal to increase the rate of postage on the advertising sections of the large magazines.

Failure of the Senate resolution providing for the direct election of United States Senators.

Failure of the general age pension bill.

Failure to act on Ballinger-Pinchot investigation reports.

Failure to enact the ocean mail subsidy passed by the Senate alone.

Failure of bill fixing canal tolls and settling form of government for Panama Canal Zone.

Failure of Congressional reapportionment bill based on the new census.

BRUCE GEE DUBARD.

Bruce Gee Dubard, who died Jan. 19, 1911, was the son of Marcellus G. and Sarah Nason Dubard. He was born nearly thirty-four years ago in Grenada County. Here he was reared, entered upon his life work, and here he was suddenly and unexpectedly interrupted in the midst of flattering prospects and confident hopes.

Bruce Dubard "placed life's emphasis aright; he made himself a character." He was a gentleman by instinct and bearing. His sensitive nature seemed to recoil from anything and everything not entirely honorable. If great moral battles were waged in his soul, so far as his friends could see the right always prevailed. In fact, it seemed easy and natural for him to discover the right and pursue it.

About such deaths there is always a mystery. He was young, well equipped for his chosen work, modest, considerate, good, and it appeared that he had come into his position and pursuit with divine approval, if not appointment.

But he is gone! And O, how he will be missed! We are cheered, however, by the thought that "some time we will understand." It may be said in a truer and deeper sense than is sometimes meant that Bruce Dubard "was born of Christian parents" and reared in a genuinely religious atmosphere. He met expectation, both when in childhood he united with the Church and in continuing to be a faithful and devoted member to the day of his death.

He was happily married by Bishop Atkins in 1907 to Miss Willie May Williams, daughter of Rev. A. H. Williams of the North Mississippi Conference, who was a fitting companion—a helpmeet indeed for the industrious, manly young man to whom she had given her heart and hand.

His loving wife and precious little boy, a devoted father, two fond sisters, numerous other relatives and a host of friends remain in sorrow because of his departure; but they are sustained and comforted by the confident hope that through the grace, mercy and love of the triune God they may see him again.

W. W. MITCHELL.

A THREE HUNDRED DOLLAR SPECIAL.

At the session of the North Texas Conference, held at Greenville, Tex., on November 18-23, 1908, in response to a statement made by the corresponding secretary of the Board of Church Extension, of the need for a church building in Bowie, Ariz., a village on the Southern Pacific Railroad, where there was no church building of any sort, Mr. Charles H. Morris of Winnsboro, Tex., interrupted the speaker long enough to announce that he would care for the proposition. Brother Morris gave his check for $300.

On a tour of Arizona, in company with Rev. J. E. Crutchfield, a few months previous, I stopped at Bowie and found there no church organization; but a company of good women, who, under the direction of the presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Crutchfield, began work by organizing a Woman's Home Mission Society. After a long, hard pull, the church building was completed without other outside assistance save that given by Bro. Morris.

A few weeks ago, in a business letter to this office, Bro. Crutchfield writes as follows:

"You can hardly imagine the good that our church has done for Bowie. It is actually making the town. People have come in from mines and ranches to live there because they have a church in the town. There seems to be no other reason in the world, but they are actually going to make a town out of what has been for twenty years just a railroad junction and nothing more. They are talking seriously of paying for all of a preacher's time."

These facts are given to show what a little timely help will do for a needy place, and also to call attention to those of our people who are willing to invest a part of the Lord's substance committed to them in his work, to the fact that the office of the Board of Church Extension is in possession of information continually where investment of the Lord's money can be made which will bring just as large results as that invested by Bro. Morris in Bowie, Ariz.

W. F. McMURRY, Corresponding Sec'y.

NOTES FROM THE ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

The year has opened hopefully with us on the Alexandria District. There is general satisfaction among preachers and people with the appointments of Bishop Murrab. Dr. F. N. Parker has made a fine impression upon the people of Alexandria. He is preaching to a full house every Sunday. The large proportion of men in his congregation and the splendid attention is a matter of general comment. Your old Mississippi neighbor, Rev. G. D. Purcell, is rejoicing over the arrival of a "junior preacher" at the parsonage in Harrisonburg.

The presiding elder has just made a trip involving a 150-mile ride in a jumper. We are trying to press the fight in our rural section.

Rev. P. O. Lowrey, our Sunday School Missionary, has just finished two months' work in our district. He did our Sunday school work much good.

PAUL M. BROWN.

WINONA DISTRICT ITEMS.

Dear Brother Meek: You may announce that the Winona District Conference will be held at Webb, Miss., May 17-19, Bishop W. R. Murrab presiding. We anticipate an occasion of delight and profit. The Winona District is in the midst of a great building era, not less than eight or ten churches being planned for right away. These churches will cost from $15,000 down to a few hundred.

Dr. and Mrs. Hamill will spend April 8 and 9 at Greenwood, holding an institute for our people there. You are giving us a bright, strong paper. I exhort for the paper everywhere I go. Great success to you. Yours truly,

F. S. LEWIS.

MAY EXPLAIN HIS TWISTED THEOLOGY.

Elbert Hubbard says: "Edison is a great Philistine—reads everything I write—has a complete file of the little brownie magazine and some of the 'Little Journeys' I saw he had interlined and marked. I think Edison is one of the greatest men I ever met; he appreciates good things." But if the above is true, Edison has a serious weakness: he is an apostle of Elbert Hubbard. Little wonder he gets loose in his theology! How much damage such men do we cannot estimate. May it not be that they say, "There is no Christ," because it profiteth them that he were not?

Concerning Missions.

THE WOMAN OF THE MISSION.

By Prof. W. E. Underwood.

(Written after observing the work of a city missionary in New Orleans.)

I know a woman, meek and mild, beloved by young and old,
Her wealth is more than worlds like this, though naught she has of gold.
Into the city's slums she goes and aids the weak and poor;
They all bless her wherever she goes, and open to her their door.
From morn till night, she travels round, to lend a helping hand;
To see man suffer, even tho' vile, she cannot well withstand.

The drunkards know her, praise her name—she gives them kind reproof,
They would not harm her did she stay, all night without a roof.
Whence comes thy charm, dear loving saint? "Kind words and loving deeds."
Her soul to God she doth commend, such friend is all she needs.
O, for assurance like to thine, dear woman of the Mission.
Thou givest thy all to aid mankind, and to thy God submission.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT WOMAN'S MEETING.

One of the most largely attended and successful district meetings in the history of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Brookhaven District was held in Bogie Chitto, Miss., Feb. 21 to 23.

The meeting opened Tuesday evening, and the hour was given mainly to an exchange of greetings. Brother Gatlin, the efficient pastor, conducted a profitable devotional service. Addresses of welcome were delivered in well-chosen words, assuring the delegates and visitors that the hearts and homes of Bogie Chitto were open to those abiding for a season within her gates. Mrs. Bessie Lipscomb voiced the response for the conference in her own inimitable way. A very strong and forceful address on "Our Work" was delivered by Mrs. Lipscomb. After the close of the service a social half hour was enjoyed.

Wednesday was spent principally in hearing and discussing reports; an encouraging note of progress and increase ran through every report. Wednesday evening's session was one of the most interesting and enjoyable of the meeting. After the devotional service, conducted by Mrs. Carter, "The Call to Christian America" was beautifully rendered by the young ladies of Mrs. B. E. Brister's Sunday school class. Especially did we enjoy the beautiful solo by Mrs. Hugh Brister. The climax of the evening was reached in the inspiring and uplifting paper on "Home Missions as a Means of Spiritual Development," by Mrs. F. E. Edgar.

Very interesting and profitable sessions were held Thursday. Several carefully prepared papers on such subjects as, "Tithing, or the Lord's Tenth," "Our Cuban Work," "An Ideal Home Mission Society" and "Our Schools as Character Builders," were read. The district parsonage, its care and needs, were freely discussed. A consecration service was participated in and enjoyed by all.

Wesson was chosen as the place for the next meeting. We left Bogie Chitto and this district meeting feeling that it was good to have been there.

MRS. J. K. DUNN, Secretary.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the North Mississippi Conference will be held in Iuka, Miss., May 20 to 24. All auxiliaries are urged to send delegates. A most cordial invitation is extended to pastors and presiding elders to attend this meeting. A good programme is being planned. Send names of delegates and officers to Miss May Belle Williams, Iuka, Miss.

REV. PARMENAS HOWARD.

Rev. Parmenas Howard was born at Crystal Springs, Miss., May 22, 1830, his father, Isaiah Howard, being the first settler there. His mother was Mary McAdoo of Tennessee. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church when a boy, Sept. 13, 1846, at Spring Hill, Miss. Brother Howard joined the Mississippi Conference at Brandon in 1857. In 1862 he was married to Mary E. Neal of Greenwood, Miss., who died early in the year 1875, leaving him with three small children, four others having preceded their mother to the grave. He was afterward married to Martha E. Reagan of China Grove, who with one daughter, Mrs. R. W. Williams, of Holmesville, and the other three children, viz., R. N. Howard of McComb, Mrs. W. H. Underwood of Denham Springs, La.; Mrs. W. H. Benton of Crowley, La., survive him. He suffered intensely for three weeks, except the last two or three days, which were almost void of pain, at last quietly and peacefully falling asleep exactly at 8 o'clock, Friday morning, Nov. 25, 1910.

Brother Howard was ordained deacon at Natchez, Nov. 25, 1850, by Bishop John Early, and was ordained elder at Crystal Springs, 1870, by Bishop Doggett.

His appointments were: 1858, McWillie's Colored Mission; 1859-1860, Bolivar; 1861-1862, Lower Deer Creek; 1863, Greenwood; 1864-1865, Carrollton; 1866, Spring Ridge; 1867, Greenwood; 1868, North Carroll; 1869, he sustained the local relation; 1870-1872, North Warren; 1873-1874, Wilkinson; 1875, China Grove; 1876, Johnston; 1877-1878, China Grove; 1879-1880, Beauregard; 1881, Pearlinton; 1882-1885, Mt. Olive; 1886-1888, Centerville; 1889-1891, Greensburg; 1892-1893, Adams; 1895-1896, Americus; 1897-1910, superannuated.

Martha E. Howard, the surviving wife, is at the home of her mother in Holmesville, with whom she and her husband have made their home for some years. Her mother is a sister of our dear brother, H. P. Lewis, a worthy superannuate.

Brother Howard's boyhood days were spent in Attala County, and his school time in Attalaville Academy. His studies were mainly in the ordinary branches of an English education. He was a ready speaker, having a good flow of language and a pleasant manner of delivering the message of salvation to his hearers. At a protracted meeting he preached a sermon in the presence of an intelligent layman who had never heard him, and this gentleman was so favorably impressed that he said to the writer, "That sermon was worthy of a Bishop." Even since his superannuation, after preaching at a camp meeting at which some of the best preachers of the Mississippi Conference had preached, it was remarked that his preaching would compare favorably with any of that occasion. It may be observed that in the latter part of his active ministry he remained longer on the same charge than he did in the earlier part of his ministry. This is an indication of his effective service as a pastor as long as he was on the effective list.

His entire ministry was on charges that paid small salaries, and it was necessary for him to practice economy in order to support himself and keep out of debt. He was a superannuate about fourteen years, the most trying relation that a preacher can sustain in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Brother Howard made the best use he could of that relation. With the infirmities of age creeping on him, he applied his failing powers with the meager appropriation from the Church to the support of his family while he lived, and to provide for their comfort after his death. By industry and economy he leaves something for the home comfort.

Brother Howard was a plain, practical man, content to labor in the sphere in which Providence called him. The only greatness to which he aspired was to be humble in the sight of his Lord. He made it a part of his business always when he came to Magnolia to visit me. We usually had prayer in the family while he was with us. He loved to talk about the Church and religion and the doctrines and teachings of Christianity. Although retired from the active work of the Church, he followed in thought and interest the movements of the great army of the Lord for the conquest of the world to the cause of our holy religion. The good man, the good citizen, the devoted husband, the faithful preacher, has gone to receive his reward. His going is a personal loss to the writer. His friendship, presence, loving kindness and faithful services among the people in the circle of his labors will be remembered. A quotation from the New Orleans Christian Advocate in a notice of his death by his pastor, Rev. J. Lloyd Decell, with one more thought, may close this memoir: "Though in his eighty-fourth year, he often went with me in making pastoral calls and has indeed been a great inspiration in this my first year in the pastorate. His last days were filled with the fullness of hope in the gospel that he preached so faithfully for a number of years."

It appears from this showing in the life and labors of Brother Howard that there is thought for improvement in the work of appointing the preachers to their fields of labor and fixing their relation to the Church so that all may have something to do in the vineyard of the Lord according to their ability "for the edifying of the body of Christ."

J. W. SANDELL.

REV. B. B. SULLIVAN.

A man's life work cannot be judged by the noise he makes or the place he fills. Some men get a great deal more than they deserve, while others deserve a great deal more than they ever get in this life, and B. B. Sullivan belonged to the latter class. "He never sold for his worth." Always modest, reserved and unassuming, he never advertised or pushed himself forward, and consequently was not what the world calls a prominent man. But he was no common man. He possessed qualities of head and heart that lifted him above the realm of the mediocre. Pope said, "An honest man is the noblest work of God." The subject of this sketch was an honest man in every sense of the word, and that alone is a mark of distinction in this day of shams, insincerity, fakes and greed among men of every class. Of course an honest man is a truthful man. I can think of him as one of the few men whose word I could never doubt.

He was a true friend, a dutiful son, a loving brother, a devoted husband, a fond and affectionate father. He was a brave man. No place of service was too hard for him; no path of duty ever too dangerous. When and where his Church commanded, he went, even if it was to the poorest mission or the miasmatic swamps. When the storm clouds were gathering about his home and threatening its ruin, he bared the young breast to receive the tempest shock and took on his shoulders the task of its redemption, and nobly was the work done. I was intimately associated with him when he was undergoing exposure and hardships that reduced him to a shadow of his former self, and it was all for the protection and comfort of those he loved.

Early in life he felt a call to the gospel ministry, and he went to Cooper Institute, where he laid the foundation for a well-trained mind. As a preacher he was logical, forceful, coherent and clear. As a pastor he was cheerful, kind, sympathetic.

Dear honest, true, noble friend, but little did we think when we parted at Sardis it was for the last time in this world, but I shall see thee again. May God's richest blessings descend on your loved ones!

Montpelier, Miss., Feb. 14, 1911.

THINKS IT SHOULD BE BUILT.

Dear Brother Meek:

Your recent editorial on "The Washington City Church" was certainly timely, and in my opinion cannot be excelled. I have often wondered why, as Southern Methodists we have not done more to make a creditable appearance in the Capital City of our great republic. And to me it is strange that our noble Southern Congressmen and Senators, many of whom belong to our branch of Methodism, have been so quiet all these years and have made no effort to arouse the Church at large to a recognition of this important duty. Surely it is incumbent upon our denomination, which is numerically and financially so strong, to build upon an adequate scale in this great center of wealth, culture and refinement. Washington is the seat of government of the greatest republic, if not the greatest country, upon the globe.

I believe that God desires his people in city, town and country to erect the most tasteful and attractive houses of worship of which their means will admit. For did he not direct David and Solomon in planning to build that magnificent and costly temple, which was the first house constructed and set apart for divine worship? Directions were also given for the tabernacle with its gorgeous silk and linen tapestries and its sockets of gold. God gave to Moses specific commandments concerning both its construction and appointments, the character of which has ever been conclusive proof to my mind that our loving Father desires our best gifts for his service.

MRS. M. W. MORRISON.

FIVE LITTLE FOXES.

Among my tender vines I spy
A little fox named—By and Bye.
Then get upon him quick, I say,
The swift young hunter—Right Away.
Around each tender vine I plant,
I find the little fox—I Can't.
Then, fast as ever hunter ran,
Chase him with bold and brave—I Can.
No Use in Trying—lags and whines
This fox among my tender vines.
Then drive him low, and drive him high,
With this good hunter, named—I'll Try.
Among the vines in my small lot
Creeps in the young fox—I Forgot.
Then hunt him out and to his pen
With—I Will Not Forget Again.
A little fox is hidden there
Among my vines, named—I Don't Care.
Then let I'm Sorry—hunter true—
Chase him afar from vines and you.

WHAT THE BEADS TOLD.

"Everything goes wrong," stormed Molly, when her papa telephoned that he was too busy to take her for the drive they had planned. "I never want to do things and get my way, so I'm going to stop counting on them."

"You don't have half as much trouble as I do," said Roy. "I have worked three days to make my kite fly, and just as I got it all right it tangled up in the wires and got broken. I would just like to have things go right for once."

"I thought you enjoyed the ride in the auto this morning when Uncle Joseph came past," said grandma, who was quietly knitting by the window.

"Well, that was one time," admitted Molly, "but everything else has gone wrong this morning."

"How about the pretty kitten Cousin Sarah sent?" went on grandma.

"I forgot about that, too," said Molly, "but I suppose it will run away or something."

"Jack chewed up my ball this morning," grumbled Roy.

"Yes, and Cousin Sarah bought you a new one when she heard about it," said grandma. "I think you are both a little out of humor."

"Honest, grandma," said Molly, "things have been going wrong all the morning. I couldn't tell you how many times I've been disappointed."

So grandmother urged her to tell everything that had happened that morning, and Molly had a doleful tale. Roy added his list to Molly's and any one who saw the forlorn little faces must have concluded that they had hard times, indeed. After awhile they forgot all about what grandma had said, and played till dinner was ready. After dinner they went for the drive, and not a thing was said about being disappointed until after supper, when bedtime came.

"Look here, children," said grandma, holding up two strings of beads. "Every time you told me today that something went wrong, I put on a gray bead, and when you were happy, a gold one. What do you think of the strings?"

And if you'll believe me, Roy only found five gray beads on his string and Molly four on hers! All the rest were shining gold ones, and grandma had asked them from time to time all that day what had happened, so they knew the beads were telling true stories. Then they sat down to count the gold beads, and found that Molly had twenty-five and Roy thirty. Just think of that! Why, the dull gray beads hardly counted at all among the bright shining ones.

"I'll never say again that everything goes wrong!" said two voices. "Let's hang the beads on the curtain where we can always see them and remember."

THE STORY OF A ROSE.

"Look, mother dearest, it is the fairest rose in the garden, the only one that is left, and I snipped it with the tenderest care. Did you ever see anything more beautiful? For days I have been watching it; it is a love offering for Miss Morris; I am going to take it to her."

Mrs. Belton looked at the rose, and then at the face of the beautiful young girl, glowing with youth and enthusiasm.

"I have a thought, dearest," she said. "Do you believe that Miss Morris needs this flower to prove the expression of your love for her? And is not her life crowned with much that is beautiful? You know she is rich in most things, Marion?"

"I wonder of what you are thinking, mother? Do you mean that I shall not give the rose to Miss Morris?"

"I was wondering if it had not some other mission to perform. All about us there are those who are hungering and thirsting for the beautiful things in life, souls that are destitute of so much that we call comfort. What might this rose mean to some such one?"

"Oh, mother!" There was an unmistakable ring of disappointment in Marion's voice.

"Yes, dear, I know something of what you are thinking. Do you know to many this rose would be luxury unknown, and breathe a message such as you could little dream of? Suppose, when you go to school this morning, you get off the car at Twenty-first street, and walk out to the court just below, and with heart aglow with love and gratitude toward God for all his tender mercies, you watch for the opportunity to give the rose in his name to some suffering soul."

"Mother, O mother! I will do it. But how shall I know?"

She pressed the flower tenderly to her lips.

"I will give it in his name," she said, "and then I shall make no mistake."

When the car reached Twenty-first street, Marion was the first to alight. She knew she had ample time, but she quickened her steps as she neared the court. The pretty young girl in her handsome tailored gown attracted no seeming attention; the few people scattered along the narrow walk were too bitterly intent upon their own affairs to bother about any passing stranger, however fair she might be.

Marion turned quickly. A subdued sob reached her ears. A young woman sat upon a step. Her face was haggard and tear-stained. She did not look up when Marion approached. She bore such a look of abject despair, that the girl felt dumb in the presence of it.

"Would you think me rude if I should ask what is troubling you?"

"Oh, no," was the answer, in a voice in which there was no ring of hope. "I am going to the hospital to-day for an operation. I may die, and there is no one to care if I do."

"Oh! you are mistaken. I shall care. It was you I was seeking."

"Impossible." There was some interest in the tone. She looked at the girl critically, "Why, I never saw you before."

"But I came here purposely to seek you. I am sure God directed me to you. See, I have brought you a rose; the most beautiful of all, the last to grow in our garden."

She reached out a hand and took the rose eagerly. Then the interest died out of her face. "I shall die and there will be no one to care."

"You are mistaken. I shall come and inquire, and while you may not see me, you will know I have been there. See this rose. It is a token of my promise to you; I shall not forget you."

In one of the hospital wards, three mornings later by one of the cots was a beautiful bunch of roses distilling fragrance, while with eyes greedily fixed upon it was the young woman, whose life had been spared.

"Did she come?" she asked of the nurse.

"Yes, she came, and she left her love for you with the roses. She was so glad when I told her you would live; she said I should tell you she would call again. What! you must not cry; it will retard your recovery, and you want to be well soon."

She checked her sobs and looked again at the roses. "And I had thought life was all over for me, and that there was no one to care," she said. "Oh, the roses, the roses! God bless them!"—Christian Intelligencer.

OUR DOMESTIC MISSION COLLECTION.

Dear Brother Meek: I wish to submit some figures for the consideration of those brethren who have had no first-hand knowledge of our domestic mission problems. It may not be very pleasant reading; but I hold that, while the truth may hurt, it does not wrong anyone.

The approximate amount due quarterly to those serving our mission charges is $1,750. Of the thirty-five charges already reported, six have received more than $100 each, one more than $150, and two more than $200. But notwithstanding this the average paid both preacher and presiding elder for the first quarter is the pitiful sum of $76, or about $67 for the preacher alone. Only one man has received less than $25, but a number have had to live on less than $40.

Now, I know that this statement will strike a sympathetic chord in every heart, preacher and layman; but remember, the groans that express the sincerest commiseration cannot be used in the payment of your obligations. The report of the treasurer of the Board will be made on March 15, and I will not anticipate that report further than to say, that the whole amount turned in for meeting the payments now due—the amount contributed for relieving the necessities of the men who have suffered for their work's sake—is $365.20.

Brother preacher, what credit are you going to have in that report? Brother layman, is the voice of your church going to be heard speaking out for the relief of these unrewarded and suffering toilers?

Let me ask you to try the effect of these facts on your folks. Cordially,

W. L. DUREN,

Pres. of the Board.

Tupelo, Miss., March 4, 1911.

THE SEAT OF THE TROUBLE.

There is abroad a very general impression that the ministry of to-day is not as effective in reaching and saving the people as in some former periods of the Church's history. This feeling is not confined to any one denomination or to any particular country. Statements to this effect are frequently seen in the religious journals of both the United States and Great Britain. And they come alike from men in the pulpit and in the pew. Indeed, it is not now uncommon to hear the view advanced that the gospel has lost its power to attract the masses and that new devices must be contrived by the Church, if she is to maintain her prestige and influence among the people.

In view of this situation, it is pertinent to enquire what has caused this decline in the efficiency of the ministry, if there has really been such a declension, and we are disposed to think that there has. Certainly the preachers of to-day in point of intelligence are not inferior to those of former decades. Admitting that the educational acquirements of the men who fill our pulpits are yet far too meager, it must be conceded that they are considerably more ample than were those of their predecessors. The clergy has gained rather than lost in scholarship, and so far as a larger intelligence can make them so, ought to be more effective than those who wrought for the extension of the kingdom in the past.

Nor do we think the preachers of the present time are less moral than those of preceding generations. Almost without exception they are men of upright purposes and a clean life. They have a sincere desire to accomplish good and to promote the religious betterment of humanity. We had almost said that in singleness of aim and consecration to their work they will compare favorably with the fathers; but perhaps that would be claiming rather too much, though undoubtedly there are many among them who are unworldly and who delight to spend themselves for the spread of the gospel.

What then is the cause of the impaired efficiency of the ministry in this modern time? Why is it that our pulpit utterances no longer light revival fires and stir the people to repentance and inward reformation as in the days ago? Our view is that it is due to a weakened faith. The general trend of scientific teaching for many years has been to disparage and discredit the simple teaching of the divine Word. Discovering the widespread reign of law throughout the universe, men have been disposed to eliminate God from its government, or set him off at such a distance that the sense of his presence and overshadowing providence has been reduced to a minimum. They have sought even to strip him of his personality, and convert him into a blind, unthinking force, or an "original first cause," or a mere "stream of tendencies." This skeptical philosophy, backed by the great names of Darwin, Huxley, Spencer, and others, has entrenched itself in our institutions of learning, has invaded the pulpit, and has spread throughout all the civilized lands of earth its baleful and blighting influence.

Nor is this all. We have lately had following in the wake of this propaganda of unbelieving scientists and philosophers, another which has proven still more hurtful in its effects. Though conducted under the name and professedly in the interest of the Christian religion, it has tended to strike down some of its most precious doctrines and to shiver into pieces the main springs of its power and activities. It is needless to say that we refer to "higher criticism" and the poisonous literature with which it has been flooding Christendom. Those who have taken up with this new teaching seem blind to the fact that they cannot dissect the Bible and discard at will certain portions of it without lessening the confidence of the masses of the people in the volume as a whole. It is our conviction that the assaults upon the Scriptures from these two sources have had a demoralizing effect upon the faith of both the clergy and the laity. Surely this position will not be considered unreasonable when it is remembered that by some of the disciples of this "new theology," the inspiration of the Book of Holy Writ is whittled down until it amounts to but little; the fall of man is called in question, sin is regarded as little else than an infirmity, the fires of gehenna are blown out, the general judgment is abolished, the miraculous is read out of the canon of revelation, and the human body left to sleep forever in the lonely tomb. We do not mean that such doctrines are widely accepted among the adherents of Christianity, but that the preaching of them has tended to sow broadcast in human hearts the seeds of doubt and infidelity.

We have already said that a weakened faith impairs efficiency in service, but let us notice somewhat more in detail some of its inevitable results:

1. It interrupts communion with God. The Heavenly Father unfolds himself only to the believing soul. He dwells with those who trust him, and gives them fullness of life and largeness of view. Doubt dishonors and repels him. One may be skeptical and outwardly moral, but he cannot be skeptical and spiritual. We must have a strong faith if we would have a joyous, strengthening fellowship with the sovereign Lord of all.

2. A weak faith is apt to lead to the adoption of wrong ideals. Paul's "joy and crown" were his converts. He stayed close enough to the Master to know that the saving and nurture of souls is the chief work of the ministry. All else with him was merely incidental. And so it will ever be with ministers who have a clear spiritual perception. It is when that becomes blurred that they begin to find their chief delight in raising money, building houses of worship, and in doing the other material work of Zion. There is a kind of religious materialism that is widespread in this day. It seeks to turn the Church from her ministry to the deathless human spirit, and make her a mere almoner of charities to the human body. It would make her gospel one of time and the earth, instead of one of eternity and the sky. It would have her fling away her crown, and descend to a place of parity with the State and other benevolent organizations which can minister equally as well to bodily distress and poverty. We do not desire Christians to shut their ears to the cry of man in his physical need, but they should ever remember that physical destitution is nothing compared to the awful destitution of the Christless soul. It has sometimes seemed to us that church members know how to do everything else except to bring sinners to the Lamb of God. A new and clarified vision of what its "high calling" is, is one of the most urgent necessities of twentieth-century Christianity.

3. A declension in faith is invariably accompanied by a lessening of spiritual power. One's capacity to achieve is measured by his belief. "According to your faith, be it unto you," is the law of the divine kingdom. A man without faith is as completely stripped of his spiritual strength, as was Sampson of his physical power when shorn of his flowing locks. And generally in proportion as men engaged in religious work come to distrust the divine agencies pledged to their assistance, they are disposed to magnify and lean upon human instrumentalities. They count more upon the soup kitchen than the prayer meeting. They want to bring men into the Church by buying them over with favors rendered and worldly advantages to be gained. But the people who followed the Master for the loaves and fishes in the beginning of the Christian era were worth very little, and there is no evidence that they are worth any more now. The spirit of a parasite is the very antithesis of the spirit of the Man of Galilee, who "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister."

Much is being said and written concerning a general revival throughout the connection. That this is the crying need of Methodism and the outside world, is universally admitted. But if such a revival comes, it will be in response to the quickened belief of the Church. And if we would aid in ushering it in, the best thing that we can do is upon bended knee to kindle the languishing fires of faith upon the altars of our own hearts. We cannot discard or ignore the essential doctrines of Christianity and retain the elements of strength springing from them which have made it the mightiest conquering force of the ages. Not until our preachers and personal workers have a conviction extending to the very depths of the soul, that all out of Christ are lost and in constant peril of everlasting destruction, and that Jesus is able, willing, and anxious to save them, may we expect them to speak the seasonable truths of the gospel with life-giving power. Only when God and the things of eternity are present and real to us, may we hope to make them sufficiently real to others to awaken conscience, and impel them to move along the path of conviction and penitence and through the gateway of regeneration into the kingdom, where they shall learn to know and serve him who died for them upon the cross.

GIVE US THE NEWS.

We urge our friends to send us reports of the church work in their communities. When any evil happens it is quickly blazoned abroad all over the country by the secular press. Ought we not as a counteracting influence to tell of the triumphs of righteousness and the good that is being accomplished in the name of the Master? You need to do this not for yourself, but for others. Nothing cheers and heartens discouraged toilers more than good news from other parts of the field. There is no egotism or immodesty in a pastor telling in a proper spirit what he and his people have achieved for the extension of the kingdom. John Wesley, than whom there has been no holier man in modern times, preached a sermon from the text, "What hath God wrought," in which he set forth the progress of the work under the ministry of himself and his associates. After all, any success that comes is not due so much to our feeble efforts, as to the influence of the Holy Spirit. He is the chief agent in reaching and saving the people and establishing the reign of righteousness on earth. We are only humble instruments in his mighty hand.

We do not think a church paper can render a better service than to give the news of what is transpiring in religious circles in its patronizing territory. This we are anxious to do, but we cannot publish information as to what is going on unless the brethren will send it to us. We therefore ask you to tell us of anything of interest that happens in your charge—what your League, Sunday school, prayer meetings, etc., are doing. And especially do we desire news concerning revivals, the building of new churches and forward movements of every kind. We do not want long-drawn-out reports, which go into details, but facts and results briefly stated. Much information can be conveyed on a postal card, if wisely condensed. Will you not assist in this way in enabling the Advocate to tell what our preachers and people are doing in Louisiana and Mississippi? It will help the cause for you to do so.

HOW TO DO IT.

Judge O'Rear said that some of the brethren at Asheville were engaged in telling us "how not to do it." A few of them now are addressing themselves to the task of telling us "how to do it." Dr. J. M. Moore in last week's issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate unfolds his plan for consolidating the Methodisms of the United States. He would set our colored brethren off to themselves, and for the white Methodists, he would have one General Conference and five Synodical Conferences—three east and two west of the Mississippi river. The General Conference he would make exclusively a law-making body, allowing it to elect none of the connectional officers. To the Synodical Conferences he would give a measure of autonomy in legislation and vest each with the power to elect its quota of Bishops, editors, etc. The name which he suggests for the united organization is "The Methodist Church," though he does not think it would be objectionable to add the words, "of America," or "the United States of America." Dr. Moore cautiously closes his discussion with this sentence: "If union is desirable, the above proposed plan would do much toward making it possible and practicable." Thus it will be seen that he does not commit himself on the question. This discretion that he exercises is, in our judgment, wise. It takes more than one swallow to make a summer, and it will take vastly more than theoretical agreements reached by a few leaders to weld the several bodies of American Methodism into a harmonious whole. Let the brethren not go too fast until they hear from the rank and file of the Church in Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Texas, and the other Southern States. It is never well for captains and generals to get too far in advance of the main body of the army. Such rashness is liable to involve them in trouble.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

March has been the Advocate's banner month for many years. We trust that our friends will see that it again proves so.

Miss Marie Meek, of Lexington, Miss., now a student at Whitworth College, was the guest of Mrs. R. A. Meek, of this city, during Mardi Gras week.

Dr. W. F. McMurry is expected to attend the Vicksburg District Conference, which will convene in the Washington Street Church of that city next week.

Rev. J. R. Jones, presiding elder of the Jackson District, attended the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Memphis Hospital Board of Trustees, which met in the Bluff City on March 1.

Rev. J. J. Garner, of Lula, Miss., sent us another fine lot of subscribers last week. The Advocate now reaches all of his official members, and finds its way into a large number of the homes of this good charge.

Professor Charles Lane, of Atlanta, Ga., the noted lecturer, has recently been filling some engagements in the Mississippi Delta. As a humorist he has few equals. He is also a Methodist preacher, and a good one.

Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, of Eunice, La., in remitting for a club of subscribers, adds his strong commendation of the Advocate. Our earnest desire is that the paper may be genuinely helpful to all our preachers and people.

Mrs. Elizabeth McKnight, who died about a year ago, gave $600 to the churches of Colfax, La. Two hundred dollars were given to the foreign missionary work of the M. E. Church, South, of which she was a member.

Mrs. G. W. Musser, of Gayle, La., in remitting for her own subscription, sends $1.50 for our Helping Fund. This is a most kindly act which will add to the pleasure of some one who has not been able to take the Advocate.

Rev. W. N. Dodds, of the Baldwin charge, North Mississippi Conference, was recently the recipient of a generous pouncing. He promises to add to the good list of subscribers which he has sent us, for which we thank him.

Bishop Murrah dedicated the First Methodist Church at Greenville, Miss., last Sunday. Much credit is due Rev. W. S. Lagrone, the pastor, for wiping out the indebtedness on this structure, which was of several years' standing.

Rev. T. V. Peters is pleased with the status of his work at Slidell, La. He has had seven accessions since Conference, and an encouraging interest is being manifested. He has our thanks for service rendered the Conference organ.

Iuka, North Mississippi Conference, is added to our "Honor Roll." The efficient pastor of that live charge, Rev. W. L. Graves, recently sent us a list of subscribers which places the Advocate in the home of every one of his official members.

Prof. W. H. Underwood, a layman of our Church at Denham Springs, La., was an appreciated caller at the Advocate office on Thursday of last week. The editor regrets not having had the pleasure of meeting him on account of absence from the office.

Dr. E. S. Fulton, who was recently married to Miss Eva Jacks at McGehee, Ark., is a son of the late Rev. Jesse Fulton, and a brother of Revs. J. B. and R. V. Fulton, of the Louisiana Conference. We pray heaven's richest blessings upon the young couple.

Success is attending the labors of Rev. T. J. O'Neil, the faithful presiding elder, and his associates in the work in the Newton District. He has just finished his first round of quarterly conferences, and reports the charges generally to be in a prosperous condition.

Rev. R. V. Fulton, of Denham Springs, La., is mindful of the interests of the Conference organ in his rounds. He has lately been sending in some names to be placed on our subscription files, and says "there are more to follow." We extend our hearty thanks to this faithful worker.

From Utica, Miss., Rev. C. M. Crossly, ever a good friend of the Advocate, sent us an additional list of subscribers on the 3d inst. This places his charge on the "Honor Roll." We acknowledge ourselves his debtors, and pray that a large measure of success may attend his labors.

An appreciated caller at our office on Tuesday of last week was Brother B. F. Goza, of Magnolia, Miss. He does not forget the Advocate when he comes to the Crescent City, and we are always pleased to see him. He spoke in terms most commendatory of his pastor, the Rev. H. B. Watkins.

The Shreveport District Conference will be held this year in First Church, Shreveport. The date, as has been announced, is April 18-20. With Bishop Murrah to preside and so capable and energetic a presiding elder as Brother Singleton to get things in readiness, the occasion will doubtless be a memorable one.

Bishop E. D. Mouzon was the guest of honor at a banquet given at Mansfield College on March 4. The occasion was a very happy and inspiring one. A full account will appear in next week's Advocate. The Bishop preached at the Methodist Church on Sunday, and needless to say, his message was strong and uplifting.

Those who are familiar with the work of Methodism in New Orleans do not need to be told that the article in last week's Advocate, "A Beautiful Life of Service," had reference to Mrs. Lilly Meekin, who is connected with the Mary Werlein Mission. She is indeed an angel of mercy as she ministers to the needy of this city.

We acknowledge our indebtedness to Rev. L. E. Wicht, of Washington, Miss., for a list of seven subscribers. He states that his work is somewhat scattered, but that he is serving a pleasant people. The adversary is on the ground to combat his efforts, but he is not discouraged. He is planning for a great service on Easter Sunday.

Cabanne Church, St. Louis, is flourishing under the efficient ministry of Dr. Theo. Copeland, who is well known in Mississippi and Louisiana. The Sunday school is large and growing, the congregations are the most satisfactory in the history of the church, and more than 250 were present at the League service on Sunday evening, Feb. 26.

Dr. F. H. Thompson, a zealous layman of Bogue Chitto, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate for another year, takes occasion to say some very kind things concerning the paper. He states that he considers it almost indispensable to all lovers of Methodism. Certainly a church paper is a part of the equipment of the well-informed Methodist.

Rev. J. H. Ingram has begun his fourth year at Glen Allan with flattering prospects. He says, "The people seem to have an increasing love for the Church and its work. I have organized an Epworth League with a goodly number of members. The outlook is better than it has been since I came here. I now have the Advocate in the home of every official, both at Glen Allan and Murphy."

Under date of March 4, Rev. J. W. Honnoll, of Tunica, Miss., writes: "We have just closed a good meeting at Robinsonville. There were several happy conversions and four accessions to the Church. Brother L. P. Wasson did the preaching, to the great satisfaction of all. He is one of the best gospel preachers of his age that I have ever heard. Much good has been done."

Rev. W. D. Wendel in a personal note to the editor states that extensive improvements are being made on the parsonage at Hernando, Miss. He also kindly invites us to the Sardis District Conference which is to be held in his church May 10-14, and offers to provide for our entertainment in the hospitable home of our long-time friend, Dr. W. S. Weisinger. As a tempter Brother Wendel is a pronounced success.

Rev. H. F. Tolle, of the Lake charge, Mississippi Conference, was a caller at the Advocate office on March 1. He reports progress on his work. An addition is being made to the church at Lake to accommodate the growing Sunday school. At Concord, where a society was recently organized, a church is being built, and the church at Lawrence is being repainted. The Lake Camp Meeting promises to be a great occasion this year.

The following brethren have recently sent us lists of subscribers, for which they have our sincere thanks: R. Bradley, Rocky Springs, Miss.; A. F. Moore, Arkabutla, Miss.; J. T. McCafferty, Leland, Miss.; W. J. Porter, Lanesville, La.; J. C. McElroy, Slate Springs, Miss.; J. M. Massey, Oak Ridge, Miss.; R. H. Bamberg, Vernon, La.; M. L. Ward, Dumas, Miss.; A. L. Davenport, Houlika, Miss.; W. L. Broome, University, Miss.; T. E. Gregory, North Carrollton, Miss.; R. H. B. Gladney, Macon, Miss.

Through the kindness of Mississippi's foremost Methodist layman, Major R. W. Millsaps, the editor has been favored with a ticket to the luncheon to be given in honor of Mr. Roosevelt in Jackson next Saturday, and, Providence permitting, he expects to attend. He has long entertained great admiration for this distinguished scholar and statesman, who is the first citizen of the nation, and counts it a great privilege to have this opportunity of being present at the reception given him at the Mississippi capital.

Referring to the Advocate, Mrs. L. B. Freeman, of Buntyn, Tennessee, the widow of the late Rev. R. N. Freeman and a daughter of Rev. W. P. Barton of blessed memory, says: "I read it and lend it, and send marked copies to distant friends. No Methodist home can afford to be without it." For these kind words from the Volunteer State, we are profoundly grateful. Our only purpose in our present laborious work is to make a paper that for righteousness and for Methodism, and which will carry a blessing wherever it goes.

That "noblest Roman of them all," the Rev. D. L. Cogdell, wrote a few days since for a list of our subscribers at Belzoni, Miss., and added: "We are delighted with our new home and people. Mrs. Cogdell has never been better pleased at any time. A warm welcome has been given us, and we are still the recipients of many kindnesses. The salary has been increased, and our congregations are fine—some had to go away for the want of room at a recent night service. We will have our meeting the last of April, and Rev. O. L. Savage will be with us."

We thank Mrs. W. W. Scales, Jr., of Starkville, Miss., the accomplished president of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the North Mississippi Conference, for an invitation to the annual meeting of that organization which is to be held at Iuka on May 20-24. We should be happy indeed to be present, but there is a stretch of many miles between New Orleans and the little city of healing waters where our sisters will this year gather, and the editor has calls and duties not a few. We trust that their conference will be overshadowed by the Holy Spirit, and make for the progress of the kingdom.

Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Shaw, Miss., forwarded us a few days since a list of 12 subscribers from that live Delta town. Among those renewing is Brother Morgan, the genial and fraternal pastor of the Baptist Church, who is loved wherever he is known both for his own sterling qualities and his work's sake. Brother McKeown also calls our attention to the fact that Brother G. W. Faison, one of the most superior laymen in the Greenville District, is sending the Advocate to his sons who are away at school. This is Methodism of the genuine stripe. If we had more of it, it would be better for the Church and the world. It is needless to say that the Shaw charge continues to prosper. McKeown's leadership is a guaranty of that.

Rev. J. D. McWhorter, of the Inverness charge desires us to state that his address is Isola, Miss., instead of Inverness as it appears in the Conference Minutes. He has just moved into the new parsonage at the former place.

Thousands are dying of starvation in China. It is said that one cent will keep a person alive for a day in that country. Let our pastors and Sunday school superintendents bring the crying need of these sufferers to the attention of their people and give them an opportunity to make an offering for their relief. Remittance may be made to Major R. W. Millsaps, Jackson, Miss., or Mr. J. R. Bingham, Carrollton, Miss., who have been designated to act for the Red Cross Society in Mississippi. We are not informed as to who represents this organization in Louisiana, but the Advocate will see that any money forwarded to it for this cause is properly applied.

Rev. E. C. Sullivan has lately been doing some fine campaigning for the Advocate on the Ebenezer charge in the Durant District, and he thinks his work has a good prospect of going on the "Honor Roll" soon. It is needless to say that we appreciate his efforts in behalf of the Conference organ. Brother Sullivan serves a good people. No county in Mississippi has a finer citizenship than Holmes, and there is no choicer community in it than that of Ebenezer. Some of the first preaching we ever tried to do was in our church there, and we can testify to the patience and kindness of the people.

A SUGGESTIVE PROGRAM FOR OUR FORWARD MOVEMENT MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN.

By the action of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions with the concurrence of the presiding elders, this campaign is to be carried on in every charge of the Conference during the entire month of March.

(1) Let the campaign begin at once and be completed in four weeks.

(2) Let the pastor carefully select for his missionary committee as many of his most consecrated, efficient laymen as are needed.

(3) Let this committee meet with the pastor one evening in each week for prayer and instruction. Let them read together, and discuss "The Decisive Hour" by Mott (50 cents, Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas.)

(4) Let all the women of the church meet on Monday afternoon of each week for prayer and the study of "Korea in Transition" (50 cents, Smith & Lamar.)

(5) Let each Sunday school adopt our "Missionary Policy in the Sunday School." (Write Dr. E. H. Rawlings, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.)

(6) Let the pastor's sermons and prayer meeting addresses during the four weeks all be of a missionary character, instructing, leading to deeper consecration, inspiring to greater zeal and liberality.

(7) During the last two weeks let the missionary committee make an every member canvass for a liberal contribution from every member for missions. Let this include all the benevolences if thought best, but let the goal in every instance be ALL ASSESSMENTS IN FULL, AND AN EXCESS FOR MISSIONS.

(8) Let us all pray earnestly for a revival of the true spirit of missions: to begin in our own hearts, to permeate our entire conference, to so awaken all of Christendom as to make its influence felt to the remotest regions of earth.

Your fellow-servant in our Lord's great harvest-field,
WM. H. COLEMAN,
Chairman of the Board.

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

Our "Honor Roll" continues to grow. Four charges are added this week—Lula and Lyon, Iuka, Utica, and Glen Allan. The list now stands as follows:

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over two hundred words in length will be published free of charge. All over two hundred words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around.

WARREN THOMAS WINDHAM was born August 4, 1839, in Sumpter County, Ala., and died February 24, 1911, at his home near Moselle, Miss. Brother Windham was brought to Mississippi when quite a child. He married Miss Emily Jane Ingram, August 4, 1858, who survives him. He served through the Civil war. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church at the close of the war. He had been a steward for the last twenty-five years, and a more faithful one never lived. The Church will miss him. He was always at his place, never grumbling, striving to do more. He was deeply religious. He never tired of talking of the good things of God. He was his pastor's friend and counsellor, loyal to the Church and all her institutions. He will be missed as a citizen. We all loved him. Simple, true as steel, strong, unyielding with sin, he fell asleep and has found the Christ he loved and worshipped. His pastor, J. C. CHAMBERS, Ellisville, Miss.

The subject of this sketch, SISTER WINNA McCOY, was born in Prentiss County, November, 1891; was married to Brother Charles McCoy, January 23, 1910; died February 10, 1911. Just fifteen days before her death she was moved to the home of her widowed mother, Sister Rebecca Blyth, where the loving hands of mother and two sisters did all that could be done, but alas! the summons came and she had to answer. A voice we loved so much is stilled; a place in the home is vacant that never can be filled, and our hearts are sad; but we believe that he in whom we believe doeth all things well. Her sad regret was that she could not live to join the Church, but her faith was pure and trusting, looking for the unseen hand to prepare the way. Well might she say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." May God comfort the sorrowing ones, is our sincere prayer. T. G. ADAIR.

MRS. MARY ELIZABETH WAIN-WRIGHT passed to her reward Feb. 8, 1911. She had been a resident of New Orleans for forty-two years. About twenty-five years ago, at a revival conducted by the then evangelist, Mr. Sam Small, she was converted and united with the Church. Her membership was afterwards transferred to Carondelet Street Church and there continued until the end of her life. For years she had been an invalid, suffering at times the most intense agony. All during her sickness she evinced the spirit of a child of God. When physically unable to give attention to the care of the household, she devoted the little strength she had to prayer, song and reading of Scriptures. She contemplated the close of her mortal life with calm resignation. No fear nor misgiving disturbed her mind. Sometimes she did not know whether she was in or out of the body. She declared that angels stood around her bed, and she rejoiced in God. She was possessed of a kind, benignant nature. Her neighbors loved and honored her. She leaves behind her devoted husband, who greatly mourns her departure. S. H. WERLEIN.

Resolutions of respect adopted by the Eureka Quarterly Conference in memory of Brother J. W. Jones. Whereas, an all-wise Providence saw fit to call from labor to reward our brother, J. W. JONES, on Dec. 20, 1910, therefore be it resolved, by the members of the Eureka Quarterly Conference, in quarterly conference assembled, first, that the community has lost an honored and valuable citizen, the family a kind and affectionate father and husband and the Church a devoted and consecrated member, efficient superintendent and faithful steward; second, that we bow in meek submission to the will of the Father and mingle our tears with those of the stricken family; and pray God's richest blessings upon them; third, that a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the quarterly conference, a copy furnished the bereaved family and a copy forwarded to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication. Signed: C. Wesley Baley, P. C.; S. T. Herod, R. T. Keys, H. W. Kimbrel, W. R. Wilson.

A beautiful little bud has been plucked from the garden of this world and transplanted in the paradise of our Lord to bloom in the bright beyond. Little FLORA LOUISE DAVIS, infant daughter of Mr. Charlie M. and Ruby Davis, was born May 2, 1910, and died Feb. 20, 1911. Her stay with father and mother in this world was of short duration; but, alas! how soon are the fond hopes of loving parents blighted by the cold, chilly hand of death! Her short little life was by no means devoid of good. She left the impress of her sweet little life on the fond hearts of her parents and grandfathers; they will never forget those tender little cheeks and sweet little smiles. No, never! Her two grandmothers preceded her to the better clime and she is now with them in the better land, shining in the presence of the king. It is hard indeed to part with those whom we love, but God's will, and not ours, be done. Our sympathies are with the parents, for while they cannot call their little darling baby back, they can go where she is; weep not, for she is at rest. The funeral services were conducted at the Hopewell Church by the writer on February 21 at 11 o'clock a. m., where a large concourse of people were gathered together to pay tribute to the memory of this sweet babe, after which the form of little Flora was laid to rest in the old home cemetery, to await the resurrection morning. The child's friend, HILARY WESTBROOK, DeSoto, Miss.

JAMES McGEHEE was born in Hancock County, Miss., April 16, 1831, and grew to manhood and married Miss Eliza Stewart in the year 1856. To them were born twelve children. Sister McGeehee and one child preceded him to the other side. Mr. McGeehee was a good citizen and a faithful husband and father. For some reason he never joined the Church, yet he was a church-goer. He will be greatly missed in his community. He leaves eleven children, fifty-four grandchildren and thirty-three great-grandchildren. May God comfort his loved ones and friends! May they look beyond the cloud of grief and by faith see the smiling face of him who is our all in all! P. H. HOWSE, Ex-Pastor.

Tidings from the Field

Eureka Circuit, Sardis District:

I suppose a short report from Eureka circuit will be of interest to some. We are doing very well so far. We have been hindered somewhat in our work by sickness in our family. I hope that I will be able to move right along with my work from now on. I have only six appointments and eight Sunday schools. Most of these schools have gone into winter quarters, but will soon be in full blast. I am planning and praying for a revival at every church on our work. Our first quarterly conference was held on February 23, and the churches all made good reports. Rev. W. M. Young, our efficient presiding elder, was on hand and preached a most excellent sermon, to the profit of those present.

C. WESLEY BAILEY, P. C.

Coldwater, Miss.:

I send you my card report. We have met with or visited nearly all our people on the work. Everything is moving on hopefully. Our Sunday school is trying to put on new life; our prayer meetings are good. Both missionary societies are prospering and our Epworth League is growing in interest and numbers. Our people work quite harmoniously in all the departments of church service. Our official board is made up of liberal minded men. They have provided liberally for their pastor and provided for all our conference assessments, notwithstanding the raise in so many of these claims. We are working, hoping and praying for a great year on the Coldwater charge. Come to see us and your old friends.

D. W. BABB, P. C.

DeSoto, Miss.:

On February 25 the Rev. W. H. Lewis, our presiding elder, came to our place and we had our first quarterly conference here on Saturday at 2 p. m. DeSoto, Salem, Mannassas and Cooper's Chapel were represented at this quarterly conference and made very good reports. Brother Lewis remained over Sunday and preached three able sermons while he was with us. They were appreciated by all who heard him. The Woman's Home Mission Society met on February 27 and planned to purchase a new stove for the new parsonage, and also to have a pump put down to give us water conveniently. Bro. R. R. Hodges and others are making an effort to complete the parsonage. The work is moving along smoothly on all lines. I expect to send in a list of subscribers in a few days to The Advocate. I'm still praising God for victory.

HILARY WESTBROOK,
Pastor.

Wilson, La.:

We have just closed a great meeting at Wilson. I had with me Bro. D. E. Kelley, of Purvis, Miss., and his brother, John, of Gloster, who with his cornet led the choir in the singing. We had good preaching, good singing, and notwithstanding the cold weather, we had a fine attendance from beginning to the end. The merchants closed their stores so as to give all a chance to be present. We had fifteen accessions to the Church, making twenty-five since I came, and more will follow as a result of this meeting. There were twelve family altars erected, a men's prayer meeting organized, nine new subscribers to The Advocate secured and our Sunday school will increase 50 per cent. The church membership has been greatly revived and in fact the whole town stirred as never before. The Lord is wonderfully blessing us in our work here and we are happy in his service. Pray for us.

F. N. SWEENEY, P. C.
February 27, 1911.

Okolona Circuit, North Miss.:

We are beginning our third year's work on this charge in fairly good shape. Our first quarterly conference was held early in the year. It goes without saying that it was a success. Its convening with Union Church, the membership of which know how to entertain on such occasions, together with the helpful sermon preached by our beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Felts, who for the third year is in charge of this district, made it an occasion long to be remembered. With so wise a leader we predict for the district the best year of the three. We are endeavoring to make our part of it so, anyway. Last Sunday, February 26, was a red-letter day with us on the circuit in Sunday school work. Brother Fred J. McDonald, Jr., our very efficient secretary of the Chickasaw County Sunday School Convention, went out with us, and after preaching by the pastor, made very interesting and helpful Sunday school talks and assisted in organizing a school at New Hope in the morning and one at Union in the afternoon. With such men superintendents as Brother Sidney Birmingham of New Hope and Brother George H. Phelps at Union, we expect these schools to live and prosper. We are planning to organize Sunday schools at the other churches soon. The Okolona circuit is only half its original size, being now composed of Egypt Church and with three west of the M. & O. Railroad. We are few in numbers—a little more than 100—but plucky and determined. The division of the charge was affected at the last annual conference, after a very unsatisfactory experiment last year, in which the West Side suffered much. But we are planning, hoping and praying for great things this year.

MILLARD A. BURNS, P. C.

WHAT FOLKSONGS ARE.

One of the finest pleasures in the world is derived from singing. Even savages make an effort to sing by uttering weird notes as they beat on queer drums and dance around their war fires. In ancient times, before there were any pianos, people sang sometimes to the clapping of their hands, and often to the accompaniment of crude instruments which looked like old-fashioned guitars, violins, or harps. Their songs told of battles, love, harvest-time, hunting and other events in their lives. Before men knew how to write and print music, songs were preserved by being treasured in the memory of the people. Every country had its own peculiar songs which were passed down from father to son, sometimes through hundreds of years. In more modern times, interested people have from time to time printed collections of these songs of the different nations, and nowadays there are many enthusiastic collectors who are printing these songs so that we may all know them. This kind of music is called folk-songs. These include the songs which the "folk," or people, sing and treasure in their heart and memory.—From Mabel Lyon Sturgis's "Folk Songs for Boys and Girls" in March St. Nicholas.

To pray together, in whatever tongue or ritual, is the most tender brotherhood of hope and sympathy that men can contract in life.—Madame de Stael.

Georgia Marble from a Scientific Point of View.

Some of the scientific tests and experiments recently made on Georgia Marble, reveals what is probably the most wonderful stone the world has ever produced, certainly since the ancient ages of the now famous Parian marble. In the purity test, Mr. Jno. C. Jackson, Assayer and Chemist, of Chicago, reports the following analysis:

Carbonate of Lime	97.32	per cent
Carbonate of Magnesia	1.60	" "
Silica	.62	" "
Iron Protoxide	.26	" "
Aluminum Oxide	.25	" "

100.05 per cent
From this it will clearly be seen that Georgia Marble is the nearest to purity in its chemical properties of any of the marbles in use for general purposes, being composed of 97.32 per cent carbonate of lime.

A test of the crushing strength of Georgia Marble was made by Mr. J. B. Johnson, Prof. of Civil Engineering and Director of Testing Laboratory of the Washington University, and reports: "Six three-inch tubes were tested upon a U. S. Standard Riehle Testing Machine of 100,000 pounds capacity. I was only able to break four of the specimens. The other two stood 120,000 and 109,300 pounds respectively without crushing; which was a much greater load than the machine should be allowed to carry. The lowest test was 76,200 pounds, or 8,330 pounds per square inch, but since two of these specimens remained uncrushed, it is perhaps fair to say that the average crushing strength is not less than 10,500 pounds per square inch. This is equivalent to 750 tons per square foot. The fractures showed a remarkably uniform composition without seams or lines of cleavage."

Mr. Johnson, in his absorption test of Georgia Marble, states further: "A three-inch cube was soaked in water twenty-four hours and then weighed, it was then dried over a steam coil at a temperature of about 215 degrees Fah. for twenty-four hours and weighed again, and as shown by the accompanying certificate, the absorption is but six one-hundredths of one per cent. This is by far the smallest absorption I ever knew any building stone to have." The heat-resisting qualities of Georgia Marble under the most severe test shows that it will withstand heat to upward of 1,000 degrees Fah.

These various scientific tests show the quality of Georgia Marble and establishes beyond question the fact that it is without equal as a building or monumental material. Its beauty is as its strength—without an equal in the whole world. The Cherokee grade is a beautiful silver grey; Creole, a mottled black and white; Kennesaw almost pure white and Etowah an exquisite pink in varying shades. For that monument or building you are contemplating, (exterior or interior) specify one of these grades of Georgia Marble, and if your dealer can't supply you, drop a card to the Georgia Marble Company, Tate, Ga., and they will put you in touch with a nearby dealer who can.

Quick Relief From Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

The Epworth League.

Deep strike thy roots, O Heavenly Vine;

Within our earthly sod! Most human and yet most Divine—The flower of Man and God.

Apart from thee all gain is lost, All labor vainly done; The solemn shadow of thy cross Is better than the sun.

Our friend, our Brother, and our Lord,

What may thy service be? Nor name, nor form, nor ritual word, But simply following thee.

—Whittier.

Topic for March 12. The Equipment (Eph. vi, 14-17; II Cor. x, 3-5.) Hymns 428, 494, 506.

1. The Might of Our Weapons.—"The weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh, but mighty before God to the casting down of strongholds." It is a glorious equipment which the Lord provides. We may go forth to spiritual conflict with the full expectation of triumph over our foes, because God has given us weapons to fight with which they cannot resist. Even the feeblest may use them with such power that the enemy must flee. With modern rifles even a company of boys could stand off a horde of savage foes armed with bows and spears. So the devil must flee when we resist him, because he has nothing with which to meet our spiritual weapons. The main question always is as to whether we are in fighting mood.

2. The Armor of God.—What Paul has to say in description of the Christian's armor is worthy of much meditation. There are lessons here that we do well to heed. Truth, righteousness, the gospel of peace, faith, salvation and the Word of God are what he mentions as constituting our armor. These all have to do with character. We cannot secure our safety by that which is merely outward. That which brings truth and righteousness and peace brings also security. But these come to us from within. They are not generated within. This armor is not of our own making. It comes from God; for all the truth and salvation that give us safety reach us through the grace of God.

3. Completely Armed.—It is the whole armor of God that we are urged to put on. Emphasis must be placed upon the thought of completeness. We ought to seek after a complete Christian character, because only in such completeness do we find a safeguard for that which we have already acquired. A half-finished building is useless. We should be fully armed and leave no defenseless spot, or else that will be the place where the enemy will make his attack. When a man is thrust through the heart it is no help to him that he has a helmet on his head. This is your only safety, that you guard every point. You should strengthen not only that which is already strong, but that which you know to be weak. It is at the weak point in his battle line that the wise general masses his troops. If there is any weak place in our defenses we may be sure that it has not escaped the watchful eye of our foe. He will surely attack us there, and there we should meet him with the weapons that God has provided for us.—New York Christian Advocate.

Rev. J. B. Fulton, of Greensburg, La., states that the League at that place is wide awake and helpful.

Rev. J. H. Ingram reports the organization of a League at Glen Allan, Miss. It will be live and flourishing with this energetic pastor to give it encouragement.

The Sunday schools of Texas will take up a collection for Epworth-by-the-Sea on Sunday, March 12. Money is needed to cover the expense recently incurred in improving this splendid property.

Rev. A. S. Lutz, of Homer, has an active Senior League and a Boys' League with a Scouts attachment. He thinks the Scout feature is a good one and will prove to be a source of strength to the League work in the future.

The Oklahoma Leaguers have secured a tract of ground of forty odd acres adjoining the town of Sulphur which they are dividing into lots of 25x125 feet, to be sold at $100 each for the first one hundred, with advance on others. The citizens of Sulphur have contributed $2,500 in cash toward the enterprise, and committees are now working out plans for the needed buildings and improvements. James E. Savage, in writing of the movement in a recent issue of the Western Methodist, says: "It is expected to make this not only a League Assembly, but a great Methodist Assembly for the State, where every phase of church work will be represented.—Texas Advocate.

TEXAS AVENUE LEAGUE, SHREVEPORT.

Brother J. C. Rousseaux began his work here among the young people of his church at Texas Avenue by interesting them in reorganizing their chapter of the Epworth League, which had been asleep about a year. They at once assured him of co-operation and planned a program which was well rendered at the evening preaching hour, the pastor being on the programme only for a "Practical Short Talk," which was on the Epworth League, and the benediction. They reorganized with twenty-five members. There has been an increase of attendance and interest each meeting. The officers are as follows: President, Mr. S. P. Peters; First Vice-President, Mrs. J. C. Rousseaux; Second Vice-President, Mrs. A. Y. Renfro; Third Vice-President, Mr. Emmette Shaw; Fourth Vice-President, Mr. T. L. Blaylock; Secretary, Mr. Thad Mitchell; Treasurer, Miss Alvernon Marshall.

SADIE J. LINGLE, Louisiana State Secretary.

A Tribute.

"Whenever any one asks me what the Epworth League has done, I say that the Epworth League has made good."—Bishop Mouzon.

Thomas Jonathan Jackson Christian, a grandson of General "Stonewall" Jackson, is now a cadet at West Point, and will be graduated in June. There is also at West Point a Robert Edward Lee, the first of that name since General Robert E. Lee was there.—St. Louis Advocate.

Physician Said Appendicitis

Gall Stones Expelled by the Great Kidney Preparation.

I thought I would do you a favor and let you know what Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root has done so far for me.

About one year ago I was taken sick with a terrible pain in my right side. My family physician pronounced it appendicitis. About two weeks ago I received your Almanac and read in it about weak kidneys, and my back hurting me so much, I thought I would try your Swamp-Root and to my great astonishment, after using one bottle, I expelled three gall stones, which weighed 135 grains—just think of it. My kidneys are not well yet, and so I have concluded to continue with Swamp-Root. Mr. Schwake, the druggist, thought that it never was appendicitis and that the doctor had made a mistake. It was no doubt, gall stones that caused the trouble, or they would not have come away so soon after commencing with Swamp-Root.

I shall always praise Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root to all those who suffer from kidney, liver and bladder troubles and am very thankful that I ever discovered such a worthy remedy. I feel confident that it will cure me entirely of all kidney and liver trouble.

MRS. MARY J. SCHNITTGER, 1502 15th St. and 5th Ave., Nebraska City, Neb.

Personally appeared before me this 31st day of August, 1909, Mrs. Mary J. Schnittger, who subscribed the above statement and made oath that the same is true in substance and in fact.

A. P. YOUNG, County Clerk, LOUIS STUTT, Deputy.

Letter to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Prove What Swamp-Root Will Do For You.

Obituaries.

MISS MARY GERTRUDE MANNING, daughter of Brother and Sister Manning, was born March 16, 1893, and died Feb. 19, 1911. She professed faith in Christ in August, 1907, and joined the Methodist Church, South, of which she lived a faithful member. She leaves a father and mother, three sisters and two brothers to mourn her. Their loss is her eternal gain. She called her friends around her bed and told them good-bye, and asked them to meet her in heaven. She sang a song and at last fell asleep in Jesus. We hope to meet her some sweet day in the haven of rest. God bless the broken-hearted family!

R. C. KENNED, P. C.

ANDREW WARD SKELTON was born in May, 1830, in Newton County, Ga., and died Feb. 13, 1911, at his home four miles north of Kosciusko, Miss. In 1866 he was married to Mrs. Lucy Bell. Of this union there were born three children, all of whom, with his aged wife, are left to mourn his departure. We were not permitted to be with Brother Skelton during his last illness, but are told that he bore his sufferings with a Christian fortitude and even after he became speechless he would look upward and smile, as if to say "All is well with my soul." His remains were laid to rest in the Marvin cemetery to await the call of his Master, whom he had served for thirty years, being a member of the M. E. C. S. at Marvin Chapel. A good man and citizen has gone; God has gathered a well-ripened soul into the garner of his eternal kingdom. We extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved ones; may they be able to see God's righteous and eternal will being done and see the face of Jesus even through their tears!

O. P. ARMOUR,
Pastor Kosciusko Circuit.

JOHN WELLS RUTLAND was born June 3, 1830, near Huntsville, Ala. He moved to Shelby County, Tenn., in 1840 and was married to Miss Sallie Elin, of Olive Branch, Miss. He next moved to Eudora, DeSoto County, Miss., where the two children, Eugene and Stephen, were born. The devoted wife died and was laid to rest. Brother Rutland was married the second time to Miss Minnie Brooks of Smith County, Tenn., and moved to the Plum Point neighborhood in DeSoto County, Miss., in 1872. In addition to the two sons mentioned above, three sons, Charley, Jay Brooks of Memphis, Tenn., and Ed. Wells, and the widow, who live on the old home place, survive our departed friend and brother. Brother Rutland was in many respects a wonderful man. His long pilgrimage of nearly eighty-one years has covered a period of time remarkable for its achievements, not only with reference to our own country, but with reference to the entire world. During his entire life John Rutland was intensely interested in the material and spiritual prosperity of his Church. He joined the M. E. Church, South, at Bradley's Chapel in Shelby County, Tenn., at the tender age of 12 years, under the faithful old preacher and pastor, Brother Muller. He was a steward in the Methodist Church from 19 years of age till a few years previous to his death. He was relieved of that because of his growing feebleness. He was a trustee of the Horn Lake M. E. Church, South, for forty-five years. Brother Rutland was always a friend of his and a Mason of the highest grade. He was a Confederate soldier under Forrest—true to his country, his Church and his God. May God richly bless the widow, the children and the grandchildren, and all the dear ones, is the earnest prayer of their pastor, W. D. WENDEL.

MRS. MARY L. ANDERSON, the subject of this sketch, was born in Bienville Parish, La., March 27, 1849, where she continuously resided until her death, Dec. 11, 1910, in the town of Alberta, and was buried by Rev. Thos. Martin of Ringgold, La., in the Ebenezer Cemetery. She was happily married to J. T. Anderson on Aug. 19, 1875, and was the mother of eight children, five of whom, with her husband, survive her. In early life Slater Anderson was converted and joined the M. E. C. S. and lived in it until after her marriage with Bro. Anderson, who was a Baptist. She then united with the Baptist Church, in which she lived a faithful Christian life for many years and until the early part of 1910, when she again united with the M. E. Church, South. Sister Anderson was a beautifully consistent example and pattern of "holiness without which no man shall see the Lord." She went home to a rich reward after a prolonged sickness and great suffering for many months. She never was able to attend church but once or twice after coming back to us. In the death of Sister Anderson the Church has lost a loyal, consecrated member; the husband, a faithful wife, the children a good mother and the community, a faithful, kind friend and good neighbor. Our loss is her eternal gain. May her loved ones follow her as she followed her Master and Lord, and meet her in the Father's house on high! Her pastor,

JOHN G. SLOANE.

FROM BROTHER LEWIS.

(The following personal note to the editor is printed, though not written for publication, because we feel that it will interest many of our readers. We trust that Brother Lewis will pardon us for taking this liberty).

Dear Bro. Meek:

Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindly reference to me in last week's issue of The Advocate. I am not worthy of such words of praise. The ushers tell me that the congregations are increasing at First Church every Sunday. In fact, almost every available space is filled at the morning hour. I have made 700 pastoral visits and received 69 members thus far, eight of them on profession of faith; 741 were present at Sunday school a recent Sunday. I need the prayers of the brethren. A great responsibility rests upon me. We now have 1,590 members. I wish you would come to see us.

Most cordially,

T. W. LEWIS.

EASTER BELLS.

How many of our subscribers are wishing, perhaps planning, to make the coming Easter Sunday a double celebration, combining a Bell dedication with a jubilation "He Is Risen?" Church bells are surely a part of Christianity; what church pastor, trustee or worker but considers a bell as indispensable as the hymn book or any other accessory. The bell is Christianity's invitation—the call of the Church to worship, and we would suggest to those of our friends who are wishing or planning a bell purchase, that before they make such a move they ask for the special plan of sale offered by the C. S. Bell Company of Hillsboro, Ohio, who for 53 years have manufactured the highest grade of steel alloy church and school bells.

The Sunday School.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

An adult Bible class uses this motto for 1911:

Just as I am, young, strong and free,
To be the best that I can be,
For truth, righteousness and love,
Lord of my life, I come.

A book from the heart of a Methodist parsonage, full of help for 2d dresses and Sunday school talks is called "Wireless Messages," by C. N. Broadhurst (Berrell, $1 net). The book is really on "Prayer," but is most helpful along many other lines.

Teachers would do well to write to the World's Sunday School Publishing Co., Detroit, Mich., and other houses, for leaflets on such subjects as: "How to Prepare a Lesson," "Holding the Boys and Girls," "A Word at the Start," "Sunday School Teachers' Don'ts," "Little Things for Sunday School Teachers." These can be procured for from one to five cents. Have one read at teachers' meeting or distribute them among the teachers for home study or prayerful consideration and assimilation.

This beautiful morning resolve, right from the heart of Bishop John H. Vincent, is a fine beginning to any day: "I will try this day to live a simple, sincere, patient life, repelling every thought of discontent, self-seeking and anxiety; cultivating magnanimity, self-control and the habit of silence; practicing economy, cheerfulness and helpfulness. And as I cannot in my own strength do this or even with a hope of success attempt it, I look to thee, O Lord Jesus Christ, my Savior, and ask for the gift of thy Holy Spirit."

An editorial in the Sunday School Times says: "No one is very long interested in anything to which he does not give himself in costly fullness. It is not the old phrase, 'He lost interest and turned away,' but 'He turned away and lost interest.' Interest is a return on an investment; we cannot withdraw our investment and expect the interest to continue. The only cure is to re-invest." In this busy, commercial age, when every investment is made to pay its highest per cent, when waste even is reborn into new materials and products, surely we cannot afford to lose that highest and best interest on the investment of spiritual power, good deeds and honest teaching.

College men are doing a great work in the Sunday school. In Oxford, Miss, three of the fellows go out every Sabbath afternoon to a country home close by and in the room of the house they hold the service. One acts as superintendent, one teaches the infant and next larger class, and one takes the intermediates. They carry a corner and lead the singing, and how their warm, clear voices ring out full of joy and inspiration! These fellows are healthy, fun-loving and merry-hearted, but have, best of all, in their hearts the great throbbing desire to help somebody. And they did not wait for the somebody to be found and brought to them, but went out and sought the opportunity.

The teacher of the small class, or a class in a village or country Sunday school, sometimes hesitates to attempt class organization, because he fears he cannot find among his members a sufficient number with the experience and the initiative to make efficient class officers. As a matter of fact, there could hardly be a stronger argument in favor of class organization. Nothing will more readily develop members into earnest, ready workers than the systematic carrying out of plans in which they have a definite, responsible part. Much may be done, too, in overcoming a lack of training and of interest, by carefully planning the preliminary steps of the organization. Have an installation service, no matter how elaborate or simple. Dr. Hamill has prepared such a service, which is well worthy of trial. Have a cabinet meeting regularly—the greatest corporation or the smallest business could not run smoothly without thus talking over and planning things to be placed before the body of the class in a suitable, brief and attractive way.

The Sunday school at Fellowship, on the Glenmora Charge, has been reorganized, with Mr. A. Hinson, a public-spirited Methodist, as superintendent. As a member of the School Board from his ward, he has done good service for the younger generation in promoting educational interests, and he takes hold of the Sunday school in the same spirit, buying a copy of Lawrence's "How to Conduct a Sunday School" the first thing. The day of reorganization he secured as co-workers Miss Della Boham for the home department, Mr. Musgrove, teacher for the young men's Baracca class, Mrs. McArthur, superintendent of the cradle roll, and Mr. A. N. McArthur, secretary.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER.

The following are some of the things a Sunday school teacher must do if he would attain to a high degree of efficiency.

1. He must prepare the lesson carefully. This means that he must have wisely selected lesson helps.

2. He must save the life and guidance of the Holy Spirit in teaching his class. This means that he must make use of prayer.

3. He must be punctual and regular in attendance. If he is not, his example is better to have a bad effect upon the pupils.

4. He should show himself in earnest in teaching the lesson, keeping in mind the fact that to help the members of the class spiritually should be his chief aim.

5. If any in the class are unmoved he should be burdened for them and tactfully try to win them to Christ. Only a soul-winner measures up to the standard as a Sunday school teacher.

6. He should be interested in the members of the class throughout the week as well as on the Sabbath. He should cultivate their acquaintance and show that he keeps them in remembrance. If one of them becomes ill, he should visit him, and in other ways show his sympathy and concern.

7. He should walk every day as a disciple of Christ. Only a consistent piety has the saving quality. Paul's direction to Timothy, the young minister, applies with equal force to the Sunday school teacher: "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt save both thyself, and them that hear thee."

Evidence Produced.

The world is so skeptical nowadays, that when one makes a statement, he is immediately asked for evidence. Here is ours. Dr. Jno. R. Phelps, Dorchester, Mass., writes: "Send me a new supply of Gray's Ointment. I have the courage of my convictions, and am not ashamed to say that I use it in my practice." But better evidence still that "Gray's Ointment" will cure cuts, bruises, boils, burns, sores, poison oak, blood poison, ulcers and skin eruptions of every kind is the actual test, so send your name and address to Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 894 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn., and they will send you a free sample that you may be your own judge as to the efficacy of "Gray's Ointment," or it can be supplied by any druggist at 25c per box.

A CORRECTION.

Household Economy

How to Have the Best Cough Syrup and Save $2. by Making It at Home.

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. If you take one pint of granulated sugar, add 1/2 pint of warm water, and stir about 5 minutes, you have as good syrup as money could buy.

If you will then put 1/2 ounces of Pinex (fifty cents worth) in a pint bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup, you will have as much cough syrup as you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly.

And you will find it the best cough syrup you ever used—even in whooping cough. You can feel it take hold—usually stops the most severe cough in 24 hours. It is just laxative enough, has a good tonic effect and taste is pleasant. Take a teaspoonful every one, two, or three hours.

It is a splendid remedy, too, for hoarseness, asthma, chest pains, etc.

Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaicol and all the healing pine elements. No other preparation will work in this formula.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar Syrup is used and prized in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has often been imitated but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., 236 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

RAISING UP A GENERATION OF NON-CHURCH-GOERS.

By D. B. F. Randolph, D.D.

One of the "live" topics of the day is, "Why the Men Do not Attend Church." A liver topic, so to speak, would he, why the people, men and women, don't attend church. We have small congregations; great masses of the people do not attend at all; many only attend now and then, or on special occasions; and we have many honorary members who only pay us a visit once in a while, taking no interest whatever in the maintenance of the public worship of God, or in the proclamation of the gospel for the salvation of the world. Why is it?

A variety of answers might be given to this more important inquiry, but no one ever seems to give the great reason, next to the indifference of sin; namely, that we have been for some time, and are now engaged in raising up a generation of non-church-goers. The present generation is not being brought up to attend church. To put it positively, the Protestant Churches are generating non-church-goers like so many incubators on a chicken farm.

The children and youth are being brought up to attend Sunday school; there are few persons in the community who have not attended Sunday school regularly at some time and for years together; but they are being brought up not to attend church at all. While it is true that most of our converts and members are secured through the Sunday school, it is also true that the great mass of our Sunday school children, under sixteen years of age, converted and unconverted, do not appear but incidentally, or accidentally, in our public services.

We have only to look over our Sunday morning congregations to find, in most places, that the children are very conspicuous by their absence. We have seen quite a substantial congregation on a clear and delightful Sunday morning, and in it only one, single, solitary, isolated and scared looking child. We have seen a Christmas Sunday morning congregation, with an elaborate and entertaining musical program, when the subject and its treatment could not fail to interest the children, when, indeed, all the children should have been there, and when it looked as if the children were not expected to worship God in his temple.

In most places neither the church, nor the Sunday school, nor the home seems to have any influence with the children in the matter of church attendance; nor do they appear to desire any. The home does not encourage the attendance of the children, for various reasons: it is not convenient; they are restless and annoying; the day school, with its unnecessary and merely ornamental branches, demands all the energy our boys and girls possess; while the Sunday school, one hour in the week, is offered and accepted as the all-sufficient substitute for the public worship of God, and, too often, for all other religious education. And what are the children doing on Sunday morning, the brightest and best of all the hours of the Heavenly Father's day, while their parents, perhaps, are engaged in sacred worship? While some are preparing their Sunday school lessons, are not many of them engaged with the highly colored and vulgar pictures of oversmart children displayed in the Sunday newspapers, so highly educational? and would it not be fair to say that most of them are simply killing time like multitudes of intelligent and prosperous grown-ups, who were raised in the same manner and acquired the habit early?

If the people never acquire the church-going habit in their childhood and youth, how can we expect them to attend church habitually when they come to manhood and womanhood? Where did the children get their religious education before Sunday schools were started?

Are we not here facing one of the greatest weaknesses of the twentieth-century Protestantism? The Roman Catholics are making no such mistake; observe the congregations coming out of their churches from nine o'clock mass. Why was the present Pope hailed by a company of church dignitaries recently, at Seton Hall College, as the greatest representative of the "Eucharistic God," simply because he had lowered the age at which the children should attend the celebration of the Mass to seven years?

Will anything ever compensate us for the loss to our children of that most profoundly impressive of all religious lessons, the reverence and worshipfulness of the Sunday morning service; the sight of father and mother and the prominent men and women of the community reverently worshipping God; the hearing of our great hymns, in mighty choruses, expressing the highest religious experience and inspiration; and listening to the devotional exposition of the Scriptures by men trained and set apart for the purpose? This is the "Children's Church," and any meeting of any sort that takes its place is out of place. It will be found that the children can usually repeat as much of the average sermon and tell the text as well as their seniors.

Many of us recall that when we were children we should as soon have expected to go without our Sunday dinner as without the Sunday morning service; and not at all because our parents drove us to the house of God; we have no hard things to say of their earnest endeavors to bring us up good men and women; but it was simply a matter of course that everybody in our house, who was out of bed and able to go out of doors, would go to the public worship of God on Sunday morning, the great service of the day.

Is there anything in the statement of the inspired writer, that when Jesus came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, he entered, as his custom (or habit) was, into the synagogue on the Sabbath day? Does not this indicate that our blessed Lord himself, arrived at the years of manhood, and far beyond his majority, habitually attended church because he had acquired the habit in his childhood? We venture the statement that if this matter were attended to by the church as it should be, we should double our congregations in a decade by our own natural development.—New York Christian Advocate.

FAILURE OF "LIBERAL" THEOLOGY.

That "liberal" theology has made an almost utter failure in Germany is asserted by one of its leading spokesmen in a liberal religious organ. It consists too much of mere negation, he thinks, and has no strong faith in anything. The masses have rejected it, and the educated have accepted it only in small numbers. Practically it is a failure, and he demands a reconstruction along new lines, with new ideals and new methods. This courageous liberal is Rev. Dr. Rittelmeyer of Nuremberg and he writes in the Christliche Welt (Tubingen): Here are the main points of his argument:

Let us ask honestly what results modern theology has attained practically. As far as the great masses of workmen are concerned practically nothing has been gained. They either do not understand it or they distrust it. All the public discussions and popularization of modern critical views have not found any echo or sympathy among the ranks of the laboring people.

And how about the educated classes? It has long since been the boast and hobby of advanced theology that it and it alone will satisfy the religious longings of the educated man who has broken with the traditional dogma and doctrines of orthodox Christianity. But what are the actual facts in the case? It is a fact that there are a considerable number among the educated who thankfully confess that they can accept Christianity only in the form in which it is taught by the advanced theologian. But how exceedingly small this number is! A periodical like the Christliche Welt, the only paper of its kind, has not been able to secure more than five thousand subscribers, although its contributors are the most brilliant in the land of scholars and thinkers; while periodicals that are exponents of the older views are read by tens and even hundreds of thousands. There are whole classes of society among the educated who are antagonistic to liberal tendencies in religion. Among these are the officers in the army and the navy, practitioners of the technical arts and of engineering, and almost to a man the whole world of business. It is foolish to close our eyes to these facts.

What is the matter? asks this writer. What is the weakness of liberal and advanced theological thought? These are some of the answers:

"One trouble is that modern theology has entirely grown out of criticism. Its weakness is intellectualism; it is a negative movement. We can understand the cry of the orthodox, that advanced theology is eliminating one thing after the other from our religious thought, and then asks, What is left? True, we answer, God is left. But is it not the case that the modern God-Father faith is generally a very weak and attenuated faith in a Providence and nothing more? And on this subject too we quarrel among ourselves, whether a God-Father troubles himself about little things only or about great things, too, such as the forgiveness of sins. We do the same thing with Jesus. We speak of him as of a unique personality, as the highest revelation of the Father, and the like, but always connected with a certain skeptical undercurrent of thought; but we do not appreciate him in his deepest soul and in the great motives of his life. He is not for modern theology what he is for orthodoxy, the Savior of the world and the Redeemer of mankind."

Quite naturally this open confession of a pronounced liberal attracts more than ordinary attention. The liberal papers, including the Christliche Welt itself, pass it by without further comment, but the conservatives speak out boldly. Representative of the latter is the Evangelische Lutherische Kirchenzeitung of Leipzig, which says:

"The psychological and spiritual solution of Rittelmeyer's problem is not so hard to find. The soul of man cannot live on negations. To stir the soul there must be positive principles and epoch-making historical facts, such as are offered by the scriptural teachings of Christ and his words. There can be religious life only where there is faith in him who is the truth and the life. Liberal theology has failed because it has nothing to offer."—From the Literary Digest of February 25.

It is a noble and great thing to cover the blemishes and to excuse the failings of a friend; to draw a curtain before his stains, and to display his perfections; to bury his weaknesses in silence, but to proclaim his virtues upon the housetop.—Robert South.

If you are looking for that which is best in the men and women with whom you come in contact; if you are seeking also to give them that which is best in yourself; if you are looking for friendship which shall help you to know yourself as you are and to fulfill yourself as you ought to be; if you are looking for a love which shall not be a flattering dream and a madness of desire, but a true comradeship and a mutual inspiration to all nobility of living—then you are surely on the ascending path.—Henry Van Dyke.

HOW GOES THE BATTLE?

By Rev. C. W. Carter.

Napoleon had laid his plans wisely to crush the Austrians at Marengo. All preliminary skirmishes had turned out as he had planned. The enemy, hemmed in by the swollen Po and French army, would become an easy prey to his consummate skill and the valor of his soldiers. But the Austrian general determined to cut his way out, and such was the fury with which he fought, that when Napoleon reached the field he saw his once victorious legions in confusion and the Consular Guard giving way and the well-planned victory turning to a dire defeat. Just at this juncture young Desaix, who had but lately returned from Egypt to join the First Consul, came sweeping on the field at the head of his cavalry, and halted on the hill where Napoleon stood watching with glittering eye the defeat of his army. There was in that squadron a drummer-boy, who had followed Desaix in the campaigns of Egypt. As the column halted, Napoleon shouted, "Beat a retreat!" The boy did not move. "Gamin, beat a retreat!" The boy grasped his drumsticks and said: "Sire, I do not know how to beat a retreat. Desaix never taught me that, but I can beat a charge that will make the dead fall into line. I beat it at the Pyramids, at Mt. Tabor, at the bridge at Lodi. May I beat it here?" Napoleon, in deepest distress, said to Desaix: "We are beaten! What shall we do?" "Do! Beat the enemy. It is only three o'clock, and there is time enough yet to win a victory. Gamin, beat the old charge of Mt. Tabor and Lodi!" And the squadron, following the gleaming sword of the young general and keeping step to the furious roll of the gamin's drum, swept down upon the Austrians, and the first line was hurled back upon the second and then both were driven back over the third. Desaix fell dead in the first volley, but the line never faltered, and the gamin marched right on in front beating his furious charge. Over the dead and wounded, over breastworks and fallen foe, over cannon belching out their fire of death, that drummer-boy, beating his charge, led a beaten army to a victory that has been a wonder to military science.

The Louisiana Conference Board of Missions has planned a missionary campaign during this month of March. The preliminaries were settled at Alexandria by the Board, the battle has been joined and we are in the midst of the fight. The foe we are engaged with has never been known to yield. It is a foe that will resolutely and with utter desperation cut its way through all opposition and will be actually hacked to pieces and die in its own gore before it will cry for quarter. We fear that many of our members do not comprehend the nature and power of this foe with whom we have joined battle. What is it we are fighting for, anyhow? Why have the 33,564 Methodists of Louisiana been called out upon this battle? Who is it this great army of Methodists has marched out against? Dear readers, it is nothing more nor less than our own selfishness. The spectacle we present to the world during this month of March, establishes the fact of the prevalence of selfishness among our people. The fact that we have undertaken a special campaign to raise the sum of sixty-five cents per member to carry on the work of the Lord, whom we profess to love, blazons our selfishness out before the whole world. Our rule has been: "Dollars for self—dimes for God." It will prove our ruin if we do not crush out of our hearts the selfishness that prompts such a rule of action. The call of the Mission Board means, not merely that we should raise the pitiful sum assessed, but that we shall fight the battle in our own hearts and beat down our selfishness and wrench from its miserly grip the Lord's money.

Reader, how goes this battle in your own heart? Don't you know that it is a case of life or death with you? Spiritual life or spiritual death? And with these alternatives in view and your spiritual forces beginning to waver and fall into confusion, will you, like the defeated French Consul, order a retreat to be beaten? "Up, man! Rise, woman! The month is but half gone! There is time enough to win the victory of a lifetime! Beat the charge that will wake up your dead energies! Storm the breastworks of selfishness! Plant the banner of loyalty to Christ upon the ruins of the temple of covetousness and let it wave as a signal of your devotion and heroism in the cause of God as against self.

THE SITUATION IN A NUTSHELL.

By Rev. John Tillerry Lewis.

World's inhabitants (approximately).....	1,500,000,000
Confucianists (approximately).....	256,000,000
Roman Catholics (approximately).....	230,866,000
Hindus (approximately).....	190,000,000
Mohammedans (approximately).....	176,000,000
Pagans (approximately).....	170,000,000
Protestant Christians (approximately).....	144,000,000
Greek Catholics (approximately).....	98,000,000
Jews (approximately).....	14,000,000

From the above figures it will be seen that there are about 1,000,000,000 heathen on the earth. Of that incomprehensible number of men who are ignorant of Christ and his gospel there have been allotted to American Protestantism 500,000,000 souls to whom we are expected to reveal the Savior in this generation. The leaders of the M. E. Church, South, have accepted 40,000,000 of the number allotted to the Protestants of America as our just and reasonable share of this great work. Will we or will we not confirm the decision of our leaders regarding the souls of those who must look to Southern Methodists alone for the light of truth? Like the Greeks who appealed to the disciples, there are millions of heathens who are saying to the Christian world to-day, "We would see Jesus." They are seeking God, and God is seeking them; but neither can find the other until Christians make a channel through which the Holy Spirit can work to the enlightenment and salvation of those who abide in darkness. For 1900 years God has waited for means and men with which to save the world, and he is waiting still. It is as unmistakably the God-appointed duty of laymen to obey the last command of our Lord as it should be the pleasure of ministers to devote their lives to the advancement of his Kingdom. The missionary who has left home, kindred and friends, that he might carry the light of life to the benighted sons of God, is under no more obligation to deny himself and family the pleasures and comforts of his home land than is the layman under obligation to conduct his business as the steward of God. Many missionaries are even now at their God-appointed post of duty, and more are but awaiting means to go. But those at the front must suffer and those who are ready must delay their going, all because God's children refuse to pay into his treasury the tithes and offerings long past due.

The M. E. Church, South, is maintaining forces in China, Japan, Korea, Brazil, Mexico and Cuba. But the forces in none of the fields are adequate to meet the demands made upon them. Our leaders are overwhelmingly hampered and hindered from doing what the situation demands of them by the small amount of money that our great and wealthy Church places at their command. Some say the demand made upon us is too great, but the fact is our horizon is too pitifully small. The smallness of our horizon is due to the narrowness of that circle, religiously speaking, in which we think and live. All "wide-awake" Methodists think in world-wide terms about everything, except their religion. Of course there are a few who think thus relative to God's Kingdom, but the number is all too few. Thus far, as a Church, we have dealt with the missionary question only as children. If ever we expect to put into our missionary operations the strength, the wisdom and the energy of matured manhood, it is high time we were at it. Why our delay in taking the world for Christ, anyway? Do we wait because of the poverty-stricken condition of the Protestant world? Such a question is not worthy of even passing consideration. Do we wait because of the want of human hearts to carry the message? A survey of the spirit and purpose of the Student Volunteer Movement will negative this question. Is our halting due to closed doors against things western on the part of the heathen? For answer to this inquiry I quote from "The Decisive Hour in Christian Missions," by John R. Mott:

"Throughout the non-Christian world there are unmistakable signs of the awakening of great peoples from their long sleep. Through the whole of Asia a ferment is in process, which has spread from the intellectual leaders and is fast taking possession of the masses. It affects over three-fourths of the human race, including peoples of high intelligence and ancient civilization. The leaders are concerned with the question of enlightenment, of intellectual and social freedom, of economic development and national efficiency. In all history there has not been a period when such vast multitudes of people were in the midst of such stupendous changes, economic, social, educational and religious. As we survey the unparalleled situation in these lands the question is forced upon us, 'What is to be the issue of it all?'"

The heathen are fast appropriating the things, industrial and educational of the Western world.

In the light of Western teaching they are rapidly losing faith in their ancient gods. At this crucial hour in the history of their transformation, if we fail to give them "The God of our Fathers," there is nothing left them but agnosticism and infidelity. It is a thousand times better that we live upon this globe with unambitious, uneducated heathen than it is that we live in the midst of those same heathen after they have become ambitious, educated, heartless agnostics with aspirations to world-wide dominion.

As we face the situation, in the light of the foregoing facts, it seems that there are but two alternatives before us: Either obey God's command, "Preach the gospel to every creature," and thereby produce universal happiness and well-being, and save our souls at last; or else pass God's command by unheeded, and thereby project our posterity into a semi-heathen civilization that will have less of happiness than the world now knows and more of the spirit of "greed for gain" than the mind of man has yet imagined, and besides damn our own souls. The molding of the future civilization of earth is now within the power of the Christian world; the shaping of its destiny is intrusted, largely, to the Christians of this generation. God has never before placed upon man so large an opportunity as the one that looms up before the Christians of to-day. Never before has there been such an abundance of light, such a desire for light, nor yet so many who are anxious to "bear witness of that light," as there are to-day. There is but one thing lacking, and that is money with which to finance the great campaign of taking the world for Christ. The stewards of God have money in abundance, but the check books are not at God's command. Quite frequently has God drawn checks for his part of the profits of earth, only to have same protested and returned to him marked, "No funds." Certainly it is not thus in every case; but, reader, can you plead "Not guilty?" I do not mean can you say, "Not guilty." Any man can claim as much, but who of us can righteously plead "Not guilty?"

For another's dereliction of duty no man is directly responsible. It is more emphatically true that no man can negative his own obligations by citing another's failure to do duty. Each must stand or fall upon the deeds of his own life. Many of us quiet our own conscience with the thought of failure in another's life, but God judges by no such imperfect standards. Seeing, then, that our duty to God and to the heathen is altogether an individual obligation, let us meet that duty with the same thought and care that we exercise in meeting the other obligations of life.

LET THE WHOLE CHURCH FALL INTO LINE.

By Bishop Walter R. Lambuth.

The call to go forward has just been sounded by the senior secretary of the Board of Missions. It is the blast of a trumpet. It is a call to action and admits of no delay. Let every presiding elder swing his forces into line. Let every pastor take up the subject of missions with his people at once, press the collections in a systematic canvass, publicly and privately, personally and through his missionary committee and secure returns, even if the subscriptions are not all paid, and remit the cash to the conference treasurer on or before the 31st of March, the end of the fiscal year of the General Board of Missions.

This matter is one of supreme importance. To fail is to embarrass the Board with a heavy interest account; it may be to imperil the health and life of some faithful missionary at home or abroad; and will in all probability jeopardize the holding of some important post upon the foreign field. My colleagues, Bishops Hoss, Candier and Mouzon, will bear me out in this. Bishop Mouzon was recently obliged to dismiss valuable workers in Mexico for lack of funds, and I will be forced to abandon three places in Brazil this year and return five young candidates for the ministry to their homes, if the small additional sum of $800 is not forthcoming.

This is no time to beat a retreat. We do not know how. Dr. Pinson well says, "The watch-fires blaze on every height. The world is astir. It is a time for optimism, faith and courage. To fail to meet the challenge that rings clear and loud in every voice of our times, would be to dishonor our traditions, and render us unworthy a place in the ranks of the fearless followers of the Great Leader. We must stand in our place on the front line and bear our part. Forty millions of souls wait for the gospel at our hands."

Cuba under the leadership of Bishop Candier is shot through and through with Methodism. Mexico is stirring with a new sense of individual liberty and awakes to a larger consciousness of national life. It is a great and important field. Japan, under a wise leadership, places increased emphasis upon the moral and religious bases of thought and action, while China in seeking to discover herself, constitutes the most gigantic missionary problem of the century. The most thoughtful men of Brazil are turning to Protestantism for education and religion, and echo the words of President Faunce of Brown University—"Religion without education is superstition, and education without religion is futile and dangerous." The organization of a new Annual Conference in that field, the establishment of a great central mission in Rio de Janeiro, the strong hold our women have upon the mothers of Brazil through their splendid schools and the recent and unparalleled offer of the control and management of an agricultural and industrial school in the state of Minas, constitute a situation which inspires us to our best to meet the demands.

As to Korea, words are inadequate. Already Seoul with its 250,000 has more Methodists than a number of cities in the United States of the same size. During the month of September there were three thousand additions to the Methodist Episcopal Church alone in that city, and in October ten thousand men and women decided for Christ. At this rate Dr. Heber Jones claims that a church of a million members can be gathered in the next five years. We must re-enforce or fail utterly to indoctrinate the membership and train the native helpers. Fail in this and our native church will be a rope of sand. If we do our duty in the hour of this magnificent opportunity we will have saved a nation in our lifetime. Is it not worth while?

Let not one day be lost. Victory is in sight. We have come this far by forced marches. We are within reach of the goal in Korea and Cuba. There is a long campaign before us, for Ethiopia stretches out her hands, and we must enter the Dark Continent within a year.

Now is the time for a charge. Shall it not be in the spirit of the Scotch Guards in the Ashanti expedition, when volunteers were called for in the perilous assault upon the enemy's works from which few could expect to return and live? "Any man," said the Colonel, "who will volunteer will step one pace to the front." He turned his back, so as not to embarrass them in their decision, for no man was under compulsion to go. He wheeled and faced the line again. It was without a break. His eye flashed and his face reddened with anger as he exclaimed, "The Scotch Guards, and not a volunteer!" Whereupon a soldier stepped from the ranks, saluted and said, "Colonel, the whole line stepped forward."

Christ is in the van. He calls to the pastor in the pulpit, and to the laymen in the pew; to the candidate in training and to the missionary on the field. "Follow me!" Let everything give way. Let the whole Methodist line move forward.

THE VANDERBILT CONTROVERSY.

By Rev. G. B. Winton, D.D.

Since Bishop Hoss, though taking three columns to reply to one, mentions only two of the points previously raised, it will be seen that this discussion has about spun itself out. I may not now be any more convincing than was he (absit omen!) but I will at least be briefer.

To prove that I have shifted ground in regard to the report of the Vanderbilt Commission, he quotes in full my "cover-page filler." He then searches its glittering generalities with a compound microscope for evidence that I meant to approve the Commission's report. Does he find it? The case is respectfully submitted. I commended the spirit of the Commissioners, but I was careful not to say that I accepted or approved their work. Parts of their pronouncement I objected to most pronouncedly. I saw, however, that in so far as it bore upon the practical work of administering the University's affairs it would probably not be seriously objected to by the Board of Trust. I therefore echoed the hope of the Commissioners that their report might mark the end of controversy. How sincere I was in that may be seen in that I did not again refer to the whole subject in the editorial columns of the Christian Advocate. I also discouraged correspondents of that paper from bringing it up. For this I was in due course tried, condemned and executed. But let it be noted still that all this warfare that has disappointed the hopes of the Commission originated not with the Board of Trust and its friends, but with those who have assumed the role of critics of the Board.

The bearing of the decisions of the Courts of Tennessee in regard to the Presbyterian University at Clarksville upon the statute of 1895 is not any more apparent now that the Bishop (after much urging) cites the language of those decisions than it was before. The Chancery Court of Appeals referred to the statute, it is true, but expressly excluded it as a basis for its decision. The Supreme Court of the State did not so much as refer to it (so it transpires that the information given me by my lawyer friend was correct), but declared the rights of the Presbyterian Synods to elect trustees to be "according to the plan of union adopted by the Synods originally co-operating in the establishment of said University." Evidently that "plan" included express provisions for the election of trustees. Where is there any such provision in the acts of the Annual Conferences which had to do with the beginnings of Vanderbilt University? There is none. On the contrary, the first Board of Trust adopted as one of its early acts (in 1873) a resolution with a preamble in these terms: "Forasmuch as the charter of Vanderbilt University confers upon the Board of Trust the exclusive right and power to fill vacancies that may occur in its own body, and as this power cannot be delegated to any other body of persons whatsoever; therefore, be it resolved," etc. This action of the Board went unchallenged; not a single Annual Conference lifted up a word of protest.

The charge that in quoting from the Vanderbilt Charter I omitted essential words is a bit of unworthy quibbling. Without expressly saying it, Bishop Hoss leaves the impression on his readers that the words omitted describe the "petitioners" as "representatives of certain Annual Conferences." Here is the quotation with those words restored and italicized: "The Court, upon inspection of the designs and objects of said corporation, finds nothing therein contained to be against public policy or good morals or in conflict with the constitution and laws of the State or of the United States, is pleased to grant the prayer of the same, and doth hereby order and adjudge and decree that the petitioners be declared a body politic and corporate," etc. The only point I sought to make was that it was the "petitioners" that were declared a body corporate and politic. In the interest of brevity I omitted a few phrases which, I submit, neither alter nor abrogate the point I sought to establish, nor in any way intimate that the "petitioners" were "representatives" of anybody or anything.

Another quibble, scarcely deserving attention, is the apparent denial (not made in form for excellent reasons) that the attorneys of the Bishops have twice asked for more time. The facts are these: The lawyers of the Board of Trust are taking ample time to prepare and print a reply to the elaborate petition of the Bishops—a petition which was some six months in the making—touching the right of the General Conference to elect trustees. But deeming the Peabody matter to be of an altogether different complexion, they gave notice early in November that they were ready to move that the petition on that issue be separated from the rest, and that, if this was done, they would move the immediate dissolution of the temporary injunction in so far as it affected the relations between the George Peabody College for Teachers and Vanderbilt University. The attorneys of the Bishops asked that argument be postponed. Some weeks later, the time having expired, they asked for another delay, this time frankly admitting that it was their purpose to recommend to the Bishops the withdrawal of that part of their petition. Soon afterward (Dec. 21) the College of Bishops did come together and did withdraw their petition. Why should Bishop Hoss fancy that I have been eaves-dropping their executive sessions if I infer that they took this action "under pressure from their attorneys?"

THE MULBERRY TREETOPS ASTIR.

By Rev. Robert B. Downer.

Shortly after the establishment of David's authority over Israel as their king, the Philistines came in battle array to wage war. David inquired of God if he should go and attack them. The answer was: "Fetch a compass behind them, over against them, and when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, then thou shalt bestir thyself; for then shalt the Lord go before thee to smite the Philistines." The twentieth century adversaries of Zion, inside and outside, are a mighty host, well organized, boastful and proud of their numbers and resources, while Zion seems satisfied to be able to "hold the fort" behind in-trenchments.

Notwithstanding all the expenditure of money in the building of imposing and costly church edifices, sending the gospel to heathen lands, raising the standard of ministerial education and also vast numbers of college graduates filling her pulpits, the small net increase of late years indicates that "holding the fort" against the fearful odds in battle array against Zion is no small achievement. The Bishops of Southern Methodism are not pleased at the outlook, and wisely have called the Church to plead with the Lord of hosts for divine aid. The first Sabbath in 1911 was selected by them for all pastors to preach special sermons on the need of a great revival and to make the record of said year memorable on account of souls saved and added to the Church. Where ministers have held special revival services since Jan. 1, encouraging reports of increase of membership have been given out. (See postcard statements in Nashville Christian Advocate). The same Advocate, in a late issue, contains a special article from Bishop Mouzon, giving his views as to method of procedure in securing a revival. He dwells pointedly upon the agency of prayer meetings and gives emphasis to witnessing in public, to a confession of blessings received. He thinks that we need a revival of testimony giving. (I hear the sound of a going in the mulberry tops.) Ah, brethren, there was a time when pastors knew the avowed spiritual status of every member of his charge, through the agency of personal inquiry in the fireside talks of pastoral visits, the testimony on love feast occasions and reports of class leaders; but today, where is the pastor that is posted as to the regeneration and spiritual attainments of his membership?

How important it is to remember that the minister's obligation demands that he "present every man perfect in Christ Jesus!" Preaching for twelve months in a general way no doubt affords great help to hearers in a general way, and the preacher may find some comfort for not having accomplished the task by laying the blame on our "time limit." O, for a revival of testimony giving!

Not long since, a prominent pastor wrote the New Orleans Christian Advocate that twenty-five women of his charge had banded themselves under a covenant vow to pray specially for a revival in their church, when in the springtime Bishop Mouzon is expected to come as evangelist. (Again I hear the sound of a going in the mulberry tops.) May God abundantly pour out his spirit upon that praying band, and may their example be emulated by the female members of every charge! As God's word says, "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me." It is to be hoped that no unhallowed incense will be offered on God's altar of prayer. Get your own hearts cleansed from all sin and pray for the baptism of "the Holy Ghost with fire," then when received you can make "the effectual, fervent prayer that availeth much."

In my childhood in New Orleans a band of five godly women—Sisters Canoe, DeRush, Downer, Brown and Deacon—consecrated themselves as helpers of the ministry, ready to pray in public, visit the sick, "the highways and hedges," and do any work assigned them. O, how unctuous were the prayers of those women, when called on to pray when the altar was crowded with penitents groping their way to Christ! And though no church historian may have given any special mention of the assistance they rendered, yet I know that Methodism in its infancy in New Orleans received great aid from this band of godly women. Bishops Candler and Mouzon have been advertised as intending to help in special meetings; this will cheer Brother Halsey Werlein, who advocates that our bishops set the pace to bring on the needed revival, thereby saying, "Follow us as we follow Christ." It takes time to get into position to get behind the enemy, but a cleansed spiritual body of godly men and women will not have long to wait for "the sound of a going in the mulberry treetops," when Jehovah will assume command and the enemies of Christ be vanquished.

Individual heart cleansing and putting on of God's armor is the need of the present hour. The opportunity to gain stars for our crown is before us, and may soon pass. Hear Edward Garrett as he says: "And when it is all over and our feet will run no more, and our hands are helpless, and we have scarcely strength to murmur a last prayer, then we shall see that instead of needing a larger field we have left untilled many corners of our single acre, and that none of it is fit for the Master's eye were it not for the softening shadows of the Cross." Welles Ave., Jackson, Miss.

A CHANGE OF HOSPITAL DAY.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Methodist Hospital, held in Memphis on March 1, it was learned that the Baptists, who are now building a hospital in Memphis, had appointed the fifth Sunday in April as their hospital rally day, and coming so close to the first Sunday in May, as agreed upon by the Methodist Hospital executive committee, that in deference to the Baptists the Executive Committee has changed its Methodist rally day from the first Sunday in May to the first Sunday in June. We have in this movement about 225,000 Methodists. May we not set the standard to be raised on that day to at least $1 per member? What a nice sum this would be to turn over to your board of trustees with which to commence this noble Christian work! We have the money and "We can if we will." In the meantime make all remittances to Mr. John R. Pepper, treasurer, Memphis, Tenn. JOHN H. SHERARD, Chairman.

Church News

The time of the Mississippi Laymen's Meeting at Jackson has been changed from March 14 and 15 to Thursday and Friday, March 24 and 25. This was done on account of a conflict in date with similar gatherings elsewhere.

Columbia University (New York) has arranged for a series of sermons on "Christian Citizenship" in the college chapel. They will be delivered on succeeding Sabbaths at 4 p. m. by distinguished ministers of various denominations.

It was recently announced that Trinity College would send a committee to Washington to invite President Taft to deliver the Commencement address at that institution. Evidently the North Carolinians prefer the presence of a high official to a speech this year.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has a hospital valued at $500,000 at Guthrie, Oklahoma. Bonds to the amount of $150,000 have recently been issued for its enlargement and improvement. In connection with it a nurses' home and training school are maintained.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, is planning to give a week to Chicago, under the auspices of The Moody Bible Institute, beginning June 4. Special meetings will be arranged for ministers, and in the same connection a conference of open-air work for the summer will be held.

Rev. J. H. Cloud, a deaf mute minister of St. Louis, is said to have preached the funeral sermon of another deaf mute in Kansas City on March 4. From this it would seem that the gospel can now be proclaimed by means of the sign language, as well as in the various audible tongues of earth.

The Western Christian Advocate, of Cincinnati, says: "There are only two States in the Union where the Church membership reaches fifty per cent. of the population—Massachusetts, with fifty per cent. thirty-five of which are Roman Catholic, and Rhode Island, with fifty-three per cent., forty-one per cent. of which are Roman Catholic."

February 19th was "Southern College Day" in Jacksonville, Florida. Bishop Morrison occupied the pulpit of the First Methodist Church at 11 o'clock, delivering a stirring and eloquent sermon, and Dr. Dickey, the President of Emory College, preached to the Springfield congregation at the same hour. A collection was taken which was said to be quite creditable, though the amount was not made public. Dr. Hilburn, the president, is bestirring himself to place our Florida Methodist College upon a substantial footing.

Dr. H. B. Johnson, who is in his fourth year on the Dyersburg District, Memphis Conference, has made a notably good record as a presiding elder. During the three years of his incumbency there have been 1,949 additions of profession of faith and 1,328 by certificate, making a total of 3,277. The assessments for ministerial support have increased from $16,415 to $22,145, and the aggregate excess on the various Conference collections is $3,924—a little more than $1,300 annually. The average salary of the preachers of the district is $915.50.

The Richmond-Times Dispatch continues to asperse the character of Dr. James Cannon, who is one of the ablest and best known Methodist ministers in Virginia. This led the citizens of Blackstone, Dr. Cannon's home town, to issue a few days since a statement paying high tribute to his integrity and worth, and indignantly resenting the unwarranted attack made upon him. It is said that Dr. Cannon's efficient work for prohibition is what has so stirred up the liquor organs of the Old Dominion. But they will not be able to injure this courageous man with right-thinking people. Thrice armed is he who lives for God and fights the foes of humanity.

An interesting lawsuit has developed in Massachusetts concerning the proposed sale at auction by C. F. Libbie & Company, of Boston, of some of Mrs. Eddy's private letters, which are said to have been written to a cousin in 1876. Application for an injunction restraining the sale was made by Mr. Henry M. Baker, the executor of Mrs. Eddy's estate, and temporarily it has been granted. The case will be argued before the Superior Court of the State in the near future. On one side it is contended that the letters were not confidential, that they are not literature, and that Mrs. Eddy while living claimed no literary property in them. On the other it is held that a person has no right to make public the contents of a private letter passing between friends and relatives. Dr. Buckley, the editor of the New York Christian Advocate, thus comments upon the points at issue: "There are two sides to that question without doubt. However, the consent of the executors of the will of the writer (since deceased) must be obtained before publication of the letter, history and biography in many cases will be so circumscribed as to become the innocent purveyors of erroneous statements and partial conclusions. On the other hand, if the receivers of letters, written by persons since deceased, may in all cases be allowed to publish them, vast harm in a few instances would follow. But in such a case animosity might be so strong in the family to which the writer belonged that the survivors would not consent to the publication of letters, even though it would be necessary to do so to vindicate the deceased from diabolical slanders."

The General Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will meet in Montgomery, Ala., April 6-9, and in connection with its sessions an important educational conference will be held. The program arranged for the occasion has just been issued by Dr. Stonewall Anderson, the secretary of the Board, and both in scope and in the names which appear upon it is an admirable one. Among the subjects to be discussed we note the following: "The Debt of the Nation to the Church College," by Bishop J. C. Kilgo; "The Place of the Church in the General System of Education," by Dr. H. N. Snyder; "The Ideal Church College for Men," by Bishop J. H. McCoy; "The Appeal of the Church College to Men of Wealth," by Bishop E. E. Hoss; "The Ideal Church College for Women," by Miss Mary N. Moore; "The Education of the Ministry and the Church College," by Bishop W. A. Candler. To Dr. James Cannon, who has made such a gallant fight for the maintenance of the rights of the Church in connection with Randolph-Macon College, has been assigned the theme, "The Ability and Duty of the Church, South, to Own, Control, and Support Her Colleges." That he will deliver a ringing message on this subject, may be regarded as a certainty. We note that Dr. L. W. Cooper, the distinguished president of Whitworth College, is also down for a part in the discussion. On Sunday at 11 o'clock Bishop Wilson will preach at the Court Street Church, and Bishop Candler will occupy the pulpit of the Dexter Avenue Church at the same hour. The visiting ministers will also preach to other congregations in Montgomery and the near-by towns.

THE CRISIS IN TEMPERANCE REFORM.

The present hour, it is admitted by all careful students of the situation, is a critical hour in temperance reform. The temperance wave which five years ago many believed was sweeping all before it seems to have spent its force and to be receding. The liquor men who three years ago were in a panic over the threatened destruction of their business today are rejoicing over their many victories. The statistics of the internal revenue collector show that during the last forty years the consumption of intoxicating liquors has increased at a steady and uniform rate, except in several periods of general depression. During the past two years not a single State has been added to the prohibition column; but during this same time an amendment providing for state-wide prohibition has been defeated in a number of commonwealths. In Maine the legislature, by a large majority, has voted to re-submit the prohibitory amendment to the people, and many things indicate that a terrible battle is to be fought in this old stronghold of prohibition.

In face of all this the temperance forces stand with broken line and divided in council. There are many organizations of one kind and another, but each is doing that which is right in its own eyes, with little regard for its neighbor workers. Unless something is done at once all of the gains of the past five years are likely to be swept away. Worse than that, some large sections of the country are certain to be lost from the temperance column.

Sunday, March 19 and May 21, are set apart as Temperance Sundays in the Sunday schools of America. For years in many schools the Quarterly Temperance Lesson has been ignored where it has not been shunned by the officers and teachers. We have sadly neglected the work of systematic gospel temperance instruction, with the results indicated above. In this time of crisis and danger let every church and school in the land make an effort to retrieve the day. At the earliest opportunity let the pastor call the officers and teachers together and seek to enlist and arouse them; let them all plan to make these two great days in behalf of temperance. By some such action as this we may be able to arouse and crystallize the sentiment of the people. In addition to this, steps should be taken by the leaders of the churches and temperance organizations of the country to hold a "generals' council of war" and plan a systematic, comprehensive, positive, statesmanlike policy of action. It is not yet too late to save the day; but the hour is critical and calls for immediate and united effort.

LOYAL TO THE GOSPEL.

Dr. J. W. Lee, the pastor of St. John's Church, of St. Louis, visited England last summer and in a letter to the St. Louis Christian Advocate thus refers to the preaching that he heard in the Mother Country:

Its double strength cuts the coffee bill in two; its superior quality gives it a value double its price.

THE REILY TAYLOR CO.
NEW ORLEANS, U.S.A.

"One could never tell from any sermon I have heard in England this summer that there was such a thing as evolution, higher criticism, advanced thought, or a new day dawning in religious history. It has been a joy to hear sermons in which Christianity was not defended, but the truth of it declared. It was my privilege once to hear Voltaire quartered and obliterated at a camp meeting on a hot night in the woods of Murray county, Ga. The preacher belonged to the local ranks, he weighed over two hundred pounds, and he seemed bent on putting Voltaire and Tom Paine out of business to a company of poor country people who had never heard that such men had lived. It occurred to me then that the minister was wasting time and breath. One cannot keep from being impressed in the sermons he hears here with the complete absence from them of any reference to those who have contrary opinions. The preachers seemed to feel it their duty to preach the positive gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, as if no such people as Celsus, Voltaire, higher critics, new light champions, or advanced thinkers, so-called, ever lived."

Last Sunday, for instance, I attended service in a little Wesleyan Methodist chapel in Chertsey, out in the country twenty-five miles from London. There was first a hymn, then a short invocation, followed by reading a chapter from the Scriptures, then another hymn, followed by a five minutes' sermon to the children in the audience, then another hymn, followed by a longer prayer, then a second lesson from the Scriptures, then another hymn, followed by the sermon. The minister was a Rev. Westlake, the superintendent of the circuit. The regular circuit preacher was just leaving for another field, having served out his three years. The superintendent made a beautiful reference to the work of the pastor, and then read a text from the writings of St. Paul, and proceeded to deliver one of the most spiritual sermons I ever heard. It was simple but direct, and impressed me as a message straight from heaven. I noticed that when each person found his seat, he bowed in silent prayer. Not a word was spoken by one to another until after the benediction was pronounced. Then the conversation was low and subdued, as if they all felt they were in the house of God. Some of the people approached our party, and expressed the hope that we had enjoyed the service, and that we would return to the evening service."

America is the greatest wood using nation in the world. Statistics show that Germany uses 37 cubic feet per head of the population annually, France 25 feet, Great Britain 14, and the United States 230. The quantity of wood cut in this country is approximately three times the growth. From these figures, it is evident that, unless there is conservation of our forests, we shall in the comparatively near future face a lumber famine.

In order that they may get every dollar possible out of their patrons. It is estimated that probably 500,000 visitors will be in London at that time. The innate selfishness of human nature is illustrated in this action of the hotel men. The same charge is brought against the New Orleans hotels in connection with the Mardi Gras celebration.

The development of the agricultural resources of the South is dependent very largely upon the small farmer—the man who cultivates a few acres thoroughly. One difficulty in the way of this development in some sections has been the unwillingness on the part of the owners of big plantations to break them up into small farms. From reports in the newspapers we judge that this difficulty is gradually being removed. Some of the largest land owners in the Mississippi Delta are selling farms of ten and twenty acres to desirable immigrants.

DEDICATION AT GREENVILLE.

By J. D. Barbee.

Greenville has been highly favored during the last seven or eight years by the presence and ministry of our chief pastors. When you, Mr. Editor, were our pastor the eloquent and much beloved Galloway opened our new church with two matchless discourses in the presence of congregations which taxed the capacity of the building. Two years ago Bishop Hoss, whose primacy in American Methodism cannot be questioned, preached for us two sermons of wonderful power. Last summer Bishop McCoy, one of our youngest Bishops, a remarkably brotherly man and utterly unspoiled by his early honors, edified and charmed all hearers with the messages which he bore. And on Sunday, the fifth of the current month, our own Bishop W. B. Murrah dedicated our church, preaching two sermons of great power which displayed him as a pulpit star of the first magnitude. For dignity of utterance he reminded me of Bishop McTyler; and there were great passages in both his discourses that would adorn the deliverance of any man.

On Sunday afternoon Bishop Murrah was the celebrant at a remarkable and unusual baptismal service, when he dedicated to the service of God and the Church the grandson and the great-grandson of Bishop McTyler, Holland N. McTyler III, and George F. Archer III, the son and grandson of Mrs. H. N. McTyler, Jr., that queenly woman so well known throughout Southern Methodism, who is visiting her daughter, Mrs. George F. Archer, Jr., of Greenville.

Mississippi has never been without great sons to represent her in both State and Church. In the days that are past she had Prentiss, Davis, Lamar, Walthall, and George, and now she has several able men to utter her voice in the councils of the nation; in other days she had Paine and Galloway in the high priestly circle, and she has found a worthy successor to them in Murrah.

The dedication of our church marked the consummation of the devoted labors of many of our brethren of the North Mississippi Conference. Begun by that tireless toiler, John E. Thomas, it was continued under the successive administrations of S. B. Myers, J. E. Cunningham, N. G. Augustus, R. A. Meek, J. R. Countiss, and W. S. Lagrone, the "divine optimist" of our Conference, who very quietly and quickly raised and paid the debt of about $1,500 at the beginning of his second year as pastor. The chairman of our Board of Stewards publicly announced that this was the most noteworthy achievement in the recent history of the congregation.

Brother J. T. McCafferty of Leland, Brother T. M. Bradlev, of Rosedale, and our honored presiding elder, W. W. Woodard, favored us with their presence on this occasion; but it was a matter of universal regret that you, Mr. Editor, who are so much beloved in this community, should have found it impossible to be present.

Greenville, Miss.

PROMPT COLLECTIONS.

By Rev. W. W. Pinson, D.D.

We have been calling attention in our correspondence to the necessity for prompt collections and the forwarding of all available missionary funds to the treasurer before the 31st of March. After this year our fiscal year will end with December instead of with March, as heretofore. In order that we may wind up this year's business in as good shape as possible it will be necessary for the whole Church to respond to this appeal. We are sure if the necessity were fully realized there would be a united effort to meet the demands. We must not only wind up our year's business at this time, but we shall have to go through the summer months when there is very little income and shall be under the necessity of borrowing heavily in order to carry our budget till the fall income is available. Every dollar we receive now saves interest and also gives strength and encouragement to the work. We cannot too strongly urge upon all concerned the importance of seeing that all that can be collected, both on the regular assessments and on specials, shall be forwarded at once to the Conference Treasurers, that they may have it in hand before the end of March.

The numerous responses we are receiving from pastors and presiding elders and lay leaders are exceedingly encouraging. They indicate an earnestness and an activity that promise progress. The Every-Member Canvass is being widely adopted, and we believe it will result not only in a greatly increased missionary income, but also in a reduction of the worry and friction that so often result from other methods of raising funds. In addition to increasing the number of givers and the amount they severally contribute, the establishment of the habit of weekly giving has its effect upon all the benevolences and swells the income for current expenses. This has been thoroughly demonstrated in all the churches of all denominations where it has been tried. With the co-operation so heartily indicated on all hands we hope to come to our annual meeting in May with a good showing for the first year of the quadrennium. However, this will be determined from a financial standpoint largely by the amount received during the month of March, and this will depend upon the thoroughness with which collections are made and the promptness with which the amounts collected are forwarded. For this we must rely upon our leaders who have in former years so nobly stood by the needs of the Board.

A BIG MAGAZINE CONSOLIDATION.

Through an amalgamation just effected, three well-established and well-known publications are hereafter to be published by one company, although no change in the policy or personnel of editorial management is to take place. The Crowell Publishing Company, owners of Woman's Home Companion and Farm and Fireside, takes over the American Magazine and will publish it in conjunction with its other two publications. Mr. George H. Hazen, is president of the Crowell Publishing Company; Mr. H. J. Fisher is general manager. This amalgamation will make for increased efficiency and influence in the case of all three of these publications.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE.

By Rev. Walter G. Harbin.

Rev. C. E. Dickey, M.A., B.D., has the following to say of this book in the Central Methodist Advocate: "I have just finished reading the book, 'Modes of the Heavenly Life,' by Rev. Walter G. Harbin, Haynesville, La., and I have never read a more fascinating book of the kind. My heart was strangely warmed as I read the stirring messages from the graphic pen of this gifted pastor-evangelist. The book is a series of five sermons on the work of the Holy Spirit. The author has given the world a small book that will long abide. It is truly said, 'No one can read it without being stirred to holier aspirations,' by Dr. R. A. Meek, in the introduction. The book may move you to tears as it did me. It is sure to make you want to be a better person and inspire you to greater and more heroic service for our Master. The style is easy and inviting to all classes of readers. The English is good, the diction is pure and the illustrations are well chosen and captivating. The book is modern and yet sound and Biblical. The one sermon on power is worth the price of the entire volume."

DANIEL GEORGE WASHINGTON ELLIS.

By Rev. G. S. Harmon.

The days of the years of the pilgrimage of Daniel George Washington Ellis were four score and four years, and for three score years he walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

That was a long time to live. He touched five generations, and lived through great and stirring times both in Church and State.

D. G. W. Ellis was born in Jackson County, Ala., Jan. 10, 1826. His father, Jesse W. Ellis, was a prominent Methodist preacher in Alabama in the early days, and his mother, Mrs. Hannah Murphree Ellis, was one of those pious women characteristic of early Methodism. The family was a large one, consisting of seven boys and five girls. Brother Ellis survived them all.

Three of his brothers were Methodist preachers, serving in Alabama and Texas; the eldest brother, John, and Holland N. McTyre were contemporary pastors in Mobile. During his early childhood the family moved to Blount County; thence to Coosa County and settled near Wetumpka, Ala. He acquired a good English education in the common schools, and taught for several years. He was endowed with a fine mind and added to his store of knowledge by wide reading, diligent study and close application. While never a college man, there were few of his co-laborers who were better equipped mentally than he. He was a great student. He loved his books and called them his tools. He was indeed a master workman.

Brother Ellis was converted and joined the Church at a camp meeting in Blount County, Ala., when he was 11 years old, under the pastorate of Rev. Walter H. McDonald. His own statement was that he fell away and led a very wicked life for a number of years. When he was about 25 or 26 years old, and after his marriage, he was reclaimed in a meeting held at Wetumpka by Rev. Josiah Barker, and there was never a lapse in his Christian experience from then to the close of his life.

Brother Ellis was united in matrimony to Miss Virilla E. Woodruff, at Wetumpka, Ala., Sept. 26, 1850. For forty-six years they walked together in love and accord, a large part of the time sharing the joys and sorrows of the itinerant life. She was a true helpmeet. While he was pastor at Estabutchie, his last active charge, she left him for the heavenly home, April 18, 1896. Seven children blessed their union, of whom five still remain—Wm. L. of New Orleans; George W., of Lucedale; Mrs. Nora Mars and Misses Mattie and Kittie, of Meridian.

The constant companionship, unselfish devotion and tender ministrations of the dear daughter, Mattie, were touching and beautiful. "Many daughters have done excellently, but thou excellest them all."

For several years after his conversion at Wetumpka the "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel" was upon him. He was merchandising profitably and it meant sacrifice and loss, but he counted the loss as gain for Christ. "Yea, doubtless, he counted all things but loss, for the excellency of Christ Jesus his Lord."

He was licensed to preach and recommended for admission on trial by a quarterly conference in Louisa County, Ala., 1855. Rev. A. S. Dickinson, P. E. He was admitted on trial into the Alabama Conference the same year. He served two charges, one in Cherokee County and one in Coosa County, and then moved to Mississippi, with the intention of going to Texas with one of his brothers, but for some reason changed his mind and settled near DeKalh, in Kemper County, where he taught.

Desiring to resume the active ministry, he served the DeKalh circuit as supply during the year 1870, and in December of that year was admitted into the Mississippi Conference at the session held at Crystal Springs under the presidency of Bishop D. S. Doggett.

He was ordained deacon at Meridian in 1871 by Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh.

Admitted into full connection at Brandon, 1872.

Ordained elder at Hazlehurst in 1874 by Bishop Paine.

He served faithfully and fruitfully the following charges: DeKalh, 1871, 72, 73; Spring Hill, 1874; Philadelphia, 1875, 76; Waynesboro, 1877; Wayne Circuit, 1878, 79; Paulding, 1880, 81; DeKalh, 1882, 83, 84, 85; Carthage, 1886, 87, 88; Madison, 1889, 90; Caseyville, 1891; Decatur, 1892; Daleville, 1893, 94, 95, and Estabutchie in 1896. He was superannuated at Port Gibson, December, 1896.

From that time he made his home in Meridian. On Nov. 13, 1901, he was married the second time to Mrs. Rebecca Baggett, at Ellisville. She was a sweet-spirited, Christian character and they lived happily together until the time of her death, Oct. 2, 1908.

Early in the morning of May 21, 1910, he "Swent through the gates into the city" and "had right to the tree of life."

Such in brief is the life history of this apostolic man, but who can estimate its worth to the Church and the world?

Personally, Brother Ellis was builded on a large mould—in his prime he was massive. His clear grey eyes were bright and kindly in expression, and there was always a benignity and placidity upon his countenance indicating the deep inward peace and joy.

In personal habits he was simple and unostentatious. A modest, quiet man, chaste in thought and language. Never self-assertive—he was not voluble; when other men were garrulous he was thinking great thoughts. When in the active work he was rarely heard on the floor of the Conference, but when he did speak his words carried weight. His home life was simple, beautiful and well ordered. The fragrance of it abides with his children; his blessed memory is enshrined in their hearts. They "Rise up and call him blessed."

D. G. W. Ellis belonged to the real apostolic succession; a personal knowledge of Jesus Christ, a clear and unmistakable call to the ministry, with the seal of the Holy Spirit upon his labors.

He was a really great expositor—whatever a text had in it came out under his searching analysis. He was a rare sermonizer and a systematic preacher. His preaching was the finished product of matured thought and earnest prayer. He disdained lack of preparation for the pulpit. I once heard him deplore what he termed "scrappiness" on the part of preachers in preparing sermons, and said that no preacher should attempt to expound the word until his oil was well heated. As a logician he had few equals. He was a master of the forensic art; in debate his thrusts were keen as Damascus blades, yet always tempered with courtesy. In delivery he was cool and deliberate; never became excited; never ranted; never lost control of himself—his speech was clear and concise; he knew words and chose them well; he had that rare and much to be coveted gift of "packing" his sermons; could say much in few words. And his was true pulpit eloquence—lucid, fervent, earnest.

Paul's admonition to Timothy to be "Sound in doctrine" was heeded by Brother Ellis. He had unquestioning faith in God's word. There was never an uncertain sound from his trumpet. When he spoke it was with the authority of "Thus saith the Lord." His sermons were largely doctrinal. He held to the old statements of faith. He took the old paths the fathers trod. He believed in and preached a full gospel—the depravity of the race; the sinfulness of sin; the atoning merit of an immaculately conceived Christ; repentance, faith, justification, regeneration; the witness of the Spirit; entire sanctification and glorification. He held to the original and correct Wesleyan Biblical teaching, and there was a warmth and mellowness about it that reached the heart, demonstrating the Spirit's presence and power. There was one element of his preaching that we all might imitate—the elimination of self and the exaltation of the blessed Christ.

"He held the lamp of truth that day
So low that none could miss the way;
And yet so high, to bring in sight,
That picture fair—the World's Great Light;
That, gazing up—the lamp between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

"He held the pitcher, stooping low.
To the lips of little ones below;
Then raised it to the weary saint.
And bade him drink, when sick and faint!
They drank—the pitcher thus between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

"He blew the trumpet soft and clear,
That trembling sinners need not fear.
And then with louder note and hold,
To raze the walls of Satan's hold!
The trumpet coming thus between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

"But when the Captain said, 'Well done,
Thou good and faithful servant—come!
Lay down the pitcher and the lamp,
Lay down the trumpet—leave the camp—
The weary hands could then be seen, Clasped in those pierced ones—naught between."

His was a fruitful ministry; the seal of the Holy Spirit was upon it. Many were converted wherever he labored, and a number of young men, influenced by him, were called to preach. Several of them are active workers in our Conference, while others have answered "roll call" on the other side and are now rejoicing with him in the Glory Land! He was ever a friend and helper of young preachers; they were singularly drawn to him. There are a chosen few who bulk large in my own life, and among them is enshrined the name of D. G. W. Ellis. In my early ministry we were thrown much together and only the Heavenly Father knows what his affection and fellowship have meant to me.

Brother Ellis was great in prayer. He knew the Lord intimately and communed with him much, and his public petitions were the result of the inner life—spiritual, powerful, searching—the "inwrought" prayer of "the righteous man," and they "availed much." During the fourteen years between his superannuation and glorification he was accounted the "best pron" of the East End Church, not so much for his activities, though they were many, as for his praying force. He longed for a great revival at East End and in Meridian, and while he was not permitted to see it, his prayers are bottled up, and some day God will unseal them upon the people there.

It was a glorious privilege to be with him in a season of devotion; the room would resound with his glad acclaim. I count myself specially favored to have been with him much in prayer the last few weeks of his life. With his hand on my head and his deep voice in unctuous prayer,

"Heaven came down our souls to meet,

While glory crowned the mercy seat."

Brother Ellis' personal experience was rich, deep, abiding. His faith was Gibraltar-like. He was perfectly satisfied with his religion and his Lord.

The two epochs of grace are given here in an extract from his written testimony—

"I was converted in May, 1851, in Wetumpka, Ala., while standing on my feet during the singing of the hymn beginning 'When I can read my title clear' etc. I had been seeking salvation for some days and just at the time the change came was not struggling, but calmly listening to the singing of the hymn. It does not seem to me as I now remember it that it was a sudden change, but that it gradually stole upon me, and consisted in sweet peace in the profoundest depths of my soul, where shortly before had been disquiet and distress. My emotions were so different from what I expected that I did not at the time accept the change wrought in me as the blessing I had been seeking, but supposed it might be the prelude to it. In less than half an hour the assurance of my adoption through the witnessing Spirit became so strong that I shouted aloud the praises of my redeeming Lord." Passing over in the record his account of his call to preach and his conflicts of heart over the doctrine and experience of sanctification, he adds:

"In February, 1897, Brother and Sister Hall conducted revival services in East End Methodist Church, Meridian, Miss., while Bro. George H. Galoway was pastor. I was impressed the first services I attended with my need of deliverance from carnality—I was sure that I was not wholly sanctified and equally sure that I ought to be and could be by meeting the human conditions. I was urged to seek it, and bowed at the altar for that purpose. For two days and nights I continued in earnest prayer for the blessing. This too was a time of struggle; the devil tried to induce me to abandon the attempt because of its great cost. But I bless God that he enabled me to pay the price, while kneeling in the East End Church with a number of the brethren around me. The moment I said in my heart, 'Yea, Lord, I give up all for thee—family, friends, reputation, influence, the strength of my life,' I felt assured of the blessing of entire sanctification through faith in the all-cleansing blood. The Spirit shone upon the work and I knew what to call it. There resulted peace so sweet, so heavenly, so profound, that it defies description. Joy spontaneously bubbled up from the great deep of my soul and I felt I was completely blessed. After all these years the joy and peace abide, and I can bless God for the conscious presence of the Comforter while I write these lines. That February morning of the year 1897 I entered upon a new experience as marked in its features as that which characterized the experience entered upon at my conversion in 1851, forty-six years before. To God belongs the praise, the glory and the power now and forever. Amen!"

It was a rare privilege to hear his testimony. Congregations were profoundly impressed and deeply stirred when he told it. And his daily life was a beautiful exemplification of it. He came as near living the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians as any man who ever walked among us. I saw him under the severest testings and he came forth unscathed, richer and stronger spiritually. He was indeed a holy man, one of the saintliest I ever knew.

His last years were among his best ones, and were passed peacefully and happily amid the companion-

THE GIFT ALL MAY GIVE.

One gave a gift not bought with gold,
For gold he seldom had,
A precious gift to one most dear,
And who received was glad.

He gave the gift to other friends,
He gave with happy heart.
To each and all it carried joy,
'Twas of himself a part.

Nor wrapped, nor sealed, 'twas postage free,
Where'er the gift was sent,
And always reached, without delay,
The one for whom 'twas meant.

He gave the gift to those in need,
He gave it more and more,
Yet, though full oft he gave the gift,
It but increased his store.

And many be who need the gift,
And for it daily pine,
For wealth is powerless to bestow
This precious gift divine.

How blest to give, and blessed, too,
Are those who Love receive,
And more than gold this Pearl of Price,
This gift that all may give.

THE THING SHE DIDN'T SAY.

"I think the very meanest thing you can say, sometimes, is just nothing at all!" said Prue Elder, with a decided nod of her auburn head.

The girls gave a shout of laughter. "How can you say anything mean when you say nothing at all?" asked Bessie Snow.

"Well, I'll tell you. I was staying up at Aunt Riah's last summer, you know, getting strong after typhoid fever. All the girls were nice to me, because they knew I couldn't play, or even read very much, and needed to be entertained. I never knew before that girls could be so nice. I got to love them all.

"There was one in particular. Her name was Alice Otis, and you'll all know her, I hope, because she's coming to visit me next vacation.

"At first I thought Alice rather odd. She is very quiet, and she would have been hard to get acquainted with, only that she was sorry for me because I had been ill, and took particular pains.

"I just can't tell you all the things Alice did for me. She had a pony and cart, and almost every day she used to take me for a drive. Then she would bring me flowers, and read to me, and even play and sing for me, though I found out afterward she would hardly ever do that for any one—she is so timid.

"Well, there was a crowd of girls that call themselves 'the stickers,' because they always stick together. They are a little bit—just the least little bit—noisy and slangy, but after all, they were good-natured and popular, and I—well, to tell the truth, I felt flattered that they took me into their bunch and seemed to like me.

"One day we were all out on Aunt Riah's porch with our fancy work—all 'the stickers,' that is, and myself. Alice Otis' name was mentioned, and they all begun at once to talk about her. 'Oh, the stuck-up thing!' they said. 'She is just as prim and horrid as she can be! She won't be anything if she can't be the whole show,' and all that sort of thing. And what do you suppose I said—I, after Alice had been such an angel to me, and after I had learned so well how shy she is, and how hard it is for her to make up with people? I didn't say one word! That's why I said a little while ago that sometimes the meanest thing one can say is nothing at all."

"I believe you are right, Prue," said Bessie. "I have had some experiences like yours, and I don't believe that even foolish or unkind words could make me more ashamed of myself."

WHILE BILLY COUNTED TEN.

Billy had what he called "an awful temper," and when he was angry I am sorry to say that he looked quite different from the smiling, polite little boy who usually lived in the big brown house on the corner. When the "awful temper" took possession of Billy, people almost thought another boy had come to take his place, and often his mamma cried and felt very badly over the things Billy did.

"Now, Billy," said his mother, taking both his hands in hers and looking very sad after Billy had been in a rage because Jack had lost his top. Jack had borrowed the top from Billy, and quite by accident had lost it, but Billy was very angry about the matter, and stormed about until even lame grandma had limped into the sitting room to see what could be the matter. "Now, Billy, you must promise me that you will count ten very slowly every time you are tempted to be angry to-day, or I shall have to send you to your room. We must do something with this wicked temper of yours."

Hardly had Mrs. Foster left the room when Molly, the maid, came through the room with her arms full of clean clothes, and her dress brushed over the block house Billy was building. Billy turned very red in the face, and was about to say something loud and angry when he remembered his promise.

"One—two—three," counted Billy, and then he thought of the jam turnover Molly had made for him that morning. "Four—five—" He could hardly count when he remembered that at that very moment Molly was boiling paste for his new kite. Over at Joe Porter's, cross Emma would not allow the children in the kitchen at all, while Molly was always kind to Billy and Jack and little Eleanor. Billy forgot all about the ruined block house and turned to build another much bigger and better.

"Billy! Billy!" called little Eleanor, "I've had such an accident. I upset a glass of water and part of it ran on your Indian suit. I'm awfully sorry."

Billy scrambled to his feet, for that Indian suit was the pride of his heart, and he was afraid water would ruin it. "One—two—" he began, thinking how careless Eleanor always was, when suddenly he caught sight of the marbles his little sister had given him only yesterday for his birthday. She had saved every cent for weeks and had gone without her favorite red-and-white peppermint sticks to buy those lovely, clear agates, and now he was angry with her. "Three—four—" How dear and sweet Eleanor always was, and how much she loved Billy. There she stood, with tears in her eyes, looking at the Indian suit, and it had only a very little water on it after all. That time Billy never got to ten, for he put his arms around his sister and said, "Never mind, Eleanor. The suit isn't hurt at all. See! It will soon be dry."

And that is the way things happened all day while Billy counted ten. Never once did the "awful temper" get ahead of him, and when he was tucked into bed that night he whispered to his mamma that it had been a very happy day.—Hilda Richmond, in S. S. Times.

ship of his books and periodicals, and the fellowship of his kindred and friends. He was never absent from the sanctuary except when ill, and his presence was a benediction to pastor and congregation; his closing prayers eloquent with fervor, adoration and praise; oftentimes the people said, "It was better to hear him pray than the other preach." He never refused a call to declare the word, and the people were uplifted and strengthened when listening to his ripened, spiritual messages. He preached in the Holy Ghost.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Truly it was so with Brother Ellis. He was mellow and ripe for his translation. There was no special ailment, just a dissolving of the tabernacle of clay—"The time of his departure was at hand." He knew it and talked joyfully of it. He said one day, "You brethren will have to give me up, pretty soon," and as we talked of his going he rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory. And it was invariably the case when he spoke of his departure. It seemed almost wrong to weep; and yet when I looked upon the massive form growing daily weaker and knew the blessed spirit was brushing the dew on Jordan's bank, I could but exclaim, "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof."

His passing was triumphant. "He was sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in the Lord Jesus Christ," and there was laid up for him "a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, gave to him that day."

On Sunday afternoon, May 22, his funeral was held from the East End Church, conducted by the writer and Brothers W. H. LaPrade, C. M. Chapman, J. A. Wells and I. L. Peebles, pastors of the Meridian churches, and the body was laid to rest in the beautiful Rose Hill cemetery.

A GREAT DAY AT MANSFIELD COLLEGE.

Saturday, March 4, 1911, was an important day for Mansfield College. It was an epoch-making day. A banquet was given at the college for the board of trustees and a number of invited guests, the guest of honor being Bishop E. D. Mouzon, of San Antonio, Texas.

At 2:30 o'clock the whole student body, together with the faculty, board of trustees and the guests, marched to the spacious dining room, where the feast was spread. During the festivities a number of vocal selections were given by the college girls, under the splendid leadership of Mrs. Egan, directress of music in the college. Bishop Mouzon responded to the toast, "The Necessity of Girls' Schools," which was delightful and inspiring. Bishop Mouzon is an affable gentleman and a splendid after-dinner speaker.

After acquitting themselves with credit at the sumptuous feast, the members of the board retired to the college library, where the business meeting was held. Besides the members of the board, the following visitors were present: Guest of honor, Bishop E. D. Mouzon; Mr. R. T. Moore, Rev. P. M. Brown, presiding elder of the Alexandria district, Rev. P. O. Lowery, Sunday school missionary, and Rev. A. W. Turner, pastor of the Mansfield Methodist Church.

Bishop Mouzon gave an instructive talk and some timely advice in reference to maintaining the Mansfield Female College, and stressed the importance of the Methodists of Louisiana supporting it with unyielding loyalty. He said he saw no reason why this school should not be made one of the best schools for girls in the South.

The purpose of the meeting of the board of trustees was to employ a commissioner of education for the college. Every member of the board was enthusiastic and of the same mind, and the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

"Be it resolved by the board of trustees of the Mansfield Female College, that a committee of three, the president of the board, Mr. D. G. Petty, Mr. R. T. Moore and Mr. N. W. Williams, be elected to call on Rev. James Thomas and secure, if possible, his services as commissioner of education for Mansfield College, offering him $4,000 per year, an office, traveling expenses and house rent, making such guarantee of the same as shall be suitable to Mr. Thomas."

The trustees and the people of Mansfield are enthusiastic and determined to put the Mansfield Female College on a firm financial foundation, and to make it one of the leading colleges in the South. The step which they have taken proves conclusively that they mean what they say and will carry successfully into effect the plans they have inaugurated.

PREPARING FOR A REVIVAL

At this time when so much is being written throughout the Church concerning a great spiritual awakening, what are you doing to light the revival fire in your own community? As we have before remarked in these columns, a great meeting that stirs and saves the people never comes by accident. It can be brought about only through the joint agency of the Holy Spirit and human effort. Causes are generally hidden, and to discover them and trace them along their lines of operation back to their genesis, is seldom an easy task. But we do not hesitate to affirm that wherever there has been a revival of power and deep religious influence, although they may not have proclaimed the fact, there have been men and women who were profoundly concerned for the state of Zion and who wrestled with the Lord in prayer in the still watches of the night. From the secret closets of humble saints have come the mighty spiritual forces which through the centuries have blessed and uplifted the race.

How is the revival to be promoted? Let the pastors get the burden of the Church's need fully upon their hearts, and then let them seek to lay it also upon the hearts of the Christian people of their charges. Let prayer circles be formed, let the services of the sanctuary be made thoroughly evangelical, and the subject of a spiritual awakening discussed until the saving of souls is recognized as the supreme mission of Christ's representatives in the world. Should personal work be done? By all means. Individual effort to reach men should never cease. House-to-house visitation is one of the most effective methods of approaching and impressing the unsaved. Nor need this be confined to the pastor. Such campaigning for the Master by spiritually minded persons, if tactfully done, is sure to yield gracious results. Should a special series of services be conducted? In most cases undoubtedly this is wise. Nor is it a good idea for pastors to postpone their meetings too long. The time element is to be considered, but it is easy to attach more importance to it than it deserves. We have known ministers to let the whole year slip by waiting for a favorable season to hold protracted services. There will come no period when there are not obstacles in the way. When the "great door and effectual" was opened to Paul at Ephesus, about it were gathered many adversaries.

One word of warning: Do not drift along doing little or nothing, and expect some minister from a distance to come to your charge and conjure up a revival. To pursue such a course will be to fail in nine cases out of ten. God's usual method of saving the people of a community is through the church of that community. If the visiting brother comes and succeeds, it will be because he manages to enlist the Christian people of the locality. And let the workers in no field become discouraged. The Divine ear is still open, and the arm of Jehovah is as mighty to save as in any preceding age. Where the disciples earnestly pray and faithfully labor, they will not wait long for the "time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

THE PROJECTED MEMPHIS HOSPITAL.

We are much pleased by the encouraging news which has reached us concerning this important enterprise. For three years we served as one of the commissioners who were seeking to get this movement under way, and jointly with others, wrestled with the obstacles tending to delay and defeat it which arose one after another. Because of being so far away, we requested to be excused from further work on the Commission at the last session of the North Mississippi Conference and the brethren kindly granted the exemption. But our interest in the project has not in the least abated. On the contrary, we feel profoundly concerned for its success and are delighted to know that an agent is soon to be put in the field and that from every point of view the outlook for the undertaking is highly gratifying.

Our Church has delayed far too long her entrance into this important and necessary field of philanthropy. The Methodist Episcopal Church has a number of such institutions in the leading cities of the country; the Presbyterians also have several and are busily engaged in promoting the establishment of others, and the Baptists likewise have caught a vision of the need for work of this character and are bestirring themselves to plant and consummate such enterprises in strategic centers. But, though our denomination has used this arm of service with great effectiveness in its missionary operations in other lands, it has been slow to bring it into requisition in the home field. It is true that the primary and highest work of the Church is to minister to the spiritual man; but healing the stricken body opens the door of opportunity for the nobler task of healing the sin-sick soul. This was the Master's method, and we may well follow his great example. There is no better time to sow the seeds of gospel truth in unregenerate hearts than when they have been softened and mellowed by the hand of affliction. If we would accomplish the utmost possible for God and humanity, we must make use of every conceivable avenue of approach to men that we may reach and save them.

At present we have in operation in the United States the Wesley Hospital in Atlanta, Ga., and there are two others which will likely be opened in the near future—the Barnes Hospital of St. Louis, which is to have a site and buildings worth approximately a million dollars and an endowment of an equal amount, and the Galloway Hospital of Nashville, Tenn., for which a subscription of $52,000 has been raised. But these are but a beginning. We need many others to meet the requirements of our large and widely scattered membership. Instances are on record where Methodist ministers or members of their families have lain ill in the charity wards of Roman Catholic institutions, because in their poverty no other recourse was left them. Such occurrences are a shame and reproach to a denomination of the numerical strength and wealth of ours. It is high time we were making ready to care for our own people in seasons of distress and calamity.

It scarcely needs to be said that Memphis is an ideal place to plant such an institution. It is a Protestant city of 150,000 people and growing rapidly. In it Methodism is the leading denomination and remarkably strong. The railroad facilities are exceptionally good, and it is readily accessible from every quarter. The medical skill available there is probably equal to any in the South. The people in the territory co-operating in the movement are closely allied with the municipality both commercially and socially. And the four Conferences committed to the project, having a membership of 200,000, are abundantly able to carry it forward to completion. The fact that among those leading in the enterprise are a number of the finest business men to be found anywhere should also awaken a feeling of confidence and optimism. The task could not possibly be entrusted to wiser and safer hands. We, therefore, earnestly hope that the Methodists of Mississippi will heartily support this movement, and that when June 1, which has been named as "Hospital Day" arrives, every pastor from the Tennessee line to the Mexican Gulf will make a strong appeal to his people in behalf of this cause. We have before us no more important work than this, and none which will tend to give greater strength to our Church in the territory concerned in the years to come. Let us not falter in the face of such an opportunity, but seize it and write a chapter in the history of our denomination that will reflect credit upon us throughout all the future.

SCRIPTURE IN THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

We are not an admirer of Congressman Macon, of Arkansas, though he recently proclaimed himself a Methodist upon the floor of the House, a recommendation which ordinarily carries considerable weight with us. His style of oratory resembles rather too closely that of another notorious son of Arkansas in the other branch of the national legislature who bears an illustrious name, but is illustrious in nothing else. But while we entertain no admiration for Mr. Macon, we note that his service in Congress has aided in the circulation of Holy Scripture. The way in which it has done this is explained in the following statement which we quote from the New York Weekly Witness:

"One comes across some strange things in the Congressional Record. Among the amusing incidents in recent numbers is the inclusion of three chapters of the Bible—the 19th and 26th of Exodus and the 2d of Luke. These were incorporated in the Record at the request of Mr. Bennet, of New York, for fear somebody might think that no one in the House of Representatives knew that the Song of the Angel, "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men," was not made at Mount Sinai, for it was at Mount Sinai that the member for Arkansas, Mr. Macon, had referred to it as being sung in his speech against the recognition of Commander Peary."

DEATH OF MRS. J. P. HANEY.

The distressing news has just come to the Advocate of the death of Mrs. J. P. Haney, wife of Rev. J. P. Haney, of the Louisiana Conference, at Clinton, La., on March 11. Sister Haney was a most excellent woman, filling in every way the responsible position of an itinerant Methodist preacher's wife. Both in the home and the larger life of the community in which she lived, she measured up to the highest standard of Christian womanhood. We learn with great regret that Brother Haney has been confined to his bed for several weeks. Let prayer be made for this home into which such great sorrow has come.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Miss Mollie Higginbotham, of Mer Rouge, La., is one of the Advocate's best friends. We are greatly indebted to her for a recent list of 21 subscribers.

The presiding elder, Dr. J. M. Henry, announces that the New Orleans District Conference will convene at the Carrollton Avenue Church, Tuesday evening, March 28, at 7:30 p. m.

A large list of subscribers just received from Rev. T. M. Bradley, Rosedale, Miss., places his charge on the "Honor Roll," and brings us under many obligations to this energetic pastor and his good people.

Rev. G. H. Galloway, Missionary Conference Secretary for the Mississippi Conference, requests us to say that he is ready to help the brethren in their missionary campaigns. His address is 1802 N. State St., Jackson, Miss.

We extend our sincere sympathy to Rev. and Mrs. A. A. Bernard in the loss of their little girl by diphtheria a short time since. In such time of trial the faith of the Christian is triumphantly vindicated. Brother Bernard is the efficient pastor of our Church at Covington, La.

"Everything is moving along very nicely," writes Rev. J. B. Randolph, our pastor at Como, Miss. This is not intended as a news note, for it can be no news to those who know Brother Randolph and the excellent people of that delightful little city. We heartily thank him for a list of 25 subscribers to the Advocate.

Rev. H. B. Vandenburg requests us to say that his postoffice address is Eunice, La. The name of his charge is Church Point. In Brother Vandenburg's interesting account of his work in a recent number of the Advocate the name of his postoffice instead of the name of his charge appeared in the title. We beg pardon for any confusion that may have resulted.

Rev. J. L. Nabors, of Starkville, Miss., recently sent us a good list of subscribers, with a promise to send more soon, for which he has our hearty thanks. Substantial progress is being made in his work.

Rev. L. Carley, of New Augusta, Miss., has sent us some subscribers, for which he has our thanks. Brother Carley is beginning his second year on his present charge, where he has rendered splendid service.

Brother N. Crocker, of Tremont, La., writes that the Advocate has been a welcome visitor to his home for 35 years. The Advocate treasures these old friends, and prays the blessings of heaven upon them.

We regret to learn that a siege of measles in his family has kept Rev. W. E. Akin, of the Bonita charge, Louisiana Conference, closely at home during the past month. We thank him for his promise to begin an active campaign for the Advocate soon.

The Woman's Board of City Missions, of New Orleans, will hold its Annual Meeting at First Church, on Wednesday, March 22, beginning at 11 o'clock a. m. Luncheon will be served at the church and the meeting will continue throughout the afternoon.

The Advocate prospers through the work of the women, as does every other department of the Church. Some of our largest lists of subscribers have been sent in by these devout workers. We thank Mrs. R. M. Theriot, of Kosciusko, Miss., for her recent interest in our behalf which resulted in 11 subscribers.

The Jackson District Conference will meet at Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., April 26-28. We thank the aggressive presiding elder of the district, Rev. J. R. Jones, for a cordial invitation to be present. We rejoice to hear that the Lord's cause prospers in that field.

Rev. L. E. Crooks, of the Downsville charge, Louisiana Conference, is a good friend of the Advocate. We thank him for a recent club of subscribers. He states that he is doing all he can for the paper. Our brethren bring us under many obligations by their interest in our work.

Rev. J. T. Leggett, the capable presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, takes occasion to exhort for the Advocate in his rounds. We thank him for his interest in the Conference organ and for his kind words concerning the paper. We are glad to learn that the work is prospering on the district.

Rev. J. W. Booth, the popular pastor of Algiers Methodist, was at the Advocate office Monday to turn over an offering which his congregation had made Sunday night for the famine sufferers in China. The editor will take great pleasure in forwarding the amount, $5.08, to the proper authorities.

Rev. J. D. Harper sends us from Winnfield, La., a check for $14 to be applied to the famine sufferers of China. We are glad to note the interest that is being taken by our people in relieving that stricken region, and will gladly see that any funds sent to us for that purpose, reach the proper authorities.

Rev. R. O. Wier, of Donaldsonville, La., under date of March 13, writes as follows: "At our last Conference I pledged to raise $25 for Mansfield College. Yesterday I took the collection at Plattenville and raised $26." Excellent! Let all the brethren remember their pledges and do likewise.

Rev. A. G. Hall, of Crenshaw, Miss., writes that he is trying to interest his people in the church paper, and in proof of his words, sends us a list of subscribers, for which we thank him. One of his churches, Mastodon, is now on the "Honor Roll," and he hopes soon to have the entire charge so.

Rev. J. F. Owen, of the Poplar Creek charge, North Mississippi Conference, is happy in the work. He writes that the first quarterly conference was the best in the history of the charge. The pastor's salary has been increased, and the outlook is bright. We thank Brother Owen for a fine list of subscribers.

First Church, Water Valley, Miss., is moving steadily forward under the capable leadership of Rev. J. H. Mitchell. The Sunday school has reached a high state of efficiency. A payment of $500 has just been made on the church debt, and it is hoped to pay the entire debt this fall. We congratulate all concerned.

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, in sending us a fine list of subscribers, for which we thank him, requests us to state that his postoffice address is now Amory, Miss., instead of Smithville, as heretofore. The change is due to the fact that the parsonage committee has located the parsonage at Amory, where it is hoped to build soon.

Dr. Howard Key, a son of Bishop J. S. Key, and a well known minister, was killed in a runaway accident at Columbus, Ga., on March 13, and his wife was seriously injured. This sad news will cause great sorrow throughout a wide circle of friends and acquaintances of the deceased.

From Rev. W. A. Perry, Vaughan, Miss., we learn that the outlook on his charge for a revival is most hopeful. Congregations are good, and the interest in the work of the Church is growing. The church buildings at Dover, and at Fletcher's Chapel, have recently been repaired. We thank Brother Perry for his continued efforts in behalf of the Advocate.

Coahoma charge, North Mississippi Conference is another addition to our "Honor Roll" this week. Rev. H. M. Young, the devoted pastor, recently sent us a list of 14 subscribers from that work. He says he serves a heroic band of people who are loyal to their pastor, and that the outlook for the year is splendid. We rejoice with him over this happy situation.

Rev. W. L. Blackwell, of Hermanville, Miss., in enclosing a list of subscribers, writes as follows: "We are moving along fairly well on our work; congregations are large and attentive on services of the Sabbath. Our first quarterly conference will be held at Hermanville on March 25-26, instead of March 18-19, as previously announced. This by agreement of the presiding elder and all concerned."

Rev. J. E. Sampley, in sending us another list of subscribers recently, says the Harrison charge is now within two of the "Honor Roll," and he has several new subscribers promised. We trust soon to be able to add this work to the list of those whose every official takes the Conference organ. Brother Sampley has been most diligent in his efforts to extend the circulation of the Advocate, and he has our sincere thanks.

Brother M. G. Dubard, of Bew Springs, Miss., is another of the old friends of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. He began taking the paper in 1872, when he established a home for himself, and has been receiving it regularly ever since. He says it is an established feature of his home. We thank him for his kind words concerning the present editor, and pray that sustaining grace may be given him as he passes through heavy sorrow.

We have received the program of the Local Preachers' Association of the Oxford District, North Mississippi Conference, which will hold its meeting at Bethlehem Church, on the Coffeerville charge, March 25-26. The subjects for discussion are all important ones and we believe good will come from their study. We trust the occasion will be both profitable and interesting. Rev. D. M. Gean is president of the Association and Rev. J. M. Wyatt, secretary.

Rev. Robt. Selby, the popular and accomplished pastor of our church at Moss Point, Miss., was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office on Monday. He stated that the program for the Seashore Divinity School had been completed. Bishops Hoss, Candler and Mouzon will each spend three days at the School, and other specialists will have charge of the various departments. The outlook for the School is most encouraging. Methodism has no more diligent worker than Brother Selby.

Rev. E. Blizard, of the Red Banks charge, North Mississippi Conference, states that all his officials now take the Advocate, and we place him on the "Honor Roll." The growth of the "Honor Roll" is an encouraging feature of the work to us, not only because it means increased circulation for the Advocate, but because it means a larger interest and a more intelligent interest in the work of the Church on the part of the officials. We believe great good will result from this movement.

In a personal note from the presiding elder, Rev. W. B. Jones, we learn that the outlook on the Seashore District is most hopeful. A recent meeting at Bond, in which the pastor, Rev. W. J. Ferguson was assisted by the Conference evangelist, Rev. D. E. Kelley, resulted in 43 accessions to the church, and Rev. E. L. Whiddon, of Escatawpa, has received about 20 members on his charge. The District Conference will meet at Long Beach, May 9-12. We thank Brother Jones for an invitation to be present.

In addition to those mentioned elsewhere, the following have sent us subscribers recently, to whom we tender our sincere thanks: Rev. L. A. McKeown, Shaw, Miss.; Rev. W. J. Dawson, Morton, Miss.; Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., Montrose, Miss.; Rev. E. C. Sullivan, Ebenezer, Miss.; Rev. M. R. Jones, McDonald, Miss.; Rev. G. W. Gordon, Vaiden, Miss.; Rev. T. J. Durrett, Buena Vista, Miss.; Rev. J. W. Dorman, Itta Bena, Miss.; Rev. Hal Spragins, Greenwood, Miss.; Rev. J. T. Griffin, Shelby, Miss.; Rev. J. J. Garner, Lula, Miss.; Rev. A. S. Byrd, Satartia, Miss.; Rev. S. L. Pope, Senatobia, Miss.; Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, Eunice, La.; Rev. Thos. L. Porter, Sweetman, Miss.

A CHEERFUL RELIGION.

True Christianity makes its spiritual subjects cheerful. False religions never make their subjects cheerful. The pagan religions have always kept their devotees in a gloomy and unsatisfied condition. It is the Christian religion, having place and power in the believer's heart, that makes him happy and hopeful, and, therefore, cheerful. But there are professed Christians who do not fairly represent true religion. The most of the time they look demurely; there is an appearance of sadness; they seem to be in a desolate state of mind. Here is an incident which carries a lesson of much significance: "During a series of meetings, in which the pressure upon the unsaved was very strong by reason of the death penalty being constantly held over them, there seemed to creep over the entire work a feeling of gloom and depression. The work acers to health of the present day.

was ably handled and much good was done; whether more might have been accomplished with other methods is an open question. At any rate, an incident in the meetings is worth recording. Two girls, of about twelve and fourteen, met each other in the hall of the building; one was entering the audience-room, the other was quietly walking out. 'Are you going in there?' was the question asked by the outgoing girl. 'Certainly,' was the response. 'Why not?' 'I shall not go in there again,' said the girl, as she moved away. 'They are so sad in there.'

The writer of this incident says: "On examination it was discovered that no young people were won to Christ in that meeting; no children were gathered in. Usually the results are mainly in the gathering of young people." Too much gloom appeared in those meetings, and it was not a recommendation of the Christian religion. There ought to be deep seriousness in meetings for conversions. A measure of solemnity should pervade them; but there ought to be a marked degree of manifest cheerfulness. Christians, in such meetings, should exhibit the joy of salvation. No frivolity should be indulged in; but a holy gladness is befitting, not only at such times, but at all times. Paul urged Christians to always be in a state and habit of rejoicing. By such means, the true life is attractive.

SPECIAL TELEGRAMS.

Rev. P. D. Hardin appointed Financial Agent of Whitworth.

A special dispatch to the Advocate, dated Brookhaven, Miss., March 13, says:

"Bishop Mouzon appointed Rev. Paul D. Hardin Financial Agent of Whitworth, with $10,000 from Brookhaven and $10,000 from the Lampton Bros. The future is bright. WILLIAM P. HOOVER was born Oct. 24, 1851, and died at his home near Salem, Benton County, Nov. 16, 1910. Brother Hoover professed religion and joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Rev. J. J. Brooks in 1891. Brother Hoover and his sainted wife reared a large family of worthy children, who are trying to follow a father and mother's example. Brother Hoover was an unpretentious man; it could be safely said of him that what he was, he was. He was gentle in his nature as a lamb, but as courageous in his convictions as any man. He was his pastor for three years and can unhesitatingly say I never saw a more faithful man. He always seemed to feel the duty he owed to God and his Church were the first duties of his life. These duties he discharged without a murmur or a complaint. I loved him for the purity of his life and the nobility of his purpose. Brother Hoover lived his religion each day at home, at church and everywhere he went. Another trait of character was his: he was the very soul of honor and integrity. He had no patience with a fraud. I loved him as I have loved few people in life. I feel sad to think I shall see his face no more on earth, but I shall know where to find him. He was fully ready when his summons came. May heaven's blessing rest upon his dear wife and good children!

W. R. WILLIAMS,
His Former Pastor.

CARRIE WATKINS HOSKINS LENOIR, wife of J. L. Lenoir, Sr., died at her home in Amite, La., Jan. 16, 1911. She was born in Lowndes County, Miss., Oct. 26, 1842. When only 7 years of age her father and mother were both taken from her within an hour's time. Carrie was reared by Mrs. Sterling L. Paine, wife of Dr. S. L. Paine, who was a brother to Bishop Robert Paine. The religious influence thrown about her by this saintly woman was so great that at the age of 8, at Paine's Chapel, a country church on the bishop's farm, she gave her heart to God. At the close of the Civil war, on April 20, 1865, she was married to J. L. Lenoir. To this union five sons and one daughter were born. Her noble character and saintly life were great influences to mould the family life, and while some were wayward for a time, her fidelity to God and exemplary conduct at last brought them all to know Christ as their personal Savior. Several years were spent in Marlin, Tex., where she organized the first Woman's Christian Temperance Union in the town, and of which she was president for several years. She loved God, her Church and her neighbor. She was loved by all who knew her. No unkind words were heard to fall from her lips and her whole life was spent with the thought that she was serving the King of kings. The last time her pastor was with her and read the Scriptures and prayed with her, she said, "O! how sweet to trust in those promises and know all is well." She leaves a husband, five sons and a number of grandchildren to mourn her loss. May God's richest blessings rest upon those so sorely grieved and lead them at last to that union that will never be broken!

H. W. BOWMAN,
Her Pastor.

CAPTAIN J. J. HICKS was born in Hardeman County, Tenn., Feb. 16, 1831, and died at his home in Benton County, Miss., Nov. 8, 1910. When he was quite small his father died, after which his mother married Mr. Thomas Elliott, and they moved with the family to Tippah County, Miss. Here young Hicks was brought up on a farm. Brother Hicks derived his education from the country schools of his day. But during the time he developed a strong, honest character. When the war broke out, in 1861, he enlisted as a private soldier, but his ability was so marked that he was soon promoted to the rank of captain, which place he held till the close of the great struggle. The late John M. Stone, who was his colonel, said of him that he was the best captain of his army. Brother Hicks first joined the Presbyterian Church in 1855, but in 1888 he united with the M. E. Church, South, where he remained till death. He was married to Miss Bettie Autry in 1869, who went to her reward some two or three years previous to his death. Brother Hicks was elected sheriff of his county in 1873, which office he filled with honor to himself and credit to his county. In 1893 he was elected treasurer of his county, which office he filled till age and infirmity rendered him no longer able to discharge the duties of an officer. He retired and spent the evening of his life as a private citizen. Brother Hicks was the soul of honor; his word was his bond to all that knew him. His judgment was always sound; his neighbors throughout the country all loved him because of the purity of his life. He has gone; we shall miss him, but the world was made better by his life.

W. R. WILLIAMS,
His Former Pastor.

W. L. WEEMS, the son of J. W. and Mary Weems, was born Sept. 24, 1854, and died at his home in Shubuta, Miss., Jan. 15, 1911, aged 56 years, 3 months and 22 days. On the third of December, 1879, he was joined in marriage to Miss Sallie F. Stovall, eldest daughter of Judge C. A. and Mrs. Mary E. Stovall, who with three sons, Charles S., William L., Jr., and John W., and four daughters, Misses Mamie, Sadie, Ethel and Irma, survive and mourn, with a host of relatives and friends, his going away. The sorrow caused by his death was as extensive as was the beautiful and well-rounded character he had developed. The great multitude that attended his funeral and that followed him to the silent city of his restful sleep attested the universal esteem in which he was held. With a poised and grounded faith in God, he harnessed present acts to the hopes of a future that can only come to those who recognize and act upon the fact of a universal brotherhood; and acting upon this principle he kept before him as first thought "The kingdom of God and his righteousness." That the Church and the community must miss him in the future was the whispered thought on every lip that spoke above the silent sorrow of a tear. In the circle of his home the loss and the sorrow will be felt and grow in intensity as the silence of the years passes over his hushed lips. It was there that he was enthroned in his kingdom and was idolized as husband and as father. May the influence of his life, like some great stream flowing into the future, ever deepening and widening, keep those whom he loved in that lofty and pure integrity that was the inspiration of his effort and the crowning glory of his achievements! And now we must say farewell, but when the short night of sleep and rest is past we shall see him again in "Our Father's" home above.

J. M. WEEMS.

Tidings from the Field

Wilson, La.:

The good work continues. We had more accessions to the church last night. The citizens of Wilsen have organized themselves into a Law and Order League, 67 strong, and have riddled the town of all blind tigers. Several prisoners are in jail as a result of a raid made last Friday. All forms of gambling are being stopped. We now have a clean town, and we are a happy people.—F. N. Sweeney, P. C.

March 6, 1911.

Arkabutia, Miss.:

We are moving along nicely this year. While we have discouragements, we have much to encourage us. Our people are not enjoying the greatest prosperity because of two very short crops. But they are not going to let the pastor suffer. Our congregations are small like they are on many country charges, but we have many loyal people. We are hoping and praying for a great and glorious year. If I could see a great revival and see this people awakened to an appreciation of all of the interests of the Church I would be the happiest man in the North Mississippi Conference.—A. F. Moore, P. C.

Chunkey Circuit:

I have just held the second quarterly conference for the Chunkey Circuit, where I found our Brother, C. C. Griffin, the pastor, in high favor with his people. There has been a marked improvement in the attendance on the church services at Chunkey and Meehan, and the brethren at Meehan claim they have the best Sunday school they have ever had. Although Brother Griffin found his circuit to consist of five churches with appointments so planned as to require two sermons every Sunday, he has organized a new congregation, has an occasional appointment at a little sawmill town, and has organized a mission Sunday school. In appreciation of Brother Griffin's faithful work, the brethren have advanced his assessment, and have made a good beginning in the payment of the salary.—T. J. O'Neil, P. E.

Bon Ami, La.:

The work at Bon Ami and Carson has opened up nicely for the present conference year. Our predecessor, Brother Rousseaux, wrought well; his deft hand is seen in some of the substantial and valuable pieces of furniture he so kindly donated to the parsonage. The charge is composed of two mill towns, and as the population to a great extent is transient, it makes the work somewhat difficult. However, I am glad to say that we have at both places some elect people who are willing to do anything they can for the Lord's cause. The Carson congregation have purchased a stereopticon outfit, and it is their purpose to have illustrated lectures and thus help to interest the people. The W. H. M. Society at Bon Ami has made provision to employ a deaconess to assist the pastor in his work. With these means of progress, we expect by God's help to do some effective work. The stewards have made a liberal assessment for the preacher, and the finances are forthcoming. Congregations have increased in number and still show improvement. The good ladies at Bon Ami kindly remembered the parsonage folk with a copious shower of necessities, and when the large washbasket was unloaded there was found something for the preacher, wife and three little ones and also things to make the home comfortable and pleasant. Our presiding elder, Brother Singleton, spent a few days with us and left a good impression. I heartily believe that his work will prove a blessing to the Shreveport District. More anon.—W. D. Kleinschmidt, P. C.

Jena, La.:

We have been kindly received by the people of the Jena charge. We have been very much hindered in the way of pastoral work by sickness. I have had quite a siege of la grippe and still have it, but we are trusting God for restoration to health. I am glad to say that our church is very well organized. Our Methodist people, and my predecessor, Brother Purcell, worked very hard last year, and as a result of their labors, we have a nice church edifice, which cost $3,500. We also have a new parsonage, though it is not finished. But with a loyal and liberal congregation and some help from the Conference Board, we hope to complete it in the near future and have everything comfortable and pleasant. Our first quarterly conference was held a few days ago. Our much beloved presiding elder, Brother P. M. Brown, was with us, and was careful in looking after all the interests of the Church. He also gave us three very helpful sermons. All things considered, the outlook is encouraging, and we are expecting a good year, for God is with us.—E. L. Cargill, P. C.

St. Helena Charge, Greensburg, La.:

We arrived on the St. Helena circuit in the last days of December and just before the severe cold spell we had in January. We were royally received by the good people of Greensburg and made to feel "at home." Many delicacies had found their way to the parsonage larder and many have arrived since. We felt at once that we were among a Methodist preacher's friends. Hence our entrance upon our work was made comparatively easy. Our predecessors had wrought well and the good people were much attached to them. We have six churches on the charge, having been given the Pine Ridge Church from the Mt. Hermon work. At that place we have all the necessary funds on hand to finish the new building—more than one hundred dollars. At our last appointment at Center we found a brand new organ installed. Sunday schools have been organized at two of the churches; two were already in operation. We have an excellent Epworth League at Greensburg; also a splendid Ladies' Aid Society. This latter institution has been one of the pastor's strong arms in this church for a long time, and has accomplished much for the Master's cause. Our first quarterly meeting will be held in a few days. Everything points to a satisfactory report along all lines. We were the recipients a few days since of a most generous pounding at the hands of the good people of Greensburg, led by the Ladies' Aid. Some pastor wrote about the usual pounding—ours was unusual. All things considered, we have fine prospects for "a good year" in every sense of the word.—J. B. Fulton, P. C.

Phillips Brooks says that it is well to think of no blessing as being really ours until we have passed it along to some one else. There is nothing which we can really enjoy for any length of time without sharing it with others.

Epworth League

I believe that human loving is a lesson taught above,
I believe the cup of blessing is the willing cup of love;
Loving, when the heart is willing, is the sweetest drop of bliss;
Loving on—through pain and evil—is diviner still than this.

—Vení McDonald Porges.

FAITH NECESSARY TO SUCCESS.

To be a true Epworth Leaguer requires great faith in God, and in the ultimate triumph of right. We must have this unwavering confidence and trust to enable us to rightly carry God's message of comfort and hope to others. When we speak of faith, we do not mean a hard and difficult task, but a very common and easy thing, for without faith we could not carry on the ordinary affairs of our daily lives. We all have faith in one another; why not have faith in God? We can accomplish nothing as a League unless we believe in the love and mercy and truth and goodness of God, and that he will fulfill every promise made to the children of men.

If our League ever becomes greater in the future, it will be because of its loyal faith and earnest work of today. Even some of our young people become morbid and gloomy at times, and seem to think that the world is all going to the bad, and that there is no good anywhere. "Stop! Look! Listen!" And you will know that there is much good all around you, and that "our God is marching on" to ultimate victory.

Let all our young people be as ready to publish abroad the good and noble and generous deeds as the newspapers are to publish crime and scandal, and we shall prove a real blessing to humanity.

"Grant us, O God, in love to thee,
Clear eyes to measure things below,
Faith the invisible to see,
And wisdom thee in all to know."
—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

THE LEAGUE TRINITY.

Here is a combination which forms a solid foundation for every League. For the sake of convenience we may call it our League Trinity, since one is imperfect without the other—Organization, Consecration, Evangelization.

Organization.

Organization is first in order, so that we may be "established in the faith," and by our combined efforts go forth to conquer "all for Christ." "Through wisdom is a house builded; and by understanding it is established." System and unity are essential also in order to have power. A well-organized body of Leaguers, each filling the place for which he is best adapted, is in little danger of error if all strive to become #### Consecrated.

First, receive Christ with all the heart, and then do his will. Hezekiah commanded that the people first consecrate themselves unto the Lord and then come, bringing sacrifices and thank-offerings. David inquired: "Who, then, is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" The League consecrated in one body, their minds, like that of the apostle, focused on one thing, will be a mighty power for #### Evangelization.

A work for the saving of every nation; a work for which every Leaguer should be willing to make some sacrifice, so that sinners may turn from the error of their ways. Look well to the Trinity in your chapter, so that you will be well equipped for the work of evangelization at home and abroad.—Maud B. Little, in the Epworth Era.

CAMPTI, LA.

I will write a few lines concerning our work on the Campti circuit. This is my second year on this charge, though I have served one church which is on the work for three years. This is what you might call a new charge—not new churches, but a new grouping of them. I am encouraged in regard to my work. The prospects, both present and future, seem much better than last year. Our Sunday school interests are in advance of last year and all the work of the church is moving on smoother than previously. The Campti Church has in it some excellent women who are very spiritual, and know how to pray and work for the Master. The Sunday school at Campti is under the management of Sister Bishop who is a fine Christian woman and an excellent scholar—she knows how to run a Sunday school. Dr. Hill came down from Shreveport and preached for us on the last first Sunday. It was indeed quite a treat to have him with us. It made quite an impression on our people, and we would be glad to have him again. In reference to our paper, I am going to make an earnest effort to place it in every Methodist home on my work, and do what I can to increase the circulation. I close by asking all the Advocate readers to pray that we may have a great spiritual year.—C. B. Powell, P. C.

MORMONISM.

Perhaps the most startling exposure of Mormonism in recent years is that which is made in Everybody's Magazine by the Hon. Frank J. Cannon, formerly United States Senator from Utah, and himself a Mormon, though strongly opposed to certain Mormon practices and tendencies. Mr. Cannon unhesitatingly declares that the anti-polygamy promises of the leaders
